SECOND REPORT of the INSPECTORS of the HOME DISTRICT.

PART I.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT.

I.
HOME DISTRICT.
The Silent System.

MY LORD, Raymond Buildings, April 7th, 1837.

IN preparing our Second Annual Report, which we have now the honour of presenting to your Lordship, we have thought it our duty, before proceeding to report upon the prisons connected with our own District, to submit to your notice our observations upon those particular subjects to which your Lordship has been pleased to direct our special attention.

In pursuance of this arrangement, we beg leave, in the first place, to lay before your Lordship our observations upon that system of prison discipline which is denominated "The Silent System." In the course of our inspections and inquiries, during the last year, we have had numerous opportunities of observing that System in operation under all the various circumstances which have the effect of obstructing or of facilitating its action, and which, therefore, have afforded us the means of making that full and complete investigation of the subject which your Lordship requires at our hands; and, as the advocates of this System maintain that it successfully disputes the claim to preference with "The Separate System," we deem it our duty to submit to your Lordship such facts and inferences as have led us to an opposite opinion. We are prepared to show that the Silent System, originating in a deep conviction of the great and manifold evils of gaol association, and designed to guard against those mischievous consequences which attach to it, is cumbrous and intricate in its construction, inadequate to the purposes which it contemplates, and dependent, for its successful working, upon circumstances which can neither be universally secured nor relied upon; that, besides its good qualities, it has others which are pernicious or useless; and that, while its excellences are contingent and accidental, its defects are necessary and inherent.

In expressing ourselves thus strongly, we beg that we may not be understood as designing to impeach the motives of those who advocate this System. We believe that they are influenced by an anxious desire to save the Criminal from the alarming evils of gaol contamination; and that, in compassing this most desirable and necessary end, they have been led to the adoption of their plan by benevolent motives. Nevertheless, we feel satisfied that, even to them, we shall be able to impart that conviction of its unfitness, which attentive observation and reflection have produced in our own minds; and we moreover persuade ourselves that, upon a closer examination of the system, they will be led, by those motives of humanity which dictated its adoption, to repudiate it, as inflicting upon the prisoner much severe and needless punishment; namely, the interdiction of intercourse under circumstances which render the inhibition peculiarly oppressive, and which arm the temptations to violate it with more than usual force.

We believe that the strong expressions in which witnesses who have been examined by Parliamentary Committees have enounced or recorded their admiration of the merits of the Silent System are imputable to a view of the question which does not necessarily involve the pre-eminence of that System, or a solid conviction of its intrinsic excellence;—that view we conceive to resolve itself into a comparison of the Silent System with the present most mischievous plan of gaol association. No well-regulated mind, indeed, could contemplate the dreadful evils which attach to this last-mentioned plan, without feeling instinctively impelled to embrace any measure by which such evils might be avoided; and we are confident that it is owing to such a commendable feeling as this, that the advocates of the Silent System have permitted themselves to be hurried, with rather too great precipitation, into the adoption of a plan which, though upon a superficial view it may appear to possess many advantages, is pregnant with evils of which we are certain that its advocates are either unconscious, or of which they have not formed an adequate conception. Under these circumstances we have felt ourselves bound, no less by our unfeigned respect for the motives of those who maintain the superiority of the Silent System, than by our sense of the importance of the interests involved in the subject, to examine it carefully and impartially, in all its bearings, and in every point of view; to scrutinize minutely the whole of its complicated machinery; to witness its operation, and to register faithfully its effects. All this, my Lord, we have done heedfully and repeatedly, and under such circumstances as were calculated to afford us the clearest and most complete insight into the nature of the subject. We feel persuaded, therefore, that your Lordship will do us the justice to believe that we do not approach the discussion of this question without great and careful consideration; that we have impartially weighed its merits, as well as its defects; and that the conclusion at which we have arrived is based upon evidence at once extensive and incontrovertible.

We say, in the first place, then, that so far as the prevention of intercourse is concerned, the Silent System is not efficacious. If it be granted that communication may be carried on by signs, or in a subdued tone of voice, then it is in evidence that this System does not and cannot prevent such intercourse. The difficulty of enforcing the prohibition of intercommunication under this System is felt and acknowledged by some of its warmest advocates. The objection which this fact involves appears to us to be fatal to the whole measure; for let us consider for a moment the effect which this abortive attempt at securing a main object of the System must necessarily have both upon the prisoners and upon the numerous Monitors and Wardsmen employed to enforce it. Upon the former, the persuasion of the obvious fact, that communication cannot be prevented, will operate most prejudicially; it will act at once as a constant spur and a premium to their ingenuity, which will have abundant scope to exercise itself amidst the multiplied and perplexing engagements of the Monitors. We ought to bear in mind, likewise, the adroitness and tact which the human mind and frame gradually, but surely, acquire by practice, when the man is impelled by necessity, or by strong inclination; both of which are known to enable the agent to accomplish purposes which, to himself as well as to others, had appeared to be utterly unattainable The truth of this is demonstrated by the following among other remarkable facts, that in the prison of Coldbath Fields, in which the Silent System is believed to be brought to the greatest degree of perfection, under the management of a highly intelligent and able Governor, who has at his command every possible advantage for working the system, there were in the year 1836 no less than 5,138 punishments "for talking and swearing."

Now, my Lord, if, under circumstances so favourable to the silent system,—in prisons upon which the public eye is more especially fixed, which are perpetually visited by a vigilant Committee of Justices, are under the care of excellent keepers, are superintended by active and trustworthy officers, assisted by monitors and wardsmen who are selected from the most active and intelligent class of prisoners in the whole kingdom,—we say, if, under such favourable circumstances as these, the Silent System fails to the extent indicated by the circumstances and by the number of punishments which we have stated, what must be the working of the plan in other prisons, where such advantages are not only not to be had in combination, but where, as will sometimes happen, not one single advantage of the kind can be calculated upon or secured?

It is impossible to convey to your Lordship an adequate idea of the successful dexterity in fraud and artifice in which this System has been the means of training the prisoners; and if once it were to become fixed and general by authority, we do not hesitate to say that we defy the most vigilant and zealous superintendence to defeat the contrivances which the prisoners would employ to baffle it. Now, while the prisoner's mind is thus either occupied with attempts to elude the vigilance of his monitor (attempts which, from the very nature of the case, must often prove successful), or amused by watching and secretly applauding the attempts of others, can it be believed that, under such circumstances, his mind can receive any salutary impression of the penal nature of his condition, or have inclination or opportunity for self-examination or reflection?

I.
HOME DISTRICT.

The Silent System.

But the necessary effect of this System upon the wardsmen and monitors is no less to be deprecated. From the foregoing observations, some notion may be formed of the incessant demand which the nature of his duties imposes upon the watchful vigilance of the monitor; that vigilance he knows is not always effectual; and he must be aware that, in spite of his utmost efforts, the prisoners will be able to elude it. Now is it unlikely that, seeing the impossibility, with all his exertions, of preventing communication, he should at times, from absolute weariness or despair, relax a watchfulness, the most painful stretch of which he sees to be unavailing? And yet it is upon the equable and uninterrupted maintenance of this vigilance, wound up to the highest degree of tension, that the advocates of this System rest their persuasion of its efficacy.

But let us suppose this difficulty on the part of the monitors surmounted, and that every violation of the rules enjoining silence is promptly followed by detection and punishment: it is obvious that this must excite in the minds of the prisoners a feeling of irritation and resentment towards the monitor, which must add materially to the difficulties of his arduous duty. We have repeatedly found that, under this System, prisoners eagerly seek occasion to bring accusations against the monitors; and that the adjudication of these charges is productive of much trouble and consumption of time to the Governor, who, in the case of Coldbath Fields, has every morning, on an average, no less than 60 Reports to inquire into and decide, upon extensive, perplexing, and questionable evidence.

But it will be said, perhaps, that an approximation to the maintenance of absolute silence is all that is designed or expected; and that this is a great improvement in prison discipline. We are ready to concede to the Silent System whatever praise its advocates claim for it as a successful mode of escaping some of the frightful evils of gaol association; but we must be permitted to examine the means which it professes to employ, before we can feel ourselves warranted in recommending it for general adoption; because, if these means be subject to grave and insurmountable objections, it then becomes a question whether we cannot discover some other mode of proceeding, by which equal or greater advantages may be secured, without incurring the evils which attach to the System in question.—The warmest advocates of the Silent System admit that they cannot carry it into operation without the constant employment of means which are obviously adverse to the spirit of the Constitution, and to the first principles of substantial justice. They confess that they must be permitted to inflict punishments for every detected violation of the rules. Now, of the average amount of such punishments your Lordship will be enabled to form a just estimate, from the statement which we have given respecting the House of Correction at Coldbath Fields; from which it appears that, in the year 1836, the punishments "for talking and swearing," without reckoning those which have been inflicted for other prison offences, and which amounted to 6,794, averaged about 12 per diem. Nor is the nature of those punishments less objectionable than their frequency. They consist in reduction of food, or in confinement in dark and ill-ventilated cells; both of which have such a tendency to impair the prisoners' health, that the Governor has thought it necessary to reduce the punishment to a degree that impairs its efficacy. Nevertheless, the prisoners persevere in counterfeiting ill health; and, for the purposes of carrying on the deception, they frequently resort to practices of an abominable and revolting nature. Here then, my Lord, is one punishment, or, to speak more correctly, here are many punishments, superimposed upon that to which the prisoner was originally sentenced, who is thus oppressed by sufferings and privations beyond the awards of law. The prisoner sees that the privations which occasion him most discomfort are not the punishments to which he has been legally sentenced: hence arise mental irritation, a sense of injustice, a forgetfulness of his offence, and an unconsciousness of his guilt, which effectually close every avenue by which admonition might reach his mind, and render hopeless and unavailing the efforts of the Chaplain. But your Lordship will observe that the whole tendency of the Silent System is to prevent this impression from being made, or speedily to efface it. Whatever may have been the original and legal sentence of the prisoner, it is merged and lost in the number and weight of the sufferings to which the System subjects him; and, so far from discerning in these the presence and agency of the law, and the effect of his own misconduct, he sees and feels nothing but the perpetual operation of vexatious regulations, enforced by individuals whom he knows to be as guilty as himself (if not more so), and who, as we have seen, are sometimes tempted to exercise their trust in a way little calculated to reconcile the prisoner to the rules of the gaol, the reason and expediency of which he can seldom understand or recognise. In short, the law and the legally awarded punishment are thrust out of sight by a number of ill-judged and annoying exactions, which, instead of humbling and reclaiming, are fitted only to exasperate and provoke.

We have before stated that the evils of association are those especially against which the advocates of the Silent System persuade themselves that it effectually protects the prisoner. But this expectation will prove, upon inquiry, to be exceedingly delusive. Some startling facts have been repeatedly brought under our notice which leave no doubt upon the subject. We have been informed, upon good testimony, that the prisoners, from being associated together so long in the same room, contract an acquaintance which it needs only the moment of enlargement to ripen and confirm; so that, when discharged together, as they are daily, in great numbers from large prisons, they coalesce in companionship, which cannot so correctly be said to be commenced, as continued and established. Here then, at the very gate of the prison, we have the evil of gaol association: offenders, well acquainted with each other by sight, and having had numerous opportunities, whilst in confinement, of discovering each other's inclinations, habits, and characters,—all points which they are not slow in discerning,—may meet together on their discharge, and devise such plans for future depredations, as their previous knowledge of each other suggests to them the facility of carrying into effect.

But there is another evil, inherent in this System, which will tend more effectually to secure its condemnation. We allude to the employment of prisoners, as Wardsmen and Monitors, to aid in carrying it into operation. This practice (an unavoidable one under the System in question) is directly opposed to every principle of justice. Is a culprit, probably the greatest delinquent within the prison walls, probably the most ingenious villain, the most finished hypocrite, certainly one of the most guilty in the eye of the law (for it is only from those whose term of imprisonment is long that such agents are selected),—is this man to be released from the condition of a criminal suffering for his offences, and placed in a station which invests him with authority, which is every moment felt, over his fellow-prisoners, every one of whom is perhaps less stained with moral turpitude than himself? Is he, in defiance of the common dictates of justice, to be raised from that penal degradation and discomfort to which his misconduct has subjected him, to which the law has sentenced him, and which the interests and violated rights of society demand that he should feel? In confirmation of this reasoning, we find it stated by the Governor of the Westminster Bridewell, "that the oldest thief makes the best monitor." Thus does this plan, by an inversion of justice, set itself against the law, since it elevates the condition and mitigates the punishment of those especially whose guilt is greatest, and whose sentences are most severe.

Some notion may be formed of the extent to which this unjust principle must prevail under the Silent System, from the fact that, in Coldbath Fields Prison, containing on an average 900 prisoners, no less than 218 of them are removed from the operation of the law and the endurance of their punishment, by being appointed to offices of trust or authority: besides these 218 prisoners, there are 54 regular officers; so that here we have 272 persons appointed to superintend 682 prisoners (i. e. 900 minus 218 who have appointments), being in the ratio of one officer to 2½ prisoners,—an exorbitant proportion. And yet, even with all this supervision, the System, as we have seen, remarkably fails; its failure being witnessed no less by the number of punishments for violating its leading principle, Silence, than by the number of recommittals, which, in the year ending September 1836, amounted in Coldbath Fields to 2,795, and in the Westminster Bridewell to 1,610. The inefficacy of the prison punishments is proved by this, that since the introduction of the System they have gone on increasing:—"The punishments" (says the Governor of the Coldbath Fields House of Correction) "are decidedly insufficient to keep up the discipline;" "they will not deter." "Some efficient punishment is sadly wanted." "Punishments have certainly increased since the Silent System was introduced." "Punishments are more frequent now than when we began the System."

The Silent System.

This intelligent Governor also says that he is much discouraged at times by circumstances of the following nature :—After he has taken pains in instructing an individual for the purpose of qualifying him to be an officer of the prison, he finds all his labour lost, by the person so instructed feeling alarmed at the arduous nature of the duties, and declining to undertake them. The Governor further states, in reference to his selection of fit and proper persons to serve as monitors, &c., that in order to make that selection he must rely in a great measure upon the knowledge and recommendation of the turnkeys, a circumstance which affords scope for patronage, and has a tendency to produce serious evils; that, in order to keep the monitors up to the performance of their duties, it is necessary to receive reports against them from prisoners; and yet those prisoners have a direct interest in removing monitors from their office, and in some instances have made false accusations with that object; that, when extensive sickness prevails, it causes amongst the officers the greatest "distress;" and yet that is an occasion when their most active co-operation is most required, for the prisoners then become overwhelming in their complaints, and the difficulties then increase a hundred-fold; that punishment by the reduction of food is one of the most powerful agents employed in working the System, and yet that it cannot, without the greatest discretion, be carried far enough to deter, without injury to health; that, in short, he punishes generally to the extent of the law, and yet the punishments do not act as a preventive, and are insufficient to maintain the discipline.*

But the amount and severity of punishment involved in the Silent System is not felt chiefly by the convicted prisoner: it falls with yet greater weight upon the untried. From the novel character of the system, from the multiplicity as well as trifling nature of its regulations, some time must necessarily elapse before the recently committed prisoner can be made acquainted with them: the consequence of this is, that the earlier portion of the prisoner's confinement, that too which precedes his trial, is the most irksome and vexatious. His thoughts and attention must be occupied in acquiring a knowledge of the rules, and a readiness in practising them; or else in undergoing the various punishments to which his ignorance, his inadvertence, or his stubbornness exposes him. And this is the condition of a prisoner still innocent in the eye of the law, and whose thoughts should be as composed as possible, that he may be able to make the necessary preparation for his approaching trial! That the untried prisoner is subjected to a greater proportion of suffering than the convicted we found instanced in one prison, where 90 untried prisoners were visited with 224 punishments; while 236 convicted prisoners were visited with 574 punishments.

In some prisons the Governor's jealousy of the monitors' fidelity is so great that he encourages the prisoners to report them; and such is the revengeful spirit produced by this practice, that, occasionally, the efforts of the Governor to protect the monitor have been unavailing. Instances of the evils here adverted to came under our own observation in the course of our inquiries. At one prison a man, who had filled the office of monitor under the Silent System in another prison, was so persecuted by his fellow-prisoners, that the Governor, unable otherwise to protect him, was obliged to remove him to a separate cell, as the only means by which he could shield him from the vengeance to which his conduct as monitor exposed him from those over whom, in the discharge of his duty, he had previously, and in another prison, exercised authority. In another gaol, which is also managed on the Silent System, a prisoner, in our presence, in a fit of resentment, produced, as he said, by the irritating regulations of the prison, threatened to take the life of the monitor who had reported him, when he should regain his liberty; and the same monitor subsequently, in our hearing, appealed to the Governor for his protection. In another instance we found a case which strongly exemplifies the evil above adverted to—of punishing a prisoner by the reduction of his diet. A prisoner confined in a dark cell complained to us of the injury he had sustained in his health by the frequent stoppage of his food, and by close confinement in unwholesome cells, upon only half a pound of bread per day, for violating the prison regulation of silence; and this man, who said that, on his admission to the prison, he was stout and healthy, was now reduced to a mere shadow, and was so exasperated by what he could not be made to regard as just treatment, that he vowed vengeance against those he called his tyrants, whenever he should be restored to liberty. Nor is this evil likely to be mitigated by the line of conduct which the

The Silent System.

System almost requires the monitors to pursue; for the Authorities of the gaol often measure the attention and fidelity of their Agent by the number of his reports against prisoners; so that, as we were informed, the monitor, to secure his place, is sometimes led to make false and groundless charges, in order to attest his diligence.

Whatever punishment may be inflicted upon a prisoner, he ought to be led habitually to regard it as the desert and consequence of his guilt. This alone, seconded by the well-directed efforts and admonitions of the Chaplain, can work in the culprit a just feeling of penitence, or a stable resolution of amendment. Our own observations and experience, throughout the whole course of our inquiries respecting prison discipline, impress upon us the conviction that a prisoner, on entering a gaol, and during the whole period of his confinement there, ought to have nothing less to look forward to than the full endurance of his sentence. Let it not be alleged that we thus advocate a principle which is unjustifiably rigorous and uncharitable. In a case like this we must look to general, not to particular, consequences. If the result of this stern regulation be that one prisoner here, or another there, is not encouraged to assume an improved demeanour, or a more quiet temper than he would otherwise have exhibited, we maintain, on the other hand, that this disadvantage is more than counterbalanced by the extensive and permanent benefits which must flow from a more just and inflexible regulation: and we feel bound to declare to your Lordship that the employment of prisoners as sub-officers, in any post of authority, or upon any pretence whatever, is a practice which is not only adverse to every principle of justice, but is proved to be mischievous, by the testimony of those who are best qualified to pronounce an opinion upon the question.

But, in the next place, if this practice of employing prisoners as officers were otherwise unexceptionable, still the necessary dependance of the working of the System upon their services is attended with consequences of the worst description. The necessary qualifications of wardsmen and monitors are said to be (besides an ability to read and write, and cast accounts) alertness, temper, vigilance, firmness, industry, habits of obedience, and moral integrity: and these habits are to be sought for in the inmates of a prison, and, in some cases, in prisoners who have been recommitted! Your Lordship will observe how fatal to the system is the objection which this necessity involves. The system itself professes to derive its excellence from the maintenance of silence,—silence can be maintained only by the employment of fit and trustworthy officers,—the greater number of those officers must be selected from the prisoners,—but their qualifications are such as necessarily forbid the hope of finding them amongst such characters. So satisfied are we of the insuperable difficulty of the case, and so ready are we to take our stand upon the objection which it involves, that we feel more than ordinary anxiety to state the question fairly and impartially, and to allege nothing that is not borne out by facts that cannot be disputed, and by testimony to which no exception can be made. So important, so essential, is the union of those qualifications deemed, that the absence of any one of the number, in the case of a monitor, is injuriously felt throughout the whole department. If the monitor's attention flag, if his eye be withdrawn, if his back be turned, but for a moment, that moment is seized with the utmost promptitude by the prisoners, who can convey and receive information in the twinkling of an eye. The consequence of one failure in duty is that the prisoners are encouraged to watch for another: they applaud their own ingenuity, they exult in the frustration or perplexity of the officer, and sharpen their wits by the constant exercise which these circumstances afford of inventing and practising devices to overreach the monitor. Is this a frame and posture of mind in which the advocates of this System would desire to see the prisoner perpetually indulging? Is this a proper discipline for reflection and self-examination? Is the prisoner, when emancipated from such a training as this, likely to prove a better member of society than before his imprisonment? or is he likely, while under a regulation so calculated to generate and keep up a perpetual ferment in his mind, to attend to, or reap any advantage from, the exhortations of the minister of religion? This view of the question is deserving of serious consideration. Every principle of policy and humanity, all the experience and observation of those who are conversant with the subject of prison discipline, tend to prove that the interests of society are deeply concerned in the proper moral training of those whose punishment consists of imprisonment for any limited time. Society, indeed, expects that the terror of the law and of imprisonment, together with proper discipline and instruction, will operate as a protection to the prisoner, and to the State itself against a repetition of the offence. But is this persuasion justified by the prison Reports? What is the fact which all such evidence tends to prove but this, that the chance of any prisoner returning to or adopting an honest course of life is almost nothing? How is this? We charge a large portion of this alarming evil to the existing systems of prison discipline, from which no other fruits can reasonably be looked for.

But if, as is manifest, it be impossible to procure officers and monitors possessed of these extraordinary endowments, moral, mental, and physical,—if the upholders of this system must be satisfied with one who may betray his trust, with another who may be incompetent to his duty, and with a third who may prove false to his important obligations,—how incalculable are the evils which must result!

There are other objections to the System; and, amongst these, we find it stated by the Governor of Coldbath-Fields House of Correction that the marching and countermarching of the prisoners, and the frequent musterings of them in the yards, occupy nearly two hours daily. This not only involves a great and wasteful expenditure of time, breaks the continuity, and unduly mitigates the severity, of the punishment, affords frequent and easy opportunities of intercommunication, but also exposes the prisoners to such sudden variations of temperature, and to so much inclemency and wet, as have proved to be seriously detrimental to their health.

Another objection to the System is the impossibility of making it consistent with the purpose at which the Legislature is now earnestly aiming—the establishment of a uniform System of Prison Discipline throughout the kingdom. The severity of punishment will depend, of course, upon the strictness with which the discipline is administered; and this must inevitably vary with the characters of the respective governors. Where the governor is conscientious and judicious, and constantly has officers upon whom he may implicitly depend, there the system will appear to work well, because it is well worked; the praise, in truth, will be due, not to the system, but to the individuals by whom it happens to be well administered. But what is to be looked for where the case is the reverse of all this; where the governor is devoid of judgment and diligence, and the monitors are incompetent and unfaithful; and where the visits of the Justices are unfrequent and expected? In our discussion of this question we have never lost sight of the great principle—that it is designed, in whatever measures are adopted by Authority respecting Prison Discipline, to legislate for the whole kingdom; that the enactments are to extend their influence, and to be felt, whether for good or for evil, in places the most remote from public notice, as well as in those upon which the public eye is intently and constantly fixed: that, consequently, the defects of the system will, in the Metropolitan Prisons, be in a great degree remedied by the exertions of those who administer it; stimulated by the desire of public commendation, or by the dread of public rebuke: while, on the other hand, in places where this extraneous influence is not felt, or is but feebly exercised, the evils of the System will be felt in all their force, disappointing the public expectations, exposing the imperfections of the law, inflicting upon the prisoner uncalled for and gratuitous suffering, and rendering necessary an entire change of System, after a lapse of time, and a fruitless expenditure of money.

If the sole end at which a good system of prison discipline should aim were to prevent, by whatever means, the prisoners from audibly talking with each other, we should say that the Silent System had not been wholly unsuccessful: but if, in securing this end, the means are proved to be ill devised, harsh, and of uncertain efficacy; if, while the prisoner is forbidden to articulate sounds, (which, however, we have shown he can do even under the Silent System,) he has opportunities of making and exchanging significant signs; if, by a system of refined penal surveillance, his mind is kept perpetually on the fret, and drawn from the contemplation of his own conduct and condition to the invention of devices for defeating his overseers, or for carrying on a clandestine communication with his fellow prisoners, deriving no benefit in the mean while from the offices of religion, nay, converting the most solemn of his religious offices into an opportunity of conversing with his fellows, or, as has come under our cognizance, of indulging in the most revolting and disgusting indecencies,—then we say that the successful interdiction of all oral intercourse is dearly purchased indeed, and that all hope of the prisoner's moral amendment must be abandoned.

But, to make the largest concessions we can, for the purpose of discussing, with all possible fairness and indulgence, the merits of this plan, let us admit that it is efficacious, that complete silence is actually enforced, and that all hope of intercommunication is totally cut off from the prisoners; still what a cumbrous, complicated piece of machinery does the whole system exhibit, and how soon and how frequently are its movements liable to be deranged or stopped! Let your Lordship imagine the whole in full play; its officers and monitors diligent, alert, watchful, honest; every man, and everything, in proper place and operation: suddenly an officer or monitor becomes sick, or is called away, or refuses to work (all cases that are constantly occurring); a substitute is not immediately to be found; the governor is called from his peculiar duties to provide one; the monitors are perplexed; the impediment is felt throughout the whole department, and some time must elapse, and many abuses and violations of the numerous rules occur: these abuses must be rectified, and these offences must be visited with punishment, before the machinery is again put into action, to be again disturbed by similar impediments, and to be followed by similar inconveniences. And all this intricate machinery is constructed—for what? For the purpose of overcoming difficulties which the authors of it have themselves created. They assemble together social beings, interdict communication between them, and then punish them for yielding to that most powerful of human impulses,—the desire of interchanging thought with those with whom they are compelled to associate. Here is a difficulty contrived with perverse ingenuity, as if merely for the purpose of overcoming it; and when it fails, as it must perpetually, the system revenges itself upon the prisoner for the remissness of the officer.

These remarks with reference to male prisoners apply, and with still greater force, in the case of females, among whom the difficulty of procuring women, qualified to act as monitors, is confessed by all the prison authorities who have the management of those gaols in which the Silent System is enforced.

We have elsewhere expressed our opinion respecting the inexpediency of permitting intercourse between prisoners, inasmuch as it leads to recognition,—an evil which grows out of the Silent System to as great an extent, though not with so much facility, as under the old plan of prison association. We propose to consider this evil under three different aspects: first, as it affects an innocent man; secondly, as it affects a criminal, who, from a sense of guilt, is led to penitence and resolutions of amendment; and, thirdly, as it affects a culprit who is determined to continue in his course of crime.

In the first place, it will be at once apparent that a man unjustly accused, able to establish his innocence, and discharged without a legal stain upon his character, may receive an unmerited and incurable wound in his reputation from the mere circumstance of his being associated for a period, however short, with companions of vicious habits and tainted morals, and being subsequently recognised by them. The extent of this evil may, in some measure, be estimated by considering the deep and overwhelming anguish and dismay with which a person of unblemished character, however humble in station, contemplates his committal to prison. And may not the fair fame of any person be blasted for life, and his relatives and friends cruelly and irreparably wounded in their character and feelings, by such an event? In urging the necessity of shielding an innocent member of society, as far as is practicable, from an evil so dreadful as this, we are not more powerfully supported by the dictates of reason and humanity than by the very spirit of the law itself, which guards with great and justifiable jealousy the rights and feelings of innocence. We ask nothing more than that the proceedings of the law may, in this case, be conformable to its spirit, and that all possible care be taken by the State to protect the party that is free from guilt from needless association and recognition, and from the infliction of a wrong for which no atonement can be made.

We will next consider the evil of recognition with reference to its effects upon a prisoner who may be led or inclined to repent of his guilt, and to resolve upon an honest course of life. Whether the man really repents, or feels an inclination to return to honest courses, or to listen with serious attention to the admonitions which he may have received, this evil will operate upon him with a disastrous influence. In the former case, by steady perseverance in the path of industry and honesty, he may succeed in gaining the character of a useful member of society; but he will live in constant apprehension of having his good name suddenly and irremediably forfeited by the recognition of an abandoned fellow-prisoner, who may be tempted to expose the past delinquencies of the penitent, of whom, but for the previous acquaintance in prison, he might never have had the slightest knowledge. In the latter case the mischief is not less prejudicial or less to be deprecated; for the liability to subsequent exposure must act as a great discouragement to reformation: it has a tendency to repress the very rudiments of virtuous resolution in the individual; and thus he is discouraged by the consciousness that he is surrounded by witnesses of his disgrace, who would feel no obligation to abstain from spreading the report of his former guilt to his disadvantage or his undoing.

We are further to consider the injurious effect which recognition must have upon a Criminal who is resolved to persevere in his course of guilt. It is plain, from what we have already said concerning the nature of the Silent System, that it takes no effectual steps to prevent communication between the prisoners;—that acquaintance by sight may ripen, in time, into intimacy and companionship after discharge from prison;—and that the very working of the discipline is fitted to call forth those qualifications and capacities by which associates in criminal adventures are best recommended to each other—ingenuity, dexterity, and aptitude for the accomplishment of deeds of fraud. We say that here, too, no less than in the two former cases, it is of importance to prevent recognition, and all the causes which contribute to produce it. The separated, isolated villain is comparatively innoxious; it is combination—concentration of force, talent, and artifice—that renders wickedness formidable to society: and this combination is effected, consolidated, and organized, within the walls, or at the very gate, of the prison, more than anywhere else.

The arguments against recognition appear futile to some:—to us they seem to be entitled to a larger share of public attention than they have hitherto attracted. It is said that, with every possible care, and by every possible expedient, we shall in vain attempt completely to prevent recognition. Be it so: are we, therefore, to make no attempt whatever to prevent it? Besides, when we are told that the very circumstance of a prisoner's committal, his intercourse with his legal advisers, his examination before magistrates, his trial in open court, all necessarily involve recognition, we answer, that this is true: but by whom is the prisoner then recognised? That portion of the Public who may be present at the examination or trial see the Accused but once, and for a short period; it is unlikely, then, that they should recognise him at any future time: but the police, the officers of justice, who, from duty and habit, mark the features and deportment of prisoners under such circumstances, and whose business it is to arrest offenders in their career of crime, would, upon occasion, readily recognise such a character.—Contrast this with that which takes place in a prison; where, instead of being subject to the recognition of those whose duty it is to restrain from the commission of crime, the prisoner is familiarly known by those who will encourage and assist him in it. Thus the former recognition in open court is advantageous to the public; whereas the latter is mischievous both to the prisoner and to society at large.

Thus does it appear, my Lord, that the Silent System not only fails in attaining those important ends at which it professes to aim, but is also open to grave and serious objections, with reference to the means which it thus unsuccessfully employs. It fails in its attempt to prevent intercourse between the prisoners:—it is forced to inflict punishments, for the purpose of commanding obedience to its numerous and perplexing regulations:—these punishments are carried to an extent which its advocates do not attempt to justify:—it does not protect the prisoner from the evils of gaol association:—by the employment of prisoners as wardsmen and monitors, it, in a great measure, remits the prisoner's legal penalty, and affords admission to abuses and irregularities of a dangerous character:—its restrictions fall with excessive and undue severity upon the untried prisoner, who, in reason and justice, ought to be less rigorously dealt with than the convicted offender:—it excites irritation of mind, and, in many cases, vindictiveness of spirit, in the prisoners:—it is, from the impossibility of rendering its operation equable and uniform, utterly unfit for general adoption:—it is complicated and cumbrous in its construction; apt to be constantly deranged in its movements; and requires, for its efficient working, a degree of watchfulness and vigilance which is shown to be unattainable, even under the most favourable circumstances:—and finally, it does not even contemplate the adoption of any means by which the evils of recognition can be prevented:—evils which we have endeavoured to show are neither imaginary nor light.

The Separate System.

"THE SEPARATE SYSTEM."

That much difference of opinion should prevail in this country, as to the character and effects of the separate system, ought to excite neither surprise nor regret.—The change proposed to be introduced by that System is far too extensive to be adopted without much consideration; and we feel assured that nothing will more effectually tend to its ultimate success than the full discussion and examination of the question in all its bearings. We feel a strong conviction that the objections which have been raised to the System are founded on imperfect information—that these misconceptions will be removed by further inquiry; and that, so far from being fraught with the injurious consequences which have been erroneously imputed to it, Separate Confinement will eventually prove to be based on humane and enlightened principles, and the most efficient plan which has hitherto been devised for the government of prisons.

And first—in regard to the application of the System to the Untried. None can feel more strongly than ourselves the importance of upholding those rights which distinguish the treatment of an untried from that of a convicted prisoner. Safe custody is the sole object of imprisonment before trial, nor has Society a right to embitter that imprisonment by circumstances which unnecessarily aggravate the loss of liberty, and annex severities not contemplated by law. The prisoner is not only entitled to pure air, wholesome and sufficient food, protection from cold, opportunities for exercise, and whatever may be necessary to the preservation of his health; he is not only entitled to consult with his legal adviser, communicate with his friends, and receive other reasonable indulgences;—but he is entitled to claim exemption from the society of those whose company is calculated to injure his morals, outrage his feelings, and debase his character. A general conviction of these truths, at least so far as they relate to health and bodily welfare, has, of late years, led to many useful reforms in the condition of our prisons, and of our County Gaols there are happily but few against which any just grounds of complaint, in this respect, can now be fairly made. But, highly as we value these improvements, we are bound to state that the great moral evils of imprisonment remain to this day in vigorous operation. The individual committed for trial, whom the laws presume to be innocent, is even now compelled to associate with delinquents of various degrees of criminality, and too often to pass his nights, as well as days, in close contact with the profligate and depraved. Nor is this the case in those gaols only which are generally considered to be defective. The day-rooms of the most spacious of our county prisons exhibit these demoralizing associations to a painful extent; and we write advisedly when we assert that there is scarcely a gaol in the kingdom conducted on the principle of Association, to which an untried prisoner, not absolutely depraved, could be committed, for any lengthened period, without deep and permanent injury. This right, then, of the untried, to be secured from moral contamination, if not wholly neglected, has been, at least, greatly undervalued, or very inadequately guarded. But we would submit to your Lordship whether there is any privilege of greater or more undeniable importance to the prisoner himself, or in the observance of which the interest as well as the duty of society is more deeply involved. On the liberation of a prisoner, the corruption which he may have imbibed during confinement spreads its pestiferous influence; and Society is thus made to feel the penalty of its own cruelty and neglect. This evil, however, is so generally admitted, that we forbear to enlarge on its character and extent; and the simple question, therefore, which we now submit for your Lordship's consideration is—in what measures the remedy consists?

It has, indeed, been imagined that the propagation of crime, during imprisonment, could be prevented by a judicious system of classification. Experience has, however, shown the fallacy of all such arrangements, whatever be the principle on which they may be conducted. If the classification be regulated by the nature of the imputed offence, it is certain that, as crimes differing widely in magnitude are classed under general terms, prisoners of every variety of character must necessarily be placed together. Even were this not the case, the absurdity of classification would be apparent from the fact that many who have been before in prison for serious crimes are subsequently charged with minor offences, and are consequently associated, on their commitment, with persons innocent of the imputed crime, and with young and inexperienced offenders. If, again, the classification proceed on an assumed knowledge of character, by what means can such knowledge be attained? By what inquiry, and on what evidence, are we to arrive at the motives, disposition, and habits of the prisoner? Nor, as we have shown, can the object be secured by the adoption of the Silent System, which fails, in a great measure, in preventing communication, even when enforced by severe punishments. The mere necessity, however, for these punishments, which exists wherever the system is at all efficient, renders it quite inapplicable to the treatment of the Untried.

In our last Annual Report we expressed ourselves strongly in favour of the separate confinement of untried prisoners. We feel it our duty to state that further consideration and experience have powerfully contributed to confirm our conviction of its inestimable value. We do not hesitate to declare our firm persuasion that there is no alternative between Separation and Contamination; and that, with certain modifications, which greatly tend to divest the separation of a penal character, this description of prison discipline is admirably adapted to the treatment of prisoners before trial.

The application of the Separate System to the Untried has been opposed on the ground of its presumed severity. It is alleged that the unconvicted are thus placed in solitary confinement, and that but little distinction is observed in the treatment of the innocent and guilty. We beg, in reply, to remark that nothing can be more unfair than to confound the plan of individual separation, with the modifications which we recommend, with the vague and confused ideas which are generally conveyed by the terms "solitary confinement." To remove, at once, this misconception, it is only necessary that we should explain the nature of the imprisonment which is enforced, in the case of the Untried, at those gaols at which the Separate System is in operation. The prisoner is placed in an apartment, at least 10 feet square, and 10 feet high; sufficiently large to enable him to take exercise. This apartment is well lighted, ventilated, and warmed: water is laid on: a water-closet is provided; and, in the fitting up, every arrangement is adopted essential to the prisoner's health. To this apartment the prisoner is strictly confined by day and by night; nor is he allowed to leave it at any time, except for the purpose of attending divine worship in chapel. This seclusion, however, is broken by daily and stated visits of the governor, chaplain, surgeon, and other prison-officers. The prisoner enjoys the privilege of seeing his friends; he has every facility for consulting with his legal adviser; he may send and receive letters; he is permitted to have unobjectionable books; he may receive suitable articles of food; and he has the option of any employment that can be conveniently furnished to him; he is exempted from all discipline that is calculated to create irritation; he is tempted to commit no violation of prison rules, and he is thus spared the infliction of prison punishments; he is exposed to no quarrels; he is protected from those ruffianly assaults (committed in every other kind of prison) which arise from the tyranny of the strong over the weak; his mind cannot be tainted and demoralized by the relations of the burglar, nor his ears assailed by the language of the blasphemous and obscene. And in what respect can this treatment be considered as an aggravation of the suffering necessarily attendant on his confinement? Whatever tendency the seclusion may have to render imprisonment irksome is materially diminished by the visits of officers, by communications with friends, and by manual occupation if the prisoner desire it. Under such circumstances, a prisoner, who is inclined industriously to employ himself, will feel less discomfort than under any plan of association and idleness.

The condition of an untried prisoner, under this, or, indeed, any system of confinement, is, no doubt, one of considerable privation, and, in many instances, one of actual suffering; but it must always be borne in mind that, in estimating the character of the System of Separation, a comparison is to be instituted, not between a state of imprisonment and that of liberty, but between one mode of confinement and another; and the application of the Separate System to the Untried is to be regarded as harsh or humane, according as the hardships which it inflicts are greater or less than those imposed by the discipline of the Silent System, or by the unrestrained Association which prevails in those places where neither the Separate nor the Silent System is in operation.

On a comparison, then, with the Silent System, we think that hardly two opinions can exist as to the humanity of Separation. The Silent System, while it fails in wholly securing the prisoner from contamination, deprives him of everything like the comfort or enjoyment of society. It imposes rules difficult of observance, which the prisoner is every instant, and even unconsciously, tempted to break; and every violation of which, when detected, is necessarily visited with severity. It is a System which admits of no mitigation; it entirely loses its character and efficacy unless carried to its full extent, and enforced with the utmost rigour. The untried prisoner, therefore, to whom the Silent System is applied, experiences the very hardships, restraints, and inflictions, which form the main feature in the Convict's punishment.

The Separate System.

If the System of unrestrained Association, which usually prevails in the case of untried prisoners, be adopted, the suffering is great to any man not lost to every sense of shame or decency. Not only are his ears assailed by the most revolting language, and his feelings outraged by scenes of the most degraded profligacy, but, unless prepared to endure the raillery, insults, and not unfrequently the violence, of his companions, he is compelled to participate in vices from which his nature recoils, and which, on his entrance, he must contemplate with horror. In fact, he is reduced to the alternative of being an accomplice or a victim.

To make a practical comparison of the systems, we would put it to the calm judgments of those who object to Separation, on the ground of its severity, whether, in their own case, or in the case of those in whose welfare they are most interested, (should they, by any misfortune, be accused of a crime for which they were required to await a trial,) they would not infinitely prefer a System of Separation, mitigated and modified as it is in the case of untried prisoners, and conducted in the manner we have already described, either to the harshness and exposure of the Silent System, or to the degradation and depravity of unrestrained Association.

It is said that, admitting individual separation to be free from objection, still, if the prisoner regards it as a punishment, it ought not to be enforced: the seclusion, therefore, should be optional. In this reasoning we do not concur. We protest against the principle of making the treatment of even an untried prisoner to depend on his own consent. If such reasoning were allowed to operate in the government of gaols, it would follow that a life of habitual depravity would afford an undeniable claim for a continuance of vicious indulgence. If the separation of the Untried be really objectionable, it ought not to be adopted, although a prisoner should desire it. If, on the other hand, the separation be just and beneficial, it ought to be uniformly enforced, however repugnant it may be, in particular instances, to the feelings of a prisoner. If it is for the benefit of the untried prisoner, and the general good of society, that he should be kept apart from others, such treatment can only be objected to on the ground of its being a violation of some absolute right, and that the Untried may reasonably demand to be provided with companions during confinement. The absurdity of this doctrine will be apparent upon the slightest consideration. There are many prisons, in the rural districts of the Kingdom, in which a single prisoner only is confined for several months. Do we, in such cases, hear of the cruelty and injustice of keeping such persons alone; and are the magistrates bound to prevent the solitude of this confinement, by keeping an officer constantly with the prisoner? That there are, among prisoners before trial, especially in the gaols of the metropolis, many who would prefer association to separation, however partial and mitigated, we readily admit; but, when the characters of such persons are ascertained, it will be found that they are precisely of that class whom it is of the greatest importance to keep individually apart, as well for their own interests as for the welfare of others; and the same principle which, looking to the choice of the prisoner, would allow him the enjoyment of that society which persons of decent habits and respectable character shun, because his previous mode of life has rendered such society an alleviation to his imprisonment, could hardly refuse him those sensual indulgences which long use has rendered habitual, and the withholding of which, however salutary and beneficial, is to him among the severest inflictions of the prison. We beg, however, to observe that it is not fair to form an estimate of the prisoners throughout the kingdom by the dissolute habits and degraded character of the inmates of the London gaols; and we feel assured that, although the seclusion might not be acceptable to persons committed for trial, who have been often before in gaol, there are few prisoners not absolutely hardened in crime, especially of those having decent connexions, and committed on suspicion of a light offence, by whom the privilege of being separated from other prisoners would not be readily preferred.

But the advantages of individual separation are not merely of a preventive character. It not only renders corrupt intercourse impracticable, but it affords to the prisoner direct facilities for reflection and self-improvement. In the

I.
HOME DISTRICT.

The Separate System.

retirement of his chamber, the prisoner is not only cut off from the means of being rendered a worse, but he is placed in a situation in which he may become a better man. He is at least compelled to think.—Whether innocent or guilty of the offence with which he is charged, whatever be the nature of his previous habits and character, he has opportunities of promoting his moral and religious welfare, which under such circumstances the best of men would do well to improve. He is furnished with the Scriptures; he is provided with books suitable to his situation; he is visited by a minister of religion; he has the privilege of attending public worship. Nor is the benefit of the System limited to the period of his imprisonment. It is one of its most distinguishing features that no prisoner is permitted to see another prisoner. Those only who are aware of the mischievous effects produced by acquaintanceships formed in gaol, can appreciate the immense benefit of an arrangement by which the power of recognition is prevented when the prisoner returns into society. It is well known that robberies are often planned during confinement, to be executed on the liberation of the parties. Experienced thieves delight, during the hours of imprisonment, in instructing their younger associates in the mysteries of crime, and in strengthening their gangs for the renewal of depredation; while the good intentions of the better-disposed classes on their discharge are often frustrated, and their future criminal career determined, by recognition and the threat of exposure.

But, although Separate Confinement, with the modifications which we have described, be a boon and protection to the Untried, it becomes, when strictly enforced and divested of all indulgences, the most efficacious and salutary of all punishments for the Convicted.

The convicted prisoner, according to this System, is confined by day and by night in such an apartment as has been described, and fitted up with every convenience essential to ensure ventilation, warmth, cleanliness, and personal exercise. Whatever is necessary to the preservation of the prisoner's health is strictly attended to; but no indulgence, in any shape whatever, is extended to him. The distinctions observed in the treatment of the Untried and Convicted are broad and definite. It has been seen that under this System the Untried are permitted to receive visits from their connexions: the Convicted are prohibited from such intercourse. The Untried may also communicate with their friends by letter: the Convicted have no such privilege. The Untried are allowed to receive food beyond the prison diet: the Convicted are rigorously restricted to the prescribed ration. With the Untried, employment is optional; upon the Convicted a daily task is imposed.

It is alleged that the discipline is unsafe, and unreasonably severe. That it can, however, be enforced without any danger to the prisoner, rests not upon assertion only, but on the evidence of facts. That it operates upon the criminal with more than justifiable severity must necessarily be a matter of opinion, according to the impression which may be entertained of the degree of punishment due to crime. That it subjects the prisoner to privations which are calculated to make him feel forcibly the penalties of guilt, we readily admit; and we scruple not to avow that we regard this severity as one of the excellencies of the System;—but that it is of the appalling nature sometimes represented, either abandoning its victim to despair, or consigning a vacant or guilty mind to all the gloomy terrors of unbroken solitude, we unhesitatingly deny. The prisoner is visited daily by the governor, as well as by the chaplain and other prison-officers. His labour furnishes employment for his mind; he has access to profitable books; and, in case of illness or sudden emergency, he has the means of making known his wishes to the officers of the prison.

We are totally opposed to those who consider a convicted prisoner as an object of vengeance, or that it is just to inflict upon him any degree of suffering not warranted by law, and not indispensable to his own correction and the well being of Society. But, at the same time, it is necessary to guard against that mistaken humanity which shrinks from the infliction of adequate punishment, and is prone, in its sympathy with the sufferings of the guilty, to forget the evil effects of impunity on others, and that misplaced lenity to the criminal is cruelty to the honest portion of the community. The great and special aim of imprisonment should be to enforce such correction and restraint as shall deter the offender from further crime, and impress upon the ill disposed a strong sense of the penal consequences which certainly attend theviolation of the laws: and we believe that the Separate System is the only one which can effectually accomplish these objects,

I.
Home District.

The Separate System.

while it subjects the prisoner to no privation not indispensable for the attainment of this end.

How completely imprisonment has hitherto failed to deter, is notorious to all who are acquainted with the condition of the gaols in this country. Instead of a feeling of alarm being created in the criminal's breast, he soon begins to view his confinement with comparative indifference; and, notwithstanding the extent to which, in some prisons, the plans of silence and hard labour have been carried, they fail to produce permanently any corresponding sense of dread. The cause is obvious:—so long as prisoners are permitted to associate, the intercourse, however limited, cannot fail to destroy the effect of the strictest discipline that may be enforced; and, however vigilantly silence may be exacted, the mere sight and occasional exchange of thoughts with other prisoners tends altgether to destroy that feeling of loneliness which is the greatest and most judicious of all moral punishments.

The Silent System has no tendency to incline the prisoner to turn his thoughts upon himself, to cherish contrition, to reconsider his life and prospects, nor to estimate the wickedness and unprofitableness of crime: it can give birth to no firm resolution, nor settled determinations of amendment. This salutary power we believe to belong pre-eminently to the plan of individual separation; which, therefore, besides its deterring qualities, is inestimable as an instrument of moral and religious improvement. We have before, in reference to the Untried, adverted to these advantages; but, in relation to the Convicted, their importance is, if possible, enhanced. We are well aware that there are those who consider as wild and visionary any hopes which may be entertained of the reformation of a criminal. We trust that it is unnecessary for us to state that we do not concur in this opinion. We feel assured that in this country little need be urged against a doctrine which regards the Convict as an outcast possessing no interests beyond the grave, and worthy of no more consideration than the beasts that perish. If, as we firmly believe, no human being, however guilty, is excluded from the means of repentance and the hope of mercy, we cannot too strongly condemn opinions which appear to us to be opposed to the spirit and precepts of that Divine Being, who "desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live." We have had some experience of the character of criminals, and are persuaded that there are periods in the lives of even the most hardened when the mind is awakened to reflection, and the heart overwhelmed with sorrow. In these seasons of sensibility much may be done to eradicate the dominion of vice by the inculcation of Christian principles, and the force of good impressions; and it is the duty of a Christian government to present to every prisoner the means by which instruction may be imparted and repentance cherished. In the quiet of the prison cell—and when humbled by correction—the warnings, promises, and consolations, of the Gospel, come home to the conscience with redoubled force. There is no feature in the Separate System which more favourably distinguishes it than the facility which it affords to the minister of religion in the discharge of the various duties of his sacred office.

We beg emphatically to state that we are not the advocates of absolute solitary confinement, nor of any plan of imprisonment in which the seclusion of the prisoner shall not be relieved by stated daily visits, by manual occupation, and in which the prisoner shall not possess the means of communicating at any time with the officers of the gaol. Much of the prejudice which exists against the Separate System proceeds from impressions derived from the manner in which solitary confinement (so called) is often enforced in county gaols. In the cases to which we refer prisoners are shut up in cells originally constructed for dormitories, and too small to enable the prisoner to take exercise,—cells which are badly lighted, imperfectly ventilated, in no degree warmed, and destitute of those conveniences which are indispensable to render them fit and healthy habitations by day and by night. We are not surprised that in these cold, contracted, and desolate cells the health of a prisoner should, after the confinement of a few weeks, be found to be impaired; and we protest against any unfavourable inferences being drawn against the plans which we recommend from this species of unmitigated solitary confinement in cells, so different in their nature from those contemplated by the Separate System. It was by such an error, and owing to the injurious effects of experiments conducted on partial and defective principles, that the Separate System was for some time retarded in the United States; and yet such cruel and unjustifiable experiments, the fallacy of which has been completely exposed, and the mischievous impressions of which have been wholly removed in America, are now frequently referred to in England in proof of the danger and impracticability of the Separate System!

I.

The Separate System.

The opponents of individual separation argue as if it were an untried theory, and appear not to be aware that this discipline has been for several years in practical operation. The System originated in England in the year 1790, and was first enforced at the county gaol at Gloucester. For some time previous, that distinguished magistrate, Sir George Paul, had been associated with Sir William Blackstone and Mr. Howard in devising a plan for a National Penitentiary; and the Separate System, as introduced at Gloucester, was adopted, as embodying the views which these eminent men entertained of the most efficient System for the management of prisoners. The Building was provided with separate cells. Prisoners were confined individually apart day and night, from the hour of their admission to that of their discharge. Those committed for short periods were not provided with employment; while convicts sentenced for longer terms were furnished with labour. Moral and religious instruction was administered in the cell as well as in the chapel. The discipline was enforced at Gloucester for a period of seventeen years, and surpassed the most sanguine hopes of its enlightened founder. During this period few, if any, convicts were subjected to a second punishment. As population, however, advanced, the numbers committed so greatly increased beyond the means of separate accommodation, that the discipline was necessarily broken in upon, and at length superseded. The beneficial effects of the System were exhibited, however, up to the period of its being abandoned, by the number of recommitments proceeding almost exclusively from that class who were confined in association.*

But, although from the circumstances stated Separation could no longer be carried into effect at Gloucester, the labours of Sir George Paul proved the practicability and excellence of the discipline; and in the year 1824, when the Magistrates of Glasgow reconstructed the Bridewell of that City, they determined to adopt the Separate System. Since that period the plan has been in full operation at this prison. Here there are 265 cells; those for the men being 9 feet by 7 feet, and 10 feet high; and those for the females 8 feet 6 inches by 7 feet 6 inches, and 7 feet 3 inches high. The ordinary discipline consists in the confinement of each prisoner alone in a cell, day and night, without access to, or communication with, any other prisoner. Labour is furnished. As the cells are not so large as subsequent experience has shown to be desirable for the purpose of affording a sufficient degree of ventilation, and means of exercise, the prisoner is allowed to walk for an hour daily in a corridor, under close inspection; but is never permitted to go into the open air. Although the Sentences are in general short, yet prisoners are occasionally subjected to this discipline for a twelvemonth and upwards. The prisoners have sustained no injury in regard to their health; and the best effects have resulted in deterring offenders sentenced for lengthened terms. It has, in fact, been found that the longer the detention, the more beneficial has been the discipline; and if we had no other evidence than that furnished by the experience of the Glasgow Bridewell for a period of thirteen years, we should be justified in pronouncing the plan of Separation to be safe and efficacious.

It was not likely that the advantages of the System, so strikingly exhibited at Glasgow, should be overlooked by the friends to the improvement of prison discipline in the United States. In the state of Pennsylvania, where the subject has long been regarded with deep interest, several enlightened and benevolent characters warmly advocated the superiority of Separation. In Pennsylvania the punishment of death is rare, and transportation is unknown. Penitentiary imprisonment for life is the secondary punishment; and in the case of the more heinous offences it is rigorously enforced. The introduction of the Separate System was, therefore, the more strongly opposed; and loud were the complaints of its cruelty, and predictions of its danger. The most searching inquiries were accordingly instituted with reference to its character and effects. The result of these investigations was the adoption of the System. The Eastern Penitentiary, erected in Philadelphia on the principle of individual separation, was opened in 1829 for the reception of prisoners. The admirable construction and management of this Penitentiary are too well known to justify us in entering into any detailed description of its government; nor shall we advert further to its discipline except to state that it affords irrefragable proofs that individual separation can be enforced for lengthened periods with perfect safety to the mind and health.

The Separate System.

There are prisoners who have now been in this Penitentiary for Years, during the whole of which period they have been confined alone in their cell, day and night, and cut off from all intercourse with the World, and with their fellow-prisoners; the solitude being mitigated solely by employment, and the visits of the prison officers, and others authorized to inspect the Penitentiary. And what is the result? It appears that, of twenty-six prisoners who have been in confinement for three years and upwards, all are apparently improved rather than otherwise in mind, and decidedly better in bodily health than when they entered the prison; while, in the opinion of those most competent to judge on such a subject, the deterring influence of the discipline has had a powerful effect in preventing crime. The success of this Establishment having overcome all opposition in Pennsylvania, a Penitentiary for the Western Division of the State has been built at Pittsburgh, on the same principle. A county gaol for the separate confinement of the Untried has also been erected in Philadelphia. Other States have followed the example of Pennsylvania. In New Jersey, Rhode Island, and Missouri, Penitentiaries on the separate plan have been erected; while, at New York, where public opinion has hitherto been strongly in favour of the Silent System, the Authorities have lately completed a gaol for the separation of prisoners before trial. We are enabled further to state that, the Legislature of Lower Canada having determined on the erection of a Penitentiary, Commissioners were despatched to the United States for the purpose of ascertaining the most efficient plans of construction and discipline. These gentlemen, after personally examining the various Penitentiaries, have reported in favour of individual separation.

It is a curious fact that some of the strongest testimonies in favour of individual separation may be collected from those who are the best acquainted with the operation of the Silent System. We can assert with confidence that there is not one of the best-conducted prisons, in which the Silent System is effectually enforced, that we have not repeatedly visited and closely inspected; and we can truly state that, with one exception only, the governors of those prisons have acknowledged that, had they to decide upon the merits of the respective plans, they would unquestionably give their unqualified preference to the Separate System.

It affords us great pleasure to refer to another Authority to which we attach great value. In 1834 the Prussian Government, desirous of obtaining full information respecting the American Penitentiaries, commissioned Dr. Julius, a gentleman well known for his distinguished talents and benevolence, and unequalled perhaps in Europe for his knowledge and experience on the subject of Prisons, to proceed for this purpose to the United States. Dr. Julius left Europe with very unfavourable impressions of the Separate System. He has now returned, and the result of his investigation is a conviction that the Silent System is founded on mistaken principles, and is injurious in its effects;—that separation can be enforced with perfect safety to the prisoner's mind and health; and that it is the only discipline by which gaols can be rendered instrumental to deter, correct, and reclaim. The testimony of Dr. Julius is of great value, not only from his extensive knowledge of the subject generally, and the extreme caution which marks his character, but because, from his professional eminence, his opinions as to the mental and bodily effects of the System are entitled to peculiar weight. Dr. Julius, who is engaged in preparing his official Report, thus concludes a letter which he has been so good as to address to us:—" Such are the arguments by which I am led " to adopt with you the plan of Separate Confinement by day and night, in prefer- " ence to the Silent System with night-cells, wherever a new prison is erected for " convicts, or for prisoners before trial,—a class who ought to be more carefully " preserved from contamination than even convicts. These Arguments are the " result of my observations in America, and of my subsequent researches; and, " although I went to the New World with a strong bias for the Silent System, yet, " after having seen both plans, I must say that I fully concur in the sentiments " expressed in the following letter from my friend, the Rev. Charles R. Demme, " the respected minister of the German church at Philadelphia. This gentleman, " in adverting to the first establishment of the Eastern Penitentiary, observes,— " ' I then thought that the necessarily attendant evils of this System would be an " ' impaired constitution, brutal insensibility, and lethargy, or incessant anxiety, " ' gradually settling down to gloomy dejection and melancholy; and that, if the " ' prisoner should be aroused from that state, resentment, malignity, and feelings of " ' revenge on society, would be evinced by a repetition of the offence, or the commis- " ' sion of other crimes of still greater moral turpitude. I watched, therefore, with " ' deep solicitude, the progress of the building; and willingly would I have assisted “ ‘ in taking down every stone, and considered such a task a work of benevolence. When the system had been in operation for about six months, I was requested to speak to one of the prisoners, a German, who asserted his innocence of the crime for which he was sentenced. I went, but with reluctance. Since that time I have been to the prison repeatedly, and, as every opportunity was afforded me of doing so, I conversed with many of the prisoners. I have, consequently, become better acquainted with the principles of the Institution, and the effects which it has produced:—these communications have changed my sentiments, and I have since learned to regard the Penitentiary as an institution suggested by the most enlightened and active benevolence, and calculated to produce the happiest results on the moral character and condition of society.’ ”

In addition to these testimonies, we beg to add that of M. Ducpétiaux, the inspector-general of the prisons in Belgium, who is well known for his able works, and indefatigable labours for the improvement of prisons. This gentleman, some time back, visited England, when he examined every department of the Glasgow Bridewell. On his return home, he made such a Report of this Establishment, as to induce the Belgian Government to adopt the plan of individual separation. An additional wing has accordingly been erected, on this principle, at the celebrated National Penitentiary, “the Maison de Force,” at Ghent.

Deeply impressed with the great national benefit which the general introduction of the Separate System is calculated to produce, we cannot refrain from expressing our gratification that the application of the System to prisoners before trial has received the sanction of a Select Committee of the House of Commons, appointed to “consider of the expediency of amending the laws relating to prisons.” That Committee has reported that “it is expedient to provide for the separate confinement of prisoners committed for trial before the Central Criminal Court;” and, although the subsequent recommendations of that Committee, in regard to Newgate, have not been carried into effect, we rejoice to be enabled to state that prisons on the separate plan are likely to be erected in different parts of the kingdom. Among the most gratifying features of the Separate System are its simplicity, and the fact that its efficiency is wholly independent of the size of the gaol, or the number of prisoners to which it is applied. No system of prison discipline that has hitherto been devised admits of such uniform application. The dimensions, furniture, and accommodation of a cell being in all cases the same, individual separation may be enforced in every description of prison, if it be but proportioned to the number of its inmates, from the lock-up house to the most extensive penitentiary. The constant detention and employment of a prisoner in his cell removes the many inconveniencies which have hitherto rendered small gaols so undesirable. Tread-wheels, and other cumbrous machinery for labour, are superseded. The duties of the officer are materially diminished and simplified, and a smaller prison establishment is consequently sufficient for all the purposes of inspection and superintendence. The ordinary attendance on a prisoner consists in giving to him his meals, and in visiting him for purposes connected with his labour. In small gaols, where the number of prisoners would not be sufficient to give full employment to a chaplain, the stated visits of a clergyman resident in the town would, in most cases, secure the requisite degree of religious instruction.

In expressing ourselves thus strongly in favour of the Separate System, we beg to assure your Lordship that we are not unmindful of the obstacles by which it is likely to be encountered, and which arise not only from erroneous conceptions, but also from mistaken views of economy. Unquestionably, the peculiarities of the System render it difficult to adapt ordinary prisons to its discipline at a moderate cost. We are far from undervaluing the importance of this consideration. But although this fact may retard, for a time, the alteration of many existing gaols, we are satisfied that where a new prison is to be erected, the separate principle of construction would not greatly exceed the expense of building an ordinary gaol, and certainly not to such an extent as to form a solid and reasonable ground for objection. The outlay would not be large when compared with the expense incurred in many counties, with more than prodigal profusion for the establishment of worthless systems; nor great, if we estimate the moral, religious, and political blessings which the general establishment of the Separate System would ensure, and the acknowledged and increasing evils from which that System would deliver us.

Much may, however, be done for the prevention of crime in gaols by the gradual introduction of the principle of Separation. The Untried form a class which stands more urgently than any other in need of its influence and protection; and as the advantages of individual separation become known, provision will, we trust, be made in the several county gaols, for keeping prisoners before trial individually apart.

Under any circumstances, we earnestly hope that whenever a new prison is to be erected, or an existing gaol enlarged, the principle of individual separation will be carried into effect.

But it is not in the Gaol alone that the separate confinement of prisoners should be enforced. We are persuaded that, as the importance of individual separation becomes understood, the more general will be the application of its principle, whatever be the nature of the custody in which prisoners are placed. That there are great and manifold evils arising from the association of untried prisoners, besides those which we have described to exist in ordinary gaols, will be evident if we regard the treatment of a prisoner on his first apprehension up to the period of his committal for trial.

And first, as to the Metropolis. A prisoner, on being taken into custody, is, nine times out of ten, conducted to a police station, where the means of separation are so defective, that he may be confined with drunkards, burglars, and pickpockets. With these companions he may pass the night, and also the Sunday, if apprehended on the preceding evening. When brought up to the Police-office, he is taken through the public streets, and at the office he finds a collection from the various stations of some of the worst characters in London, to whom he thus becomes personally known. A case lately occurred of a prisoner being robbed by his fellow prisoners in a lock-up room of one of the Police-offices, where he was detained upwards of five hours, and where nine men and four women were placed together in the same apartment.

If remanded for re-examination, or committed for trial, the prisoner is sent to the gaol in a Van employed for the conveyance of prisoners. There are three of these vans constantly engaged for this purpose. They are 8 feet 4 inches long, 4 feet 5 inches wide, and 5 feet 5½ inches high, and will each conveniently accommodate about 20 prisoners; but upwards of 30 are occasionally conveyed. When the van is thus crowded, men and women are necessarily huddled together: several are obliged to stand, and women sit frequently on the men's knees,—a fact which has been repeatedly witnessed. In summer, the heat and stench are most oppressive; and women, on the arrival of the van at the prison, have been taken out fainting. No officer, either male or female, is inside the van. It can excite no surprise that, under such circumstances, scenes of gross indecency constantly occur. We have ourselves been frequently present when the van has reached the prison, and seen profligate characters, of both sexes, after being thus mingled together, descend from the carriage with clothing not sufficient to cover their nakedness. During the winter, in the afternoon vans, and at all times of the year in the case of those vans which are employed at night, the prisoners are in darkness.

That robberies should occasionally take place in these carriages must, we conceive, be regarded as a matter of course. Some time back a prisoner lost his watch during his conveyance to gaol; and very recently a prisoner, when in the van, had his pocket-book and gloves stolen from him. On the latter occasion it appears that there were thirty-four prisoners in the van, and that many (himself among the number) were consequently obliged to stand up, the prisoners being closely jammed together. On arriving at the gaol he made known his loss, and the articles were found on the person of one of the prisoners who stood next to him. There is, in fact, no means of escape from the most offensive and disgusting associations. Prisoners in a state of the most beastly drunkenness, infected with the itch, covered with vermin, and most obnoxious from their filth and effluvia—the desperate burglar, the notorious pickpocket, the abandoned prostitute, and even the unnatural offender—are here crowded together in the smallest possible space; and among them are not unfrequently prisoners of decent habits accused of trifling offences, servant girls, refractory apprentices, and others creditably brought up and reputably connected.

To be thus thrown into contact with some of the lowest and most infamous of mankind must be sufficiently distressing to any one not altogether lost to every sense of decency; but, in the case of those who are still alive to shame—a servant boy or girl, innocent of the imputed crime, or who has been guilty of a first and trifling offence—the association must be absolutely revolting. The assistant matron of the Clerkenwell Prison has feelingly described to us the dread with which the idea of a conveyance in the van is regarded by any woman of decent habits. We have ourselves seen a servant girl, on entering it, shrink with horror from the ruffians and prostitutes with whom she was about to be shut up; and we can truly say that a more painful scene it has seldom been our lot to witness. It should be observed that one van collects the prisoners from three Police-offices, calling at each in the order of convenience in which they are situated. This occasions a good deal of delay, as the van has frequently to wait a considerable time at each office, sometimes upwards of an hour. It has been stated to us that the eastern afternoon-van—which starts from the Thames Police-office, calls at Lambeth-street office, and then proceeds to Worship-street—is generally three hours before it reaches the Clerkenwell Prison, a distance of about four miles; while the night van, which seldom reaches that gaol until half-past ten or eleven o'clock, is usually two hours in conveying its prisoners. During the detention of the vans at the Police-offices, the time of the prisoners is stated to be most mischievously employed. So terrified are the superior class of female prisoners at this conveyance, that they frequently implore the governor of the Westminster Bridewell to allow them to proceed to the Police-office in any other way.

But the practice of conveying prisoners in vans from the Metropolitan Police-offices to the gaols is not general. From the Mansion-house and Guildhall, prisoners are conducted on foot through one of the most public thoroughfares in the City. At Hatton-garden office the prisoners are also removed in this manner to the Clerkenwell Gaol. The prisoners (women as well as men) are secured in pairs by hand-cuffs, each pair being connected with that preceding it by a chain. The party, which frequently amounts to ten, is thus taken through the streets. The distance in the case of Hatton-garden is not great; but prisoners are conducted to this gaol in the same way, and hand-cuffed, if necessary, longer distances —even from Kensington.

This exposure we deem to be cruel and unjust. The prison-gate is generally thronged by the friends and associates of the parties, and by many idle vagabonds, attracted by curiosity alone. It is not unusual for a prisoner to be remanded three, four, or even five times; every remand, of course, occasioning two removals. Be it remembered that, in this interval, the party is innocent in the eye of the law, and not unfrequently so in point of fact. It is not long since two young women, of good character, domestic servants, were charged with an offence so insignificant that the accuser was ashamed of prosecuting them. They were, however, committed to Clerkenwell prison, conducted and reconducted through the streets, with parties of notorious offenders of both sexes. We ask, my Lord, what reparation can be made to these women for the outrage thus inflicted on their morals, character, and feelings?*

The want of separation, however, is not alone felt in the Station-house, at the Police-office, and in the Prison Van. The means of separation should also be provided for a prisoner during his detention at the place of trial.

In our last Report we had occasion to make some observations on the very faulty arrangements which exist in this respect at the Old Bailey Sessions-house—remarks which are too applicable to the other criminal courts in the Metropolis, where prisoners are collected together without regard to age, character, or the offence with which they are charged. At the Sessions-house, Clerkenwell, the sexes, while awaiting trial, although separate, and attended by an officer, are so closely situated that they can converse.

But it is not in the Metropolis alone that these subjects demand attention. The manner in which prisoners are removed and confined during the periods of holding Assizes and Sessions throughout the country is highly objectionable. When even the gaol is in the same town with that in which the trials take place the arrangements are, in most cases, extremely defective. But when, as is the case in nearly every county, Assizes or Sessions are held occasionally at a distance from the gaol,

* Other evils attend this mode of removing prisoners. Between Hatton-garden-office and the Clerkenwell Prison there are not less than eight public-houses which the prisoners pass, and which afford opportunities for their associates who accompany them to supply them with beer, spirits, tobacco, and other objectionable articles. It is impossible for the officer in charge of the party to prevent these communications. In fact, many have arrived at the prison in a state of excitement evidently arising from liquor procured on the way. In the case of prisoners charged with murder and other atrocious crimes, and brought up to that office, the whole neighbourhood is sometimes kept in agitation for hours before and after the removal of the prisoners. Escapes have occurred.

The Separate System.

the evil is greatly aggravated, and prisoners are too often (at a period when, if ever, they are entitled to indulgence) subjected to privations which are neither consistent with justice nor humanity. They are usually removed in vans, which are open to all the objections which we have just urged. On their arrival in the Assize or Sessions' town they are lodged either in the town gaol (generally insufficient for its local purposes, and therefore quite incapable of affording the requisite accommodation) or they are placed in apartments provided in the Shire-hall or Sessions-house. Numbers are thus crowded together in small, damp, cold, and unventilated apartments. Of six rooms of this description, which we lately inspected, and which are appropriated to prisoners at the periods of trial in one of the largest counties in the kingdom, three only had any aperture (and that of the smallest dimensions), while the remaining three had no opening whatever for the admission of light and air. In one of these places, 15 feet by 14 feet 3 inches, and 7 feet 6 inches in height, we were assured by the keeper of the hall that as many as ten or eleven prisoners had been confined a day and a night, and occasionally for longer periods. When it is considered that, during this confinement, the ordinary regulations for the government of prisoners are suspended—that bedding is seldom furnished—that cleanliness is disregarded—that at night the prisoners do not, in most cases, take off their clothes—and that the want of ventilation is rendered yet more oppressive by the use of tubs as substitutes for privies—we submit to your Lordship that imprisonment of this nature, even for twenty-four hours, is treatment to which an untried prisoner ought not to be subjected. Nor are the moral evils of association a less fit subject for reprobation where the conversation and conduct of the prisoners are thus unrestrained by inspection and discipline, and where the young and inexperienced are certain to receive contamination from the vicious and depraved.

We are of opinion that, in the treatment of prisoners, the principle of separation should be universally applied; and that, in the cases now under consideration, separation might be adopted without incurring any considerable expense. The Prison Van might be fitted up with individual compartments on each side. A sufficient number of separate cells might be provided at the Police-stations, and similar arrangements made at the Shire-halls and Sessions-houses. The separation being required but temporarily, the divisions need be but slight; and, as regards solidity and expense, greatly inferior to the cells necessary to be built in ordinary prisons.

We are aware that it may be said that there are few respectable persons who cannot find bail, and thus avoid many of the evils to which we have felt it our duty to call your Lordship's attention. This is doubtless true, to a certain extent, among the upper and middle ranks of society; but, even of this class, individuals are often committed to gaol, for want of time to make the necessary arrangements for finding sureties. In the humble walks of life, however, the situation of the great majority is such as to render the procuring of bail almost impracticable; while there are thousands of industrious and valuable members of the community who, on being charged with crime, have no alternative whatever but to go to prison. In the cases of offences which are not bailable, the most wealthy are not secure, for a single hour, from experiencing, in their own persons, many of the evils which we have pointed out; and, if there be any who are disposed to treat these subjects with indifference, we would remind such persons, in the language of an eminent Judge, that "no rank or condition of life, no uprightness of heart, no prudence or circumspection of conduct, should teach any man to conclude that he may not, one day or other, be deeply interested in these researches."*

We close this part of our Report, strong in the persuasion of the soundness of our views, and convinced that they are sustained not more by argument than by facts and experience. Whatever be the obstacles against which the system will have to contend, we are satisfied that they must eventually yield to the force of discussion, and the power of truth. We earnestly hope, as well for the honour as the interests of the country, that the day that shall witness its general adoption will not be remote. Other nations, less enlightened and powerful, and of less extended resources, at this time engaged in the amendment of their penal institutions, are adopting this effective system of prison discipline. We trust that England will not incur the reproach of being outstripped in the race of social improvement, but that she may be foremost in the advancement of a measure which is not only closely connected with her own interests, but also with the peace, security, and welfare of mankind.

Prison Construction.

PRISON CONSTRUCTION.

Another important subject which, from its close connexion with the Separate System of Prison Discipline, and from the circumstance of its being hitherto but little considered or understood, has necessarily engaged much of our attention, is the mode of constructing prison cells. It is our object, by means of good construction, to guard, with the greatest possible success, against the carrying on of intercourse between prisoners confined in contiguous apartments. The necessity of this is infinitely more obvious than its difficulty; and of this your Lordship will be able to form a conception, from the following account of the various expedients to which the nearly insurmountable obstacles in our way have compelled us to have recourse.

The restoration of those parts of the Milbank Penitentiary which had been destroyed by the late fire, afforded us an opportunity of constructing large and airy cells both for the separate confinement of prisoners whilst undergoing their sentence, and for the separate treatment of the sick, when under medical care. Parliament having voted a sum of money last session for this purpose, we deemed it our duty to avail ourselves of the opportunity of ascertaining the best mode of effecting so great a public benefit as the separate confinement of prisoners: accordingly, we proposed that Sir Robert Smirke should, in the first instance, construct, in furtherance of this design, and in conformity with our suggestions, two experimental cells. These, upon trial, we found to fail in two important particulars; first, the apertures for ventilation (which were formed after the model of those used in the new County Gaol, or House of Detention, at New York, recently built upon the Separate System) permitted sound to pass so freely, that the prisoners in the adjoining cells were thereby enabled to communicate with each other; and, secondly, the partition wall between the two experimental cells in question was found to admit of the transmission of sound from the one cell to the other, though with considerable difficulty.

Under these circumstances, the Superintending Committee of the General Penitentiary applied for and obtained your Lordship's sanction to make further experiments, with a view to remedy these defects; and, under this sanction, several most important and interesting experiments have been made by us, an Account of which we proceed to submit to your Lordship.

It was not long before we were enabled to devise a mode by which the thorough ventilation of the cells might be so secured, as, at the same time, to prevent the means by which this necessary end was accomplished from becoming a channel through which prisoners in adjoining cells might carry on conversation. But the difficulty of preventing intercommunication still recurred. We consulted several scientific men; amongst whom were Professor Farraday, F. R. S., and Dr. Reid, M. D. F. R. S. E., the latter of whom has recently so successfully directed the alterations in the House of Commons, in reference to ventilating and acoustic arrangements; and to both of these gentlemen we are under great obligations, for the ready courtesy with which they were so good as to afford to us their valuable advice and assistance.

At Professor Farraday's suggestion, we proceeded to erect a series of walls between the two experimental cells already noticed, and we carefully recorded the successive experiments which we made upon each wall, before it was removed to be replaced by another. These experiments are figured in Plate A, figs. 1 to 12.

The partition first erected by Sir Robert Smirke (fig. 1.) consisted of two nine-inch brick walls, worked in cement, with two inches and a quarter space between, filled with sand. This wall, though 20¼ inches thick, permitted the transmission of intelligible sound; that is to say, two persons in these cells, separated by this partition, could, by speaking distinctly and slowly, in a loud tone of voice, make themselves understood by each other.

Professor Farraday's next suggestion was, that the inner surfaces of these walls should be jagged, so as to break up and interrupt the regular propagation of sound. He judged that the effect of this alteration would be, that the irregular surfaces would so disturb the vibrations of that portion of sound which was transmitted through the walls forming the partition, as to render it indistinct and unintelligible. He likewise suggested that there should be a wider intervening space between the walls. We, therefore, in the first instance, removed one of the nine-inch brick walls, as shown in fig. 1, and erected in its stead the 13-inch jagged wall, with a space of five inches between the walls, as shown in Plate A, fig. 2. In this experiment, the whole partition was 27 inches thick; the inner surface of one of the walls of which it was composed being jagged, and the other smooth; thus having an opposite and very irregular action upon the vibrations of sound. This partition-wall we found to be a decided improvement upon the last; for, though intelligible sounds could be transmitted, still the effort required a greater exertion of voice than in the former case, and the fatigue of keeping up a communication became considerable.

I.
Home District.

Prison Construction.

In our third experiment we removed the other nine-inch brick wall, and built in its place a second 13-inch jagged wall, with five inches space between, as shown in Plate A, fig. 3. The whole partition was, in this case, 31 inches thick; the irregular jagged surfaces of the walls which composed it being opposed to each other. Here we found a further improvement; the difficulty of communicating was increased: the efforts of the speaker to make himself understood became quite painful, and could not be kept up for more than a few minutes. Monosyllables alone could be heard, and those only by allowing long intervals between each: words of two or three syllables were confused, and quite unintelligible.

Professor Farraday also recommended that, in addition to the two jagged walls, with space between them, we should try the effect of suspending a curtain, of one or more folds' thickness, between the walls. Our fourth experiment, therefore, consisted in suspending two thicknesses of sail-cloth, hung in loose folds, between the walls, as shown in Plate A, fig. 4. We have the satisfaction of stating that through this partition we could not succeed in transmitting any intelligible sound. We could hear knocking, a shrill whistle, and the mere sound of the voice, though faint and distant; but we did not succeed in discerning any significant sound whatever; though the greatest possible efforts were made by individuals of powerful voice, uttering the shortest and simplest words, and leaving an interval between each, so as to allow the vibration caused by one sound to die away, before the next was uttered. And we have no doubt that it will be a matter of much satisfaction to Professor Farraday to learn that his suggestions, respecting a mode of preventing the transmission of intelligible sound, were attended with a success so complete as that which we obtained by means of the experiment recommended by him.

There are difficulties, however, in the construction of this partition, which would render the adoption of it, in the case contemplated by us, very inexpedient. Much labour would be expended in breaking the bricks, so as to give them the requisite jagged surface. The cost of the materials, and the expense of construction, in addition to the ordinary labour, would be very considerable. The curtain between the walls, being excluded from the external air, and liable to damp, would soon perish. We, therefore, carefully considered in what way we could arrive at the same successful result in a more permanent and less costly shape; and, upon the suggestion of Mr. Bullar, to whose experience, skill, and industry, we have been on many occasions much indebted, we constructed the partition as shown in Plate A, fig. 5, consisting of two nine-inch brick walls, two spaces (three inches and three quarters), and a four-and-a-half-inch brick wall in the middle, which performs the office of a permanent curtain. This partition is 30 inches in thickness, consumes fewer materials, and is considerably less costly than the last (Plate A, fig. 4). Through this partition, also, we failed in our attempts to transmit intelligible sound; and it proved, in every respect, as successful an experiment as the last.

As there was considerable reverberation upon striking either of the outer walls of which the partition is composed, arising from the void spaces between them, we tried, as our next experiment, the filling up of these spaces with sand, as shown in Plate A, fig. 6. This diminished the reverberation; but it appeared to us that the transmission of sound was, though but slightly, rendered more easy. It is possible, however, that the trifling difference which we marked in the two cases was owing to a variation in the state of the atmosphere on the different days on which the experiments were made; so that we are not prepared to say whether it would be more advisable to leave the spaces between the walls void, or to fill them with sand.

In all the foregoing experiments the material of which the walls were composed was brick; but as, in some places, stone is more abundant, and cheaper than that article, we deemed it advisable to submit to the test of experiment a partition composed of stone. Our next experiment, therefore, was to construct a partition consisting of two walls of Bath stone, each five inches thick, with a void space of

I.

Prison Construction.

12 inches between, as in Plate A, fig. 7. Intelligible sound passed through this with more facility than through any of the previous partitions; although a great deal of exertion of voice, and much management, were necessary to maintain anything approaching to conversation. We next had the void space filled up with sand, as shown in Plate A, fig. 8; and though, in this case, we found that the sound was less easily transmitted than when the interval was void, still the difference was very immaterial.

The partition which formed our last experiment was composed of two walls of Bath Stone, each five inches in thickness, having between them two void spaces (four inches and a half each), and a wall of York Stone three inches thick in the middle, as shown in Plate A, figs. 9 and 10: the spaces we subsequently caused to be filled with sand. This proved to be a great improvement upon the last (figs. 7 and 8), but was still decidedly inferior to the experiments indicated by figs. 4 and 5.

By your Lordship's direction, Sir Robert Smirke has constructed six cells upon the plans proposed by us; and in three of those cells he has used Portland Stone in the construction of the walls which compose the partitions between them. Each of these walls is five inches in thickness, with 12 inches' space between them, as shown in Plate A, fig. 11. In the partitions of the other three cells, Portland Stone has been employed; each of the walls being five inches in thickness, having between them two spaces of three inches and three quarters, and a brick wall, four inches and a half thick, in the middle; as shown in Plate A, fig. 12. These last-mentioned walls are exceedingly good; but our experiments prove that Brick is more of a non-conductor of sound than Stone.

In giving this short narrative of the different results of the experiments which we have made, and which we consider important, as conveying information and faithfully recording facts with reference to the transmission of sound, (a subject which has been but little experimented upon, at least with the precise view and under the peculiarly advantageous circumstances under which our experiments were made,) it has been our endeavour and design, simply and accurately to register those results which passed under our own observation, without any attempt at scientific or technical description. And it will afford us much gratification if our experience in this case (of which we have here given a faithful account) shall be found to supply any additional information upon a subject so interesting in itself, so useful in its practical application, and which may prove valuable to those who are better qualified than ourselves to apply it. But, so far as our own object has been concerned, (the construction of a separate cell,) we have arrived at this important conclusion:—that any one of those partitions which we have caused to be constructed renders the communication so extremely difficult, that, for all practical purposes, entire separation is secured; and all attempts at intercommunication are rendered hopeless by the almost insurmountable barrier which these partitions present against the transmission of sound, and which would render any attempt to communicate, on the part of the prisoners, an effort at once so painful and exhausting, that the agent would feel the continued exertion of it almost as a punishment. Besides, it is to be borne in mind that, whilst the sound is thus with difficulty transmitted from cell to cell, it passes freely to the passage or corridor adjoining, in which the officer on duty is stationed; so that the very effort of one prisoner to communicate with another, insures his detection; whilst, by knocking on his door, the prisoner can, on any emergency, apprize the officer in attendance of his wants. Thus have we at once (that which is most important in a prison) facility of communication with the officer on duty, and extreme difficulty of communication with the prisoners in adjoining cells, together with the complete discouragement of any attempt at clandestine communication, by the certainty of immediate detection: and it is a most important feature in the Separate System of prison discipline, that, whilst few officers and little inspection are necessary, that inspection is rendered thoroughly efficient.

We have carefully watched over these experiments, and minutely inspected the cells which have been constructed in the Milbank Penitentiary; and we are of opinion that they are decidedly better prison apartments than any that have hitherto been erected in this or any other country. The remaining works may be completed on the same plan: but we beg explicitly to state to your Lordship, that in the erection of other prisons, or in the alteration of those now existing, we do not intend that the Milbank cells should be regarded as exact models for imitation. The form of these cells, and several other particulars in their construction, were dictated rather by the structure of the building, as we found it, than by our own judgment of its propriety, which we were obliged to sacrifice to the necessity of the case. We have endeavoured to point out the principles upon which such cells ought to be constructed; but, in the details, the Milbank cells do not precisely coincide with our opinion of what the case requires. The mode of ventilation for these cells, which circumstances have compelled us to adopt, is objectionable, in some particulars, with reference to communication: though taking into consideration the circumstances of this Penitentiary, it is sufficiently good for all practical purposes; and, as a means of keeping the cell airy and pure, all that could be desired. For these reasons, then, we have given in this Report a detailed plan, and full description of a prison cell, for the purpose of separate confinement (Plate M, page 32), and to that we beg leave to refer your Lordship for full and accurate information as to our views and ideas on this subject.

We have also prepared a statement of the general principles which we think should be observed in the construction and arrangement of a prison (page 24). And in a series of plans we have shown those which we consider to be the best forms in which these various particulars should be arranged; commencing with a gaol for only four prisoners, adapted to the small boroughs which have received the grant of Quarter Sessions; and proceeding, by regular gradations, up to a gaol for 500 prisoners—a number which we regard as quite the maximum, which, under the operation of the Separate System, is likely to be congregated in any single gaol in the kingdom, and which is perhaps as large as can be advantageously confined at one time in any one prison.

We have devoted much time and attentive consideration to the subject of prison construction: there are so many places in which new prisons are likely to be built, and some of them so very important, that we have considered it indispensably necessary to obtain the fullest information which it has been in our power to acquire; and here again we have to acknowledge our obligations to Mr. Bullar for the plans which he has prepared upon the principles suggested by us.

These designs have been framed with much care, and we believe will be found to be very valuable: but in adapting our principles to the many alterations in the existing gaols which are at present contemplated by the magistrates, and in the preparation of plans for new prisons, we hope to derive much benefit from the hints which we doubt not will be suggested by the many skilful and intelligent architects in various parts of the kingdom, whose attention will be directed to prison construction;—a subject at present but little understood.

We have given much consideration also to the best and most effectual means of ventilating and warming prison buildings. We have conferred upon this subject with several scientific and practical men, and have collected much information with reference to it. In the construction of a new prison, we should strongly recommend the application of that principle of ventilation which has been so successfully introduced into the House of Commons, and which is also acted upon in mines, and manufactories, with uniform and complete success. We have briefly defined our mode of application in the description of a prison cell (page 32), and have figured the air-drains in Plate M. But we shall be prepared, at no distant period, to place before your Lordship full and accurate plans and details with reference to the subject both of Ventilation and Warming. In the meantime, we shall be ready to confer with those who may be at present contemplating either the construction or the alteration of prisons; and glad to afford all the assistance and information upon either subject which our inquiries may enable us to give.

GENERAL PRINCIPLES TO BE OBSERVED IN THE ARRANGEMENT AND CONSTRUCTION OF PRISONS.

The selection of an eligible site for a new prison is an object of the first importance. The situation should be healthy, open, and calculated to secure a free circulation of good air. It is highly objectionable for a prison to be surrounded with buildings of any description: for this reason, a position detached or isolated, as far as may be, ought to be chosen. Attention is also requisite to the proximity of the gaol to the offices and courts of justice, so as to facilitate the removal of prisoners before or after trial. It is necessary that the situation should be open and airy, as there must be an extensive sub-division of the internal parts, to provide for the confinement of each prisoner in a separate cell. The site should also be dry, and the surface free from any injurious effects of marshy or damp soils: this is essential, on account of the limited space in which prisoners are to be placed for lengthened periods, under restricted habits, combined with constant occupation; and also from the peculiar construction of the buildings—comprising many solid walls, composed of materials liable to absorb moisture—with stone floors, staircases, &c.—all of which will require frequent washing to preserve cleanliness. An elevated situation is also desirable, in order that the prisoners may be exempted from the noxious effects of fogs, which are prevalent on low flat surfaces, or in the vicinity of rivers: the same precautions will also be requisite to secure the buildings against inundation, and the consequent injury of the foundations or drainage. The site of the prison should be elevated, so that no part of the interior may be exposed to view from the adjacent grounds: the buildings should, therefore, be secluded from external observation, to prevent any secret means of communication from without, and to render the prison secure against attempts to assist the prisoners in escaping: by these means, also, the most perfect system of ventilation may be introduced.

The plot of ground to be appropriated must be enclosed with a strong boundary wall, of sufficient height to preclude escape, and prevent the interior from being overlooked. The external wall should present an even surface on both sides; but if, from its height or extent, it is considered necessary to strengthen it, by adding piers or buttresses, the angles of all such projections must be splayed or rounded, so as to prevent any person from climbing the wall by means thereof; and, for the same reason, the stone coping, or other finishing on the top of the wall, should not overhang in such a manner as to admit of a rope being attached to the projecting part.

By adopting the radiating form for the prisoners' buildings, a considerable portion of the boundary may be brought into view from the central station intended to be occupied by the officers; an arrangement which will render the interior more secure than by having intermediate enclosures. Beyond the boundary-wall a clear open space should be left round the outside (not less than 30 feet in width), in order that no erections of any kind may be placed against the external enclosure. The buildings to be occupied by the prisoners must not adjoin, or be connected with, the boundary-wall, but a wide open space is to be preserved round the interior. There should be only one gateway, or opening, in the boundary, to form the general entrance to the prison; this is to be placed in front, and opposite the central building, having a wide corridor or passage leading in a direct line thereto.

At the entrance to the prison, dwelling-houses should be provided for the residence of the governor and the chaplain; but these buildings should be placed on the outside of the boundary-wall, in order that the families of these officers may be so far removed or separated from the interior, as that their visits or presence may not interfere with the general discipline and regulations.

In arranging the buildings within the boundary, intended to be occupied by the prisoners, the grand requisites are security; the means of inspection; facility of access to the several departments; the individual separation of each offender by day and by night, by the provision of a sufficient number of cells, the particular construction of which should preclude all communication between the prisoners, and at the same time combine adequate space with proper means of ventilation, to ensure their health, and admit of continued labour or employment. It should, therefore, be a primary object to secure the most effectual separation of each individual, and to provide that the means of constant and unobserved inspection over the whole Establishment may be exercised by the officers to the fullest extent. For this purpose, the prisoners' buildings should be so arranged that the interior may be under close observation from a central station to be assigned to the governor or keeper, and his assistants; contiguous to which should also be the magistrates' room and the clerk's office. From this central position there should be immediate access to the cells, in order that the prisoners may be, at all times, subject to inspection. The central station should also be so connected with the corridors or galleries into which the cells open, that the daily provisions, materials for work, &c., may be distributed with order and facility; and, by similar means of convenience, prisoners are to be brought into, or removed from, the cells, without risk of communication: visits may also be made to the untried, by their relatives or legal advisers, without interfering with the general business or discipline of the prison. The chapel, in which the prisoners are to assemble daily for religious worship and instruction, should also be contiguous to the central building, in order that the prisoners may have ready and convenient means of access thereto.

I.

Prison Construction.

The important objects which have been enumerated may be attained by observing the arrangements in the form and construction of prisons which are shown in the plans accompanying these remarks, and to which particular attention is directed in order to elucidate the position of the various apartments, which will be hereafter more particularly described.

In forming the Design for a new prison the radiating plan should be adopted as a general outline; it having been found, from experience, that the various purposes of inspection, facility of access, convenience, and security, cannot be obtained so completely in any multiplied form of building, as those which diverge from a central point of observation.*

The general entrance to the prison should be from an enclosed court-yard, between the houses of the governor and the chaplain. On passing through the inner gate in the boundary-wall, there should be a strong arched lobby, containing the gatekeeper's or turnkey's room on one side, with a sleeping-room adjoining; on the other side of the lobby a private staircase (for the use of the chaplain, magistrates, &c.) should be placed to ascend to the chapel on the upper story. Beyond the entrance-lobby, secured with iron gates, a wide corridor or passage should conduct to the central building: on each side of this passage, rooms should be provided for the use of the matron, surgeon, and superintendents, or assistant officers, with two large apartments at the end of the passage next the centre, one of which should be appropriated for the use of the visiting magistrates, and the other for the clerk's office. These two apartments should look into the central observatory, and also command a view of the corridors leading to the prisoners' cells. At the other end of the passage, next the entrance, a staircase should go down to the basement story, in which are to be the reception-cells for prisoners on their first admission. (These cells are more particularly described hereafter.) The central hall or observatory is intended for the principal station of the officers during the day, and also of the inspectors at night: this should be a large building, of semicircular form, and into which the corridors or passages should enter from the several ranges of cell-buildings to be occupied by the prisoners. These buildings should radiate from the centre towards the external boundaries, and be equidistant from each other: by this arrangement the interior of each corridor will be seen from the same point of view, and the courts or areas between the buildings will also be overlooked from the central station. The corridors should run longitudinally through the radiating buildings; and the cells, being ranged on each side, should open into them, so that the officers may have immediate access to the prisoners. The observatory, and also the corridors, should be open the whole height, from the ground floor to the roof, to admit light and air, and facilitate the ventilation and inspection of the interior. At the end of each corridor a small staircase should be fixed to lead to the cells on the upper stories; and there should also be staircases from the central hall to the galleries round it. The cell-buildings should be two or three stories high, or may be more if requisite, according to the number of prisoners to be accommodated.

The general dimensions of the cells should be each 12 feet by 8 feet, and 10 feet high, or so as to contain about 1,000 cubical feet. All the cells should be fitted up for the purpose of separate confinement, and so as to prevent any communication between the prisoners. To secure this object the partition-walls between the cells should not be less than 24 inches in thickness, composed of two nine-inch walls, with at least six inches space between them, and so constructed as to preclude, as far as may be practicable, the transmission of sound from cell to cell. The ceilings are to be arched, and paved over to form the floors above. Each cell should have double doors; the inner one, next the cell, to be in two thicknesses, with iron plating between, and an aperture should be formed therein for inspection. The window-frames should be of wrought iron, placed close to the ceiling, and not to exceed five inches in height, and glazed with unpolished glass. Each cell should be fitted up with an iron soil-pan, about 18 inches high, with valve and close cover (on the best principle), large soil-pipe to run through the external wall, with head outside, and upright pipe to go into the drain below the surface. A small washing-sink should also be fixed in each cell, with waste-pipe to run into the soil-pan; the water to be laid on to each sink and pan, with strong service-pipe and cocks, from

* The number of radiating buildings may be reduced or increased from those shown in the plans referred to according to the number of prisoners to be provided for; care being taken in arranging them that the length of each building is not extended so far as to preclude complete inspection from the centre.

a cistern or reservoir to be fixed in the roof. The platform for the bed should be fixed in the wall, formed of oak-plank, on strong bearers. (For a more particular description of the proposed construction and manner of fitting up the cells vide details of the plan, sections, and elevations, at large, Plate M, page 32.)

The Cells on the upper stories should be arranged in a similar manner to those below, with the exception that, at the end of each radiating building, two cells may be laid together to form larger apartments to be used as infirmaries for such prisoners as may have infectious disorders, which require their removal from the ordinary cells. This provision will, it is considered, render it unnecessary to have a separate building for an hospital or infirmary.

The upper cells should be entered from iron galleries, about two feet six inches wide, fixed along the sides of the corridors, with iron hand-rails and banisters. Similar galleries should be continued round the central observatory, to enable the prisoners to go to the chapel in small divisions.

The Chapel should adjoin the central building, and extend to the front; where there should be a private staircase, near the entrance lobby, for the use of the Chaplain, Magistrates, or Visiters, &c.; a small room for the Chaplain should be provided on the upper landing, with a water-closet. The pulpit, desk, and officers' pews, should be in the front part. During the time of assembling the prisoners for religious worship and instruction, individual separation and vigilant inspection should be invariably maintained. Each offender should, therefore, be placed in a distinct stall, or sitting, within the view and control of the officers, and under the close observation of the Chaplain. Each row of seats should rise above the one before it; the prisoners in the back sittings should go to them by separate staircases, which may be placed over the side passages leading to the front sittings; by these means several distinct entrances may be formed to the Chapel.

One or more of the radiating buildings should be appropriated exclusively for the reception of female prisoners, according to the numbers for whom accommodation is to be provided.

On their first entrance, prisoners should be placed in reception-cells previously to being examined, by the surgeon or other officers, as to their state of health, cleanliness, clothing, &c. For these purposes, suitable rooms and cells should be fitted up on the basement-story, in that part of the building which is between the entrance and the centre. It will be necessary to provide a cleansing-room, fitted up with bath and copper; a fumigating-room, fitted up with oven, for drying and purifying the clothes of prisoners who may be in a diseased or dirty condition; a room for clothing the prisoners in the gaol dress, and another in which to deposit their own clothes until their discharge; with several reception-cells, which may also be used for night-charges, disorderly persons, or those committed for re-examination.

That part of the basement-story which is under the central building should contain the general kitchen for the service of the prison, with the wash-house and laundry adjoining; the latter to be under the building appropriated for the women: in this should also be provided separate reception-cells for females, with a cleansing-room and clothing-rooms. Part of the basement story, under the other radiating buildings, may be fitted up for servants' rooms, scullery, pantry, bread-room, store-rooms, and cellars. Separate cells should also be provided, in the basement-story of each building, for the punishment of refractory or hardened offenders, and such as are sentenced to close confinement in solitude. The windows of these cells should be constructed with iron blinds, to exclude the light when required. In order that the basement story may be rendered perfectly dry, and be well ventilated, a wide area should be formed round the same. The floor ought not to be more than three feet below the surface of the ground; and, to gain the necessary height for the rooms, the level of the ground floor should be five or six feet above the surface.

By the arrangement of the prison on the radiating plan, a large court, or area, will be formed next to each of the buildings; and these courts, together with the open space surrounding the whole, will secure a free circulation of air, and contribute to the salubrity of the interior. Part of the intermediate space between the buildings may be enclosed with iron-railed fences, in order to its being appropriated for airing-grounds whenever the same may be requisite.

The mode of construction to be observed, and the materials to be used, in the component parts of the several buildings, should secure their being fire-proof. Great consideration should also be paid to the interior of the cells. They should at all times be well ventilated, and warmed in winter, by flues or pipes, in the most effectual manner.

As the prison-buildings will be, in a great measure, secluded from public observation by the surrounding enclosure, the use of ornament or embellishment in the exterior is not requisite. The style of architecture should be in character with the designation of the structure: the front elevation of the entrance-buildings should therefore be plain, bold, and appropriate, but divested of all unnecessary and expensive decoration.

No. 1, Plate B.—Plan for a small Gaol, to contain Four Prisoners in separate Cells, on the ground floor; or Eight if Two Stories high.

The keeper's dwelling-house in front comprises an entrance passage, office, parlour, and bedroom, with a staircase leading to the basement story: this contains the kitchen and the wash-house (the latter to be fitted up with a bath, in order to its being used as a cleansing-room for prisoners when required), a store-room and water-closet. A sleeping-room for a servant may be formed in the roof. The prisoners' cells are in the rear of the keeper's house, and are ranged on each side of a corridor, or passage, 14 feet wide. This corridor may also be used for the performance of religious services. Each cell is intended to be 12 feet by 8 feet, and 10 feet high in the clear; the ceiling is to be arched in brick-work. The partition walls between the cells to be formed of sufficient thickness to prevent the prisoners from communicating together; and the interior of each cell to be constructed and fitted up for the purpose of separate confinement, in the same manner as is particularly described in reference to the plan, sections, &c., of a cell at large (vide page 32, Plate M).

The building will be surrounded on three sides by a space of ground 20 feet wide, part of which (in the rear) may be appropriated for an airing-court. The whole to be enclosed by a boundary wall at least 15 feet high above the surface.

By adding another story of cells, to form an upper floor, this plan may be adapted for eight prisoners; the upper cells to be entered from an iron gallery fixed on each side of the corridor, which is intended to be open the whole height, from the ground floor to the roof, to admit light and air. In this case, also, three chambers may be formed over the dwelling-house in front, for the use of the keeper's family; and this arrangement will admit of one of the apartments on the ground floor being appropriated for the use of the visiting magistrates, chaplain, or surgeon.

No. 2, Plate C.—Plan for a small Gaol, to contain Twelve Prisoners in separate Cells, on Two Stories.

This design is on a similar principle to No. 1, but the cell building is extended in the rear, and is intended to be two stories high, containing six cells on each floor. The keeper's dwelling-house, in front, contains on the ground floor a parlour, kitchen, magistrates' room, and office, with staircases to the upper and lower floors. The basement story to contain a wash-house, cleansing-room, (fitted up with bath,) store-room, and cellar; also a reception-cell for prisoners who may be found, on admission, to be in an unfit state to be placed in the other cells. The chamber story will contain three bed-rooms for the keeper and his family. The end wings over the magistrates' room and kitchen are not intended to be carried up on the chamber floor.

The prisoners' cells, in the rear, are ranged on each side of a corridor, or passage, 14 feet wide, which is intended to be open the whole height from the ground floor to the roof, to admit light and ventilation. The cells on the upper floor to be entered from a gallery, on each side, of open iron-work. The corridor may also be used for the performance of religious services by the chaplain.

Each cell is intended to be 12 feet by 8 feet, and 10 feet high in the clear; the ceiling to be arched in brick-work. The partition walls between the cells to be formed of sufficient thickness to prevent the prisoners from communicating together; and the interior of each cell to be constructed and fitted up for the purpose of separate confinement, in the same manner as is particularly described, in reference to the plan, sections, &c., of a cell at large (vide page 32, Plate M).

The building to be surrounded on three sides by a space of ground; part of which (in the rear) may be appropriated for an airing-court. The whole to be enclosed by a boundary wall 15 feet high above the surface.

By extending the building in the rear, and thereby increasing the number of cells, this plan may be adapted for the accommodation of either 16, 20, or 24 prisoners, in separate cells; and, for either of these cases, the dwelling-house and offices in front will not, it is considered, require any enlargement.

No. 3, Plate D.—Plan for a small Gaol, to contain 22 Prisoners in separate Cells, on Two Stories.

In this design the cells are placed round three sides of a central hall, the dwelling-house and offices in front forming the other side of the same. The arrangement of the keeper's house is nearly similar to that of the former plan, (No. 2,) and there will be the same number of rooms on each floor: the end wings, over the magistrates' room and kitchen, are not intended to be carried up on the chamber floor.

In consequence of the large area formed in the centre, the prisoners' cells are placed at a greater distance from each other than in the plans Nos. 1 and 2. There will be two stories of cells, with a gallery round the central hall, from which the upper cells are to be entered. This hall may also be used for the performance of religious services by the chaplain.

The dimensions of the cells are intended to be the same as those described in the former plans, with the exception of the two angular cells on each story, which will be about 14 feet square; these may be used as infirmaries. The construction and fitting up of each cell to be agreeably to the descriptive particulars, in reference to the plan, section, &c., of a cell at large (vide page 32, Plate M).

The building is surrounded on three sides by a space of ground, and the whole is intended to be enclosed by a boundary wall 16 feet high above the surface.

No. 4, Plate E.—Plan for a small Gaol, or House of Correction, to contain 36 Prisoners in separate Cells, on Two Stories; or 54, if Three Stories high

The principle of this design is similar to that of No. 2, it being considered the most economical form of building, in point of expense, occupying less space than any other, and being very convenient in its general arrangements.

The dwelling-house in front contains, on the ground floor, the keeper's parlour, kitchen, and store-closet, magistrates' room, office, and water-closet. The basement story to contain the prison-kitchen, wash-house, cleansing-room, clothing-room, store-room, and privy. The officers' sleeping-rooms to be on the upper floor, comprising three rooms in the centre part, as the side buildings are not intended to be carried up.

The cell building in the rear to be two stories high; the cells being ranged on each side of a corridor or passage, 14 feet wide, which is intended to be open the whole height from ground floor to roof, to admit light and ventilation, as well as to facilitate the inspection of the interior. The cells on the uppper story to be entered from a gallery, on each side, of open iron-work.

The corridor may be used for the performance of religious services by the chaplain.

The dimensions of the cells are intended to be similar to those in plan No. 2; and the construction and fitting-up of each to be agreeably to the descriptive particulars, in reference to the plan, section, &c., of a cell at large (vide page 32, Plate M).

The building is surrounded on three sides by a space of ground 20 feet wide; and the whole is to be enclosed by a boundary wall 16 feet high above the surface.

No. 5, Plate F.—Plan for a Gaol, or House of Correction, to contain 64 Prisoners in separate Cells, on Two Stories; or 96, if Three Stories high.

This design is different in its arrangement from the foregoing plans, in order to obtain increased cell-room, combined with the central station for the officers, &c. The main building is placed nearly in the centre of the ground, which forms a parallelogram, having its greatest extent in front. The governor or keeper's house forms the entrance to the prison, in front, but it projects before the boundary wall, with a view that the officer's family may not unnecessarily interfere with the internal arrangements. On entering the passage from the central gate in the boundary wall, is the turnkey's room; and on the other side a staircase, leading down to the examination and cleansing-room in the basement story. There are also four cells next the entrance-passage for prisoners received at night, or for re-examination; beyond these is the magistrates' room and the office, both of which apartments are in the central position, and command a view of the corridors which run through the building longitudinally, and into which the cells open on each side. In the rear part of the centre building is the chapel, intended to be fitted up with separate sittings; the prisoners in the upper story of cells to sit in a gallery level with the same. The cell-buildings are to be two stories high, except the part in front. The upper part of the central building, towards the front, may be appropriated as infirmaries for prisoners who have infectious disorders, which require their removal from the ordinary cells.

The cells are ranged on each side of the corridors, which are intended to be open the whole height, from the ground floor to roof, in order to admit light and air, and facilitate the inspection of the interior. The upper cells to be entered from galleries fixed along the sides of the corridors. The dimensions of the cells are 12 feet by 8 feet each, and 10 feet high in the centre; the ceiling to be arched in brick-work, with paving over, to form the floor. The construction and fitting-up of each cell to be agreeably to the descriptive particulars, in reference to the plan, section, &c., of a cell at large (vide page 32, Plate M).

The basement story, under the centre part, to contain the general kitchen, with wash-house and laundry, pantry, and store-room. The part under the front wing to contain an examination and cleansing-room, with bath, fumigatory, and store-room for clothing.

The building is surrounded by a space of ground 40 feet wide; and the whole is to be enclosed by a boundary wall 16 feet high above the surface.

The keeper's house, in front, to have a basement story, and also a story over the ground-floor, with sleeping-rooms; but neither of these is to communicate with the prison buildings in the rear.

Construction.

No. 6, Plate G.—Plan for a Gaol, or House of Correction, to contain 100 Prisoners in separate Cells, on Two Stories ; or 150, if Three Stories high.

This design, although similar in its general principles to that last described, possesses great advantages, in its capability of accommodation, by the introduction of another wing-building in the rear.

At the entrance in front, projecting before the boundary wall, are two convenient dwelling-houses, intended for the residence of the governor and chaplain, in order that the families of these officers may be removed, so as not to interfere unnecessarily with the internal arrangements of the prison.

An enclosed court leads to the prison entrance, on passing the gate of which is the turnkey's room, and on the other side of the passage is a staircase leading to the basement story ; beyond these are four reception-cells, for night-charges, or prisoners for re-examination; next the centre is the magistrates' room and the office, both of which apartments command a view of the corridors into which the cells open. The central building is also formed into an observatory, or inspection-hall, intended as the principal station for the officers, and from this the three wing-buildings radiate at equal distances ; these contain the cells, which are ranged on each side of the corridors. The cells are to be two stories high; but the corridors and observatory are intended to be open the whole height from the ground floor to the roof, to admit light and air, and facilitate the inspection of the interior. A small staircase in each corridor leads to the upper story of cells, which are to be entered from galleries fixed along the sides of the corridors ; and the same to be continued round the observatory, to form the passage-way to the chapel in front.

The cells on the upper story will be similar to those below, except that, at the end of each wing-building, two cells are intended to be laid together, to form infirmaries for prisoners who may have infectious disorders, or require to be removed from the ordinary cells.

The wing-building in the rear is proposed to be appropriated for the female prisoners.

The dimensions of the cells are the same as those in the last plan. The mode of construction and fitting-up of each cell to be agreeably to the descriptive particulars, in reference to the plan, section, &c., of a cell at large (vide page 32, Plate M).

The chapel is intended to be over the part in the front wing, extending from the centre building to the boundary wall; to be fitted up with separate sittings, and each row of seats to rise above that in front. A private staircase to go to the chapel from the entrance-passage, and a small room for the chaplain to be made on the landing. The basement story, under the wing in front, to contain an examination-room for male prisoners, cleansing-room, (to be fitted up with bath and copper,) fumigatory, (with oven,) and store-room for prisoners' clothing. The part under the central building to contain the general kitchen, pantry, bread and store rooms, with a wash-house and laundry adjoining to and connected with the womens' department in the rear; also a cleansing-room for females, and reception-cells, to be formed under a part of the same building.

The two dwelling-houses in front, for the governor and chaplain, are to have a basement story, ground floor (as per plan), and chambers on the upper story.

The boundary wall encloses a space of 40 feet beyond the ends of the radiating wings, and affords a large area between each of the buildings.

No. 7, Plate H.—Plan for a Gaol, or House of Correction, to contain 150 Prisoners in separate Cells, on two Stories ; or 220, if Three Stories high.

This design is very similar, in its general arrangement, to No. 6 ; but, in order to afford more space round the centre building, the radiating wings are receded from the same, having connecting passages the width of the corridors.

On each side of the entrance in front is a convenient dwelling-house, projecting before the boundary wall ; one of these houses is intended for the residence of the governor or keeper, and the other for the chaplain, in order that the families of these officers may be removed, so as not to interfere unnecessarily with the internal arrangements of the prison.

On passing through the prison gate, in the boundary wall, is an enclosed lobby, containing the turnkey's room ; and across the lobby is a staircase leading to the chapel on the upper floor, and also to the basement story. Beyond the entrance lobby is a range of rooms for the matron, surgeons, and male and female superintendents; also the magistrates' room and office near the centre, both of which apartments command a view of the corridors, into which the cells open.

The central building forms an observatory or inspection-hall, intended as the principal station for the officers ; and from this centre the three wing-buildings radiate, which contain the prisoners' cells, ranged along the sides of the corridors. The cells are to be two stories high ; but the corridors and observatory are intended to be open the whole height from the ground floor to the roof, to admit light and air, and facilitate the inspection of the interior. A small staircase in each corridor leads to the upper story of cells, which are to be entered from galleries fixed along the sides of the corridors; and the same to be continued round the observatory, to form passage-ways to the chapel in front.

The cells on the upper floor will be similar to those below, except that, at the end of each building, two cells are intended to be laid together, to form infirmaries for prisoners who may have infectious disorders, or require to be removed from the ordinary cells. The wing-building in the rear is proposed to be appropriated for the female prisoners.

Prison Construction.

The dimensions of the cells are 12 feet by 8 feet each, and 10 feet high in the centre; the ceilings to be arched in brick-work, with paving over to form the floors. The particular mode of construction and fitting-up of each cell to be agreeable to the description in reference to the plan, section, &c., of a cell at large (vide page 32, Plate M). The chapel is intended to be over the part in the front wing, extending from the centre building to the boundary wall. A small room for the chaplain to be made on the landing from the private staircase next the entrance lobby. The chapel to be fitted up with separate sittings, and each row of seats to rise above that in front.

The basement story, between the boundary-wall and centre, to contain four reception-cells for male prisoners, night-charges, and re-examination cases; cleansing-room with bath and copper, fumigatory with oven, and store-room for clothing.

The basement under the central observatory to contain the general kitchen, with a wash-house and laundry adjoining, the latter rooms being connected with the women's department; also a cleansing-room for females, clothing-room, and two reception-cells, to be formed under a part of the building occupied by the women; adjoining the kitchen to be a pantry, bread and store rooms, and cellars.

The two dwelling-houses in front, for the governor and chaplain, are to have a basement story, ground floor (as per plan), and chambers on the upper story.

By adding another or third story of cells over the three wing-buildings, this plan may be made to accommodate 220 prisoners.

No. 8, Plates I and K.—Plan for a Gaol, House of Correction, or Penitentiary, to contain 200 Prisoners in separate Cells, on Two Stories; or 300, if Three Stories high.

On each side of the entrance in front is a convenient dwelling-house, projecting before the boundary wall; one of these houses is intended for the residence of the governor or keeper, and the other for the chaplain, in order that the families of these officers may be removed, so as not to interfere unnecessarily with the internal arrangement of the prison.

On passing through the central gate in the boundary wall the prison is entered by an enclosed lobby, containing the turnkey's room, with a sleeping-room adjoining; on the other side of the entrance a staircase (for the use of the officers) leads to the chapel on the upper floor. Beyond the entrance lobby is a wide passage, on each side of which are rooms for the matron, surgeon, and male and female superintendents, with two large apartments at the end, one for the magistrates, and the other for the office; these command a view of the central observatory and corridors. The central observatory, intended as the principal station for the officers, is a large semicircular hall, into which the corridors or passages enter from the four ranges of cell-buildings occupied by the prisoners. These buildings radiate from the centre, and are equidistant from each other, so that the interior of each corridor can be seen from the same point of view. The prisoners' cells are placed on each side of the corridor, and open into it.

The cell-buildings are two stories high, but the corridors and observatory are intended to be open the whole height, from the ground floor to the roof, to admit light and air, and facilitate the ventilation and inspection of the interior. At the end of each corridor a small staircase leads to the upper story of cells, and there are staircases from the central hall to the gallery above.

The cells on the upper story are similar to those below, with the exception that, at the end of each building, two cells are to be laid together, to form infirmaries for prisoners who may have infectious disorders, or require to be removed from the ordinary cells. The upper cells are to be entered from iron galleries fixed along the sides of the corridors, and the same to be continued round the central observatory, to enable the prisoners to go to the chapel in small companies, there being four separate entrances to it.

The chapel is intended to be fitted up with separate sittings, and each row of seats to rise above that in front. The pulpit, desk, and officers' pews are next the front, with a small room for the chaplain on the landing from private staircase.

It is proposed that one of the four wing-buildings should be appropriated for the female prisoners.

A staircase near the entrance leads to the basement story, which contains reception-cells for male prisoners, also those for re-examination and night charges; a cleansing-room with bath and copper, fumigatory with oven, and store-room for clothing. The part under the central observatory to contain the general kitchen, with the wash-house and laundry adjoining, the latter rooms being connected with the women's department; also a cleansing-room for females, clothing-room, and two or more reception-cells; these to be formed under a part of the building occupied by the women. Adjoining the kitchen are servants' rooms, pantry, bread and store rooms.

The general dimensions of the cells are 12 feet by 8 feet each, and 10 feet high in the centre; the ceiling to be arched in brick-work, with stone paving over to form the floor. Each cell is intended to be fitted up for the purpose of separate confinement, and to prevent any communication between the prisoners; the partition walls must therefore be constructed so as to preclude the transmission of sounds: this object will be best effected by having two walls, each nine inches thick, with a space between, about six inches wide, filled with sand (vide plans and description at large, of separate cells, page 32, Plate M). The iron window to be placed close under the ceiling, and to be only one pane high, not exceeding five inches. Each cell to have double doors; the inner one to be lined with iron plating, and a beveled aperture formed therein for inspection. A water-closet to be fixed in each cell, consisting of iron pan, with valve and cover; large soil-pipe, with cistern-head outside the wall; the pipe to go down into a drain below the surface. Washing sink to be fixed in side wall, and the water laid on to serve the sink and pan, with strong pipe from reservoir or lead cistern in roof. Platform for bed, of three-inch oak, to be fixed in wall.

By adding another or third story of cells over the four wing-buildings, this plan may be made to accommodate 300 prisoners.

No. 9, Plate L.—Plan for a Gaol, House of Correction, or Penitentiary, to contain 500 Prisoners in separate Cells, on Three Stories.

In this design the front wing-building is extended in length, in order that the central building may be placed nearer the middle of the ground. This alteration will admit of several cells being made in the front or entrance wing (besides various apartments for the officers); these may be used as reception-cells, or for prisoners committed for re-examination, &c. There are five wing-buildings in this plan (instead of four, as in the design No. 8), and these being placed at equal distances from each other, there will be more space between them than in the former plan.

The buildings are intended to be three stories high, and they will contain on the ground floor 172 cells, on the middle floor 164 cells, and on the upper floor 164 cells, making altogether 500 cells. In other respects this design is similar, in its general arrangements, to No. 8; and the former description of the buildings, &c., will also be applicable.

N. B.—In each of the plans which have been described a space, not less than 20 feet in width, should be left round outside, to prevent any buildings or nuisances being placed against the boundary wall.

Plate M.—Description of the Drawings of a Prison-Cell, intended for the purpose of separate Confinement.

Each cell to be 12 feet by 8 feet in the clear, and 10 feet high to the under side of the arched ceiling. The external wall to be two bricks and a half thick; the internal wall, next the corridor or passage,* to be two bricks thick; the division walls, between the cells, to be worked in two thicknesses, of nine inches each, with a space of six inches in the middle, filled up with dry sand. The ceiling to be arched in brick-work, with three rings, each half a brick thick, turned separately, and each course grouted with cement. Brick piers and spandrels to be formed, to support the floor, which is to be of four-inch rubbed York stone. Flues, for ventilation, to be worked in the walls (as per drawing) nine inches by six, to be rendered inside with cement. The brick-work inside of cell to be worked with close joints, and lime-whited when dry.

The windows to have stone sills, sides, and head, wrought and splayed, pluffed with iron at the joints, and run with lead. The iron window-frame to be let into a groove round the stone-work. The sash to be of wrought iron; the bars framed through, at top and bottom, and riveted together, with proper rebates for glass. The glass not to be polished. Stone step to doorway the width of wall, mortised for four door-posts of oak, scantling of each six by five inches, framed into lintel or head, the width of wall; the whole to be wrought and rebated. The edges of doors, or door-frame, to be covered with felt, or similar material, to shut close, so that sounds may not pass through. Each cell to have two doors, framed flush on both sides; the inner one, next cell, to be in two thicknesses, with strong iron plating fixed between, and riveted together. The doors to be hung with large iron butt hinges; a strong iron-rim three-bolt lock to each door, and two large barrel bolts to the inner door; this is also to have an iron beveled frame, with cover, let into aperture for inspection.

The platform for bed to be of three-inch wrought oak-plank, let into wall, and secured to a brick pier under ditto, to be worked in cement and rendered over.

The water to be laid on to cell, with strong service-pipe and cock, from a reservoir or cistern to be fixed in the roof; a washing sink of Portland stone, to be fixed in side wall, with strainer and waste pipe; cast iron pan for water-closet, with service-pipe, cock, and valve; iron soil-pipe, with stink-trap in ditto, to go through the front wall, into a cess-pool head, and large iron pipe to run down into a drain below the surface; the whole to be fitted up on the best principle. The cover to pan to be hung, to shut down close into a rebate, so that no smell may escape upwards.

It is proposed that the ventilation of the cells shall be effected by having a large air-drain, to run under the corridor of each building longitudinally, the air to enter the same from apertures at the end, to be raised above the surface, and covered with iron gratings. The current of fresh air thus admitted is to pass by small transverse drains into ascending flues, to be constructed in the external walls of the cells, and to be let out from thence at the arched ceiling from grated tubes or pipes perforated with holes. The foul air is intended to be carried off from the cells, by means of gratings fixed near the floor (in the side walls next the corridor), into descending flues, which are to lead into another main drain under the floor, and to communicate with a large chimney-shaft to be erected in the central part of the prison; this shaft must be constantly heated (either by a furnace or by the fire of the kitchen for the service of the prison), in order that it may have sufficient power to draw off the impure air from the cells, and cause it to pass away by the central shaft, which must be considerably elevated above the roofs.

* The cells are supposed to be ranged on each side of a corridor or passage, about 14 feet wide. The corridor should be open the whole height, from the ground floor to the roof, to admit light and air to the interior;—the upper cells to be entered from iron galleries, along the sides of the corridors.—Vide Section of Cells, place N.

Borough Gaols.

BOROUGH GAOLS.

We now proceed to report the results of the special visits which we have made, agreeably to your Lordship's direction, to the Gaols of the several Boroughs to which the privilege of holding Quarter Sessions has been conditionally granted.

We understand the terms of these conditions to be, that the Authorities are either to make and keep the gaol in all respects fit and proper for the maintenance of prison discipline, or to build a new gaol, or to contract with the county for the reception of the Borough prisoners in the County Gaol: and if, notwithstanding such contract, the Borough Gaol shall be used for the confinement of prisoners on summary conviction, or for any other purpose, it is to be kept in a fit state for the purposes of prison discipline.

In order that your Lordship may the more conveniently decide upon the steps which it may be advisable to take, in reference to these prisons, we have divided them into the following classes:—

First. Prisons requiring to be re-built.

Second. Prisons requiring to be enlarged only.

Third. Prisons which, with certain alterations, should be retained as lock-up houses only, for the custody of prisoners under examination.

Although the Municipal Act gives to the respective Corporations the choice of transferring their prisoners to the County Gaol, when such an arrangement can be effected, yet the latter part of the conditions entered into by the corporations does, in fact, enable your Lordship to induce the Authorities, in most cases, to build or enlarge their Prisons. It is rarely that the Borough Magistrates, even when they contract with the County, can dispense with having some place of confinement. At present, the Contract is generally limited to the maintenance of prisoners committed for trial, or sentenced by a Court to hard labour; and does not include prisoners sentenced to imprisonment but not to hard labour, prisoners summarily convicted, prisoners under examination, and debtors. By requiring, therefore, the observance of proper regulations for any prison that may be retained for these classes, your Lordship will oblige the Magistrates to make such alterations in the Buildings as will render it the interest of the Borough, in a pecuniary sense, to abandon the Contract with the County, and have one good Gaol for the custody of all their prisoners.

Your Lordship is aware that the superior system of superintendence which can be introduced into most County Gaols, gives to these prisons many advantages over gaols of a smaller class. We have kept this consideration in view whenever we had to form an opinion as to the expediency of rebuilding Borough Prisons. In every Borough in which a commitment of the prisoners to the County Gaol has been practicable, and has appeared to be free from objection, we have uniformly recommended the Magistrates to make this arrangement. The cases in which we have considered such a proposition objectionable have been whenever the transfer of the Borough Prisoners has been calculated to disturb the discipline, or prevent the improvement, of the County Gaol; whenever the County Gaol has been in such a bad state as to render any increase of prisoners inexpedient; and whenever the distance of the County Gaol from the Borough has been such as to operate unfavourably in the administration of justice.

In every case in which a prison is to be rebuilt, or enlarged, in a Borough remote from a County Gaol, the public interests would be greatly promoted if the County Magistrates and Town Councils would unite their exertions and resources in the establishment of a District Prison; and we beg to recommend that in every such case, before any proceedings be taken, the attention of the respective Authorities be directed to the advantages of such a measure. Unwilling, however, as we have been to recommend the building or alteration of small Gaols, as well from a desire to avoid unnecessary expenditure as to supersede prisons which do not admit of an enlarged scale of superintendence, we have frequently been compelled to adopt this course, in order to counteract the disadvantages which result from the remoteness of a county gaol from the place of commitment. This distance (which occasionally exceeds twenty and even thirty miles) often operates most unfavourably in bringing offenders to justice, and also with hardship on untried prisoners, who, when removed to the county gaol, are in a great measure cut off from all personal intercourse with their friends and legal advisers. The expense of conveying a prisoner, on his committal, to the County Gaol—back to the Borough to take his trial—and again to the County Gaol after conviction—is such as to bring, not unfrequently, a degree of public odium on the committing magistrate, who is thus inclined to allow young offenders, apprehended on slight charges, to escape with impunity. This consideration has had great weight in inducing us to suggest the erection and enlargement of the smaller class of prisons. Upon consideration, it has appeared to us preferable that the Magistrates should have in their own Borough a prison constructed on the Separate System, which, although unattended with the advantages of a large Establishment, would present the ready means of inflicting salutary punishment, and afford no inducement to withhold it, rather than that they should be compelled to have recourse to a County Gaol conducted on the associated plan, the expense of conveying a prisoner to and from which tends to discourage the commitment of Offenders, and the discipline of which is not favourable to their correction and reform. There is, in fact, the less objection to the erection of the smaller class of Prisons, as many of the evils which now exist in gaols of this description may be remedied by the adoption of the Separate System; and as it is quite practicable to subject them to such regulations as will, under the superintendence of the Visiting Justices, insure good order and discipline.

I.
HOME DISTRICT.

In our visits to the several Boroughs, we have generally found that the Town Councils required time to deliberate upon the suggestions which we had offered to them. The number of Boroughs which we have had occasion to visit, and the wide distance which many of them lay from each other, have prevented us from remaining long in any one place. The utmost that we could do, under such circumstances, was to examine the Prison with a view to its amendment, explain the views of prison discipline which it is advisable to adopt, and inspect any site which might have been selected for the erection of a new gaol. We have thus, we trust, prepared the way for such communications as it may be deemed advisable to make; and the Councils of the respective Boroughs now await your Lordship's instructions as to the course which they are to pursue.

We have not considered it advisable to prepare a plan of the proposed new gaols, or of the alterations necessary to be made in those which require enlargement, inasmuch as we found a difference of opinion to prevail in several of the Boroughs as to the numbers of prisoners for which it will be necessary to provide;—a point of great importance, the responsibility of deciding which, we submit, should rest with the local Authorities. The information relating to the construction of Gaols, contained in this Report, will afford great assistance to any Architect whom the Town Councils may employ on the occasion. The Designs of Prisons which accompany our Report will fully explain the principles on which it is desirable that these Gaols should be erected; but if, instead of employing their own Architect, the Council of any Borough should require a plan to be transmitted to them, we should have no difficulty in furnishing it, under your Lordship's directions.

In preparing this Report, we have refrained from entering into many particulars respecting the general condition and management of the several gaols, conceiving such matter to come more properly within the duty of the Inspectors of the respective Districts, and that the evils arising from mismanagement may be remedied by the adoption of proper Regulations. For these reasons we have, in general, confined ourselves to the description of the Building, and the measures which we have considered it advisable to adopt for the fulfilment of the conditions on which the privilege of holding Quarter Sessions has been granted.

After having given the most careful consideration to the peculiar circumstances of these several gaols, we beg leave, as the result of our inquiries, to submit to your Lordship the following suggestions:—

1. That the Councils of the following Boroughs be instructed to erect new Gaols with a view to the separate confinement of Prisoners by day and by night; to state the number of Prisoners for which it will be necessary to provide; to apprize the Secretary of State when a suitable Site shall have been procured; and to submit, for his sanction, a plan on the principles of separate construction described in this Report: viz.,—

It will be satisfactory to your Lordship to learn that the Authorities of the several Boroughs which we have visited, have, in general, expressed themselves highly gratified with the beneficial effects which have already resulted from the establishment of Quarter Sessions in their respective Jurisdictions. A strong conviction prevails among the Magistrates and Members of the Town Councils, that, but for the facilities thus afforded for the trial of Offenders on the spot, a large amount of Crime would pass unpunished. As far as we have been enabled to form a judgment on the subject, in the progress of these Inquiries, we are satisfied that there is much truth in this Opinion, and that the Judicial System established in these Boroughs works well. In regard to the encouragement which it affords for the punishment of Offences, we beg to state that the mayor of one Borough (Folkstone) informed us that the Expense attending the prosecution of two Offences, when the parties had to repair to Maidstone, amounted in the one case to £53, and in the other to £70; while the costs of two Prosecutions in the Borough, since your Lordship has granted the privilege of holding Quarter Sessions, amounted, in the one instance, but to £6. 13*s*., and in the other to £5. 13*s*. We have availed ourselves of this feeling in favour of the local administration of Justice to impress on the Authorities the importance of their having at hand adequate means not only for the trial of Offenders, but also for the punishment of Crime; and it is but justice to the gentlemen with whom we have communicated, to state, that they appear to be much interested in establishing an effective system of prison discipline, and desirous of providing a good Gaol within their jurisdiction, not more from a desire to comply with the conditions into which they have entered, than from a sense of what is due to the public security and welfare.

The state of the Municipal Funds presents unfortunately, in too many instances, serious obstacles to the erection and enlargement of Prisons; but, even where strong pecuniary difficulties exist, the Authorities have assured us that every exertion shall be made to carry your Lordship's wishes into effect.

NEWBURY.

Newbury.

THIS gaol is occupied as a County as well as a Borough prison, part of Newbury (Speenhamland) being in the jurisdiction of the County. The prison is part of an old building which was formerly occupied as a Workhouse. It consists of five cells on the ground-floor, which are of the following dimensions:—

No. 1, 9 feet 9 inches by 8 feet 6 inches.
No. 2, 8 feet 3 inches by 6 feet 6 inches.
No. 3, 8 feet 2 inches by 5 feet 4 inches.
No. 4, 10 feet 3 inches by 8 feet 4 inches.
No. 5, 10 feet 4 inches by 8 feet 4 inches.

The Cells are cold and damp; they are badly ventilated, and offensive from the state of the privies, of which there is one in each Cell. The Cells are very insecure. Two Prisoners effected their escape in September 1835.

The Prisoners can hold communication with persons from without, the Court-yard leading to the Cells being accessible to the Public. Spirits and other objectionable Articles may be conveyed to them through the Windows of the Cells in the rear of the House.

The Gaoler does not reside in the Prison. He takes the ordinary allowance of food to the Prisoners at 8 o'clock every morning, after which they are generally left to themselves for the day.

The Prisoners are not allowed to go into the open Air.

The Borough contracts with the County Magistrates for the maintenance of all Prisoners sentenced to Hard Labour. The Prisoners confined in the Borough Gaol are those under examination, Prisoners sentenced to imprisonment and not to Hard Labour, and Vagrants.

It appears that, in 1835, 154 Borough Prisoners passed through this Gaol, 21 of whom were under 17 years of age. The greatest number of Borough Prisoners confined at one time in that year was nine; and of County Prisoners 11. In the last year four Prisoners were committed for the several periods of 22, 24, 30, and 38 days; but the ordinary period of confinement appears to have been from seven to twenty-one days.

As the distance from Newbury to Reading is 16 miles, much inconvenience is occasionally experienced by the County Magistrates in sending Prisoners thus far. The Borough Magistrates are sensible of the necessity of having a new Prison, and we inspected a site which had been thought of for the purpose. The situation is far too noisy, and objectionable from its proximity to several Buildings. The Mayor accompanied us to one of the most active of the County Magistrates, who expressed a strong desire that some arrangement should be brought about between the County and the Borough for the erection of a Gaol for prisoners of all classes committed within their respective Jurisdictions.

ANDOVER.

Andover.

THIS Prison adjoins the Workhouse, and consists of a room for Men 18 feet by 12 feet, and apartments above of the same size for Females. The Window of the lower Room opens into a Yard into which any person may easily enter. The Cell on the ground-floor has a privy, through which two men escaped in April last. There is no Privy in the upper Room. The Prisoners are not allowed to take exercise in the Yard.

All descriptions of Prisoners are committed to this Gaol, but the numbers are very small. Five is the greatest number that has been in custody at one time for some years. In 1835, a Prisoner underwent a sentence of six months. In 1836, two Prisoners had been confined 49 days, one 26, and another 27 days.

The Magistrates are aware of the defects which we have described, and are ready immediately to build a new Prison.

SCARBOROUGH.

Scarborough.

THERE are two distinct Prisons in Scarborough—a Gaol and a House of Correction.

The ground-floor of the Gaol is occupied by the Keeper. On the upper floor are four Rooms, two of which are appropriated to Debtors, 13 feet by 11 feet. The other two, which are 10 feet square, are occasionally used for Debtors and Criminals. There is no Yard, nor are there any means by which the Prisoners can take exercise in the open Air. The number of Prisoners confined in this place is very small; the House of Correction being generally preferred for the committal of Offenders. There were but three Prisoners in the year 1835.

The House of Correction adjoins the Workhouse, and the same person superintends both Establishments. It consists of four Rooms; two on the ground-floor 13 feet by 9 feet. These Rooms are very close and insecure. Escapes have been effected, and in order to prevent them a chain is affixed to the floor of one of the Apartments, to which Prisoners are occasionally fastened. The Untried and Convicted are sometimes placed together. The Men and Women can communicate. There is great facility for maintaining intercourse with persons from without.

Prisoners whose escape is apprehended are sometimes sent to the House of Correction, Northallerton, a distance of 57 miles. The cost of conveying a prisoner thither is £3. 15*s.*

The total number confined in the House of Correction in 1834 was 19; in 1835, 8; and in the first six months of 1836, 21.

The Town Council are impressed with the necessity of erecting a new prison, and agreeably to their request we examined a plot of ground which had been selected for the proposed building. The site, however, is objectionable, from the facility which would be afforded for disturbing the quiet of the prison from the neighbouring Buildings. Under these circumstances, we strongly recommended the Mayor to endeavour to procure other ground.

Wigan.

WIGAN.

This prison is a very old and dilapidated Building. The ground-floor is appropriated to the Governor's Apartments. In the rear of the House is a Yard, in which (several feet below the surface) are two dungeons infested by Rats, damp, perfectly dark, and unventilated. Prisoners are occasionally confined in these dungeons; places which the gaoler acknowledged were "not fit to put a dog in."

The ordinary Prison is on the upper floor, in which are two Rooms; one for Men, 16 feet by 14 feet. In this Apartment the gaoler informed me that 14 Persons had been at one time in confinement. A room opposite is appropriated to Females: it is only 10 feet by 5, and as many as eight Women have been placed therein. Spirits, or any other objectionable articles, may be handed to the Women from a lean-to building near the Window. The Prisoners never go into the open Air, and have not access to any privy. Tubs, as a substitute, are placed in each Room. The Windows of adjoining premises look into the Prison yard.

All Prisoners fully committed, and after sentence, are sent to the County House of Correction at Kirkdale.

Although the Magistrates are disposed to take immediate steps for having another Prison, they are still inclined to adhere to their Contract with the County for the maintenance of certain classes of their Prisoners in Kirkdale. The distance is 23 miles. Considering the absolute necessity of a new Prison being built at Wigan for such Prisoners as are not sent to Kirkdale, we would suggest whether it be not for the interests of the borough that the Council should erect a prison sufficiently large for the custody of all the prisoners committed within its Jurisdiction.

WALSALL.

Walsall.

This gaol is in the basement of the Town-Hall, four feet under ground; the entrance is through an Inn-yard. There are four sleeping Cells of small dimensions, viz. two 9 feet by 5 feet, and two 7 feet 6 inches by 6 feet. These Cells have no Windows, and are very damp and badly ventilated by a small opening in the door. There are also two day rooms, one for the males, 17 feet by 7 feet 2 inches, and a smaller one for the females, 9 feet by 7 feet 3 inches. In the latter, three Women have been placed. There are also two small Airing-courts, which, for greater security, are iron-barred overhead, from wall to wall; but, from their exposure to the public street on one side, and the Inn-yard on the other, the Prisoners have been frequently supplied with Saws, with which they have managed to cut the bars, and make their escape. The Mayor said that himself, and other of the Magistrates, had frequently, when standing in the Town-Hall, detected persons in handing Articles to the Prisoners. The Gaoler does not reside in the Prison.

Prisoners when fully committed, and after sentence, are sent to the County Gaol at Stafford. As many as 98 Prisoners, however, were committed to this Borough Prison in 1835. The greatest number of Prisoners at one time in custody in that year was 13 Men and three Women. The longest periods of detention have been three months.

The Prison is very insecure, and very unjustifiable means are resorted to, to prevent escapes. A few days before our visit, a lad of 17, confined for a breach of agreement with his master, had, after having been excited by Ale given to him by his fellow-prisoners, succeeded in getting out, but was retaken. To prevent a further attempt, he was chained down to his bed in the situation in which we found him three days afterwards. The Cells are dark, damp, and unventilated. There is no female Officer.

The Magistrates have determined to erect a Prison, and have fixed on an excellent Site.

HEREFORD.

Hereford.

In the rear of the Gaoler's House is a block of Prison Buildings, divided for male and female Prisoners, each having a Yard. The walls of the Yard are, however, not seven feet high, and the Prisoners talk with each other freely. The Men have a day room and six Cells. The Women have three Cells, nine feet square: the Windows of these Cells look into the Men's Yards, and we observed a man climb up to the Window of one of the Women's Cells, and a female prisoner hand him a light for his pipe.

The debtors reside in the Gaoler's House: his kitchen forms their day room. Their Airing court adjoins the male and female criminals' yard, so that there is a general communication among all classes.

The Borough contracts with the County for the maintenance of certain of its Prisoners, and reserves its present Gaol for slight cases of felony and misdemeanor, and Vagrants. The total number in custody in 1835 was 92; but a considerable increase has since taken place in the number of commitments owing to the vigilance of the new Police. In the first six months of the last year there had been 283 Commitments. The greatest number in custody in 1835 was 26, and in 1836, 27. We find that the greatest number of Borough Prisoners confined at one time in the County Gaol was in

The Council are most anxious to build a new Prison; and we examined two Situations which had been fixed upon. They are, however, both unfavourable from the proximity of other Buildings.

BRIDGEWATER.

Bridgewater.

THIS Building contains five Apartments of the following dimensions, two on the ground-floor, and three rooms above:—

No. 1, 18 feet by 17 feet.
No. 2, 17 feet by 15 feet.
No. 3, 19 feet by 18 feet.
No. 4, 20 feet by 18 feet.
No. 5, 20 feet by 20 feet.

These Rooms, although defective in the means of inspection, afford much more space than is required for the Prisoners belonging to the Borough. The whole of the Apartments are, however, used for the accommodation of the County Prisoners when the Assizes and Sessions are held in Bridgewater. On such occasions the place is crowded. There have been as many as 140 Prisoners confined here awaiting trial, and sometimes for a period of a Week, or 10 days.

The Borough contracts with the County Magistrates for the maintenance, in Wilton House of Correction, of Prisoners fully committed, and Prisoners sentenced to hard labour. The distance is 12 miles. The Borough Prison is at present applied to petty Offenders and Police Cases.

The total number of Prisoners committed in the course of the year 1835 was sixteen, and seven was the greatest number at one time in confinement.

The Council have determined to discontinue the arrangement now subsisting between themselves and the County for the maintenance of Prisoners, and to build a new Gaol for the custody of all the Prisoners committed within the Borough. We inspected a Site which appeared to be eligible.

GLOUCESTER.

Gloucester.

AT the entrance, and adjoining the gaoler's apartments, is a yard and day room, 26 feet by 15, for female prisoners. A passage, through the gaoler's apartments, conducts to a Yard, a day room, and two sleeping cells, each 12 feet square, for Untried Prisoners. In one of these cells we found five, and in another four, beds. A door in this yard leads to the convict prison, where there are a day room 13 feet by 10 feet, and four cells, each 10 feet by 7 feet. Two beds were placed in each of them. The upper floor is occupied by sleeping Apartments.

No. 3, for untried felons, 12 feet square.
No. 4, for convicts, 10 feet by 7.
No. 2, for ditto, 13 feet by 6.

The Debtors are confined in the upper floor in two Rooms 16 feet by 15 feet, and 16 feet by 7 feet. The Windows of the Women's sleeping Apartments look into the men's yard, and Attempts at communication are frequently detected. The only Yard for the exercise of the Debtors is that used by prisoners sent to hard labour. Although the Prison is nominally divided for the Untried and Convicted, both Classes are placed together; and as the rooms are free from the inspection of the Gaoler, communication can go on unrestrained.

The Ventilation throughout the Prison is very defective. The Cells are damp. The Infirmary is not fit for the confinement of a sick Prisoner. Scenes of disorder are of perpetual occurrence. The only punishment resorted to for Convicts is confinement in the dark hole. This place is not in any degree ventilated, and is so situated that the Prisoner under punishment can talk with the Prisoners outside. This constantly occurs when a female Prisoner is confined in the dark hole.

The matron stated that she had had in custody at one time in the last year 16 women and two children; that it was quite impossible, from the construction of the Building, to keep order among them; that it was lamentable to see any Woman of decent habits in such a place; and that girls, who had been reputably brought up, were necessarily in close contact with Prostitutes and others of the most abandoned habits. She mentioned the case of a young Woman of this description who was committed on a slight charge on the 7th May, and who remained until the 11th July, when she was acquitted. This person stated to the Matron that "it was enough to make one's hair stand on end" to hear her associates, as they lay in bed at night, relate the robberies and outrages in which they had been concerned.

This Borough has no Contract with the County for the maintenance of any of its Prisoners. In 1835, the total number of Commitments was 122 men and 36 women. The greatest number in custody at one time in the first six months of 1836, was 58. Prisoners are occasionally committed for one, and even two years.

We are of opinion that no alteration that can be made in this Prison would effect any material improvement in its construction, and that a new Gaol was never more urgently required, than at present, in the city of Gloucester.

I.
HOME DISTRICT.

Borough Gaols.
Southampton.

SOUTHAMPTON.

THERE are three Prisons in this Borough, all under the jurisdiction of the Magistrates of the city and county of Southampton.

The Gaol consists of five Apartments; two of the rooms are on the ground-floor, the one 11 feet by 10, and the other 11 feet by 19, the height of both being 9 feet; these are used as day rooms. There are two Apartments of the same size above. The airing yard is 30 feet by 7 feet. Here there is a small deep cell, adjoining the privy, 16 feet square, used as a punishment Cell.

Persons charged with and convicted of various Offences are committed to this place. The total number of Prisoners in 1835 was 31, and for the six months ending June 1836, 14. The greatest number in confinement at one time has been 12. Prisoners committed for trial may remain nearly three months; and on examining the books it appears that convicted Prisoners have been in confinement for periods of even six months. There is no employment in the Prison, nor are there any means of inspecting the Prisoners, but by entering their Apartments. The Untried and Convicted thus associate in idleness, and the contracted space to which they are confined must greatly tend to increase the mischievous effects of the imprisonment. No women are sent to this Prison.

Adjoining the Gaol, but a perfectly distinct building, is the Debtors' prison. The principal room is 18 feet by 12 feet, having a small closet 7 feet by 5 feet 6 inches. There are three floors of similar dimensions. The drains are in bad order, and the prison is throughout deficient in the means of Cleanliness and Ventilation.

The House of Correction has two day rooms on the ground-floor, each 12 feet by 10 feet. There is also on this floor an irregular octangular cell, 10 feet in diameter, nearly dark, and very insufficiently ventilated. This place is used as a Punishment Cell. There are two floors above. On the first story are two sleeping Cells of the same dimensions as those below. On the second are also two Apartments, one of which is used as the Chapel. The Yards afford great facilities for escape. Through the Chapel, and over the gateway of the Building adjoining to which the prison stands, is the Apartment for female prisoners, consisting of two sleeping Cells 14 feet 6 inches by 6 feet 6 inches. There is also a Day-room and kitchen, the dimensions of each of which are but 14 feet by 8. This Apartment is exceedingly confined, and must at times be most injurious to the health. The access to this part of the Prison is difficult; the mode of communication being from the upper part of the keeper's house across the upper floor of the men's prison, and through the Chapel. There is no other Airing yard for the Women than the keeper's private yard: this is very insecure, the walls being low.

The Magistrates usually send to this place persons committed for trial, those sentenced to imprisonment only, those sentenced to hard labour, and all female Prisoners. At the period of this inspection there were 26 persons in custody, of whom two were for trial, two for Assaults, and not sentenced to hard labour, and the remainder for hard labour. Of the 26, ten were females, of whom two were for trial, and two for smuggling. The total number committed to this prison in 1835 was 71, and in the six months ending June 1836, 75. The increase of offenders was attributed to the vigilance of the new police. The greatest numbers in confinement at one time were 19 Men and 11 Women. The average number at one time was estimated at 21. It appeared, on referring to the books, that several of the Prisoners had been committed for lengthened periods; one had been sentenced for a twelvemonth, and four for six months.

The Male prisoners committed to hard labour are placed at the tread-wheel. Females, thus sentenced, are employed in mending the prison clothing.

The dimensions of the day rooms and cells in these Prisons are very contracted. They are miserable places, and do not admit of the possibility of any material amendment. The inconvenience of having three distinct Prisons, and those so defective, in a Town like Southampton, must be at once apparent; and when the importance of this Borough, and the extent of its population, are considered, it is but reasonable to expect that the Magistrates should provide a place of confinement which, while it ensures from contamination the morals of Prisoners charged only with offences, will maintain such a strict system of discipline, as shall deter offenders from a violation of the Laws.

PLYMOUTH.

Plymouth.

THIS Borough gaol is built in the form of a Tower. It contains five Floors. On the ground floor are three Cells, each 9 feet by 6 feet, and two Rooms appropriated to female Prisoners, being a day-room and sleeping apartment, 11 feet square. On the first floor are three Cells, 14 feet by 7, and two, 7 feet square. On the second floor are two Cells, 9 feet square. On the third floor are two Rooms, 11 feet by 10. On the fourth floor are two Rooms, 11 feet by 10, and above is an Apartment 20 feet by 13 feet.

The Gaoler, who is Town serjeant, resides on the ground floor. Nothing can be conceived more unfavourable to inspection than the position of the prisoners' apartments, and every species of corruption can go on in the several Rooms unobserved by the Gaoler. They are, moreover, dark, and those on the ground floor are damp. The Drains are very defective, and the lower Cells are infested with rats. We observed a rat-trap in one of the cells. From a window near the entrance to the ground-floor cell, passengers may be seen in the street.

HOME DISTRICT.
Borough Gaols.
Plymouth.

The Borough contracts with the County for the maintenance of Capital Offenders who are sent to the County Gaol at Exeter—a distance of 43 miles. All other descriptions of Prisoners, including Debtors, committed within the jurisdiction of Plymouth, are confined in this Borough Gaol.

The discipline of the Prison is much neglected. We found in one room pipes, tobacco, and a song affixed to the wall, intituled "One glass more."

The Females are not under the care of a Matron, although the Wife of the Town serjeant occasionally attends to them; but this is quite voluntary on her part.

The prison is not attended by any Clergyman of the Established Church. But for the occasional visits of a Dissenting Minister, the Prisoners would be without any religious instruction.

The total number confined in the Borough Gaol at Plymouth in 1835 was 288, and in the first six months of 1836, 151. The greatest number of Prisoners in custody at one time was 26; the longest period of confinement, five months.

This Prison is quite inadequate to the wants of so large a population as that of Plymouth. Of this the magistrates are sensible, and they have long been desirous of building a new Gaol. In order to provide a fund for this purpose, as well as for the erection of a new Guildhall, the Corporation some years back imposed a fine upon every person to whom the freedom of the Borough was presented; and from this Source a sum of £3,300 has been obtained. This Money is now in the hands of Trustees. The Amount is not sufficient for the attainment of either of the Objects for which the Money was raised, and a difference of opinion prevails as to the manner in which it should be disposed of. Doubts have since arisen as to the power of the Corporation to apply this sum to the erection of a new Gaol.

A County Prison is much wanted for the Prisoners committed by the County Magistrates at Stonehouse and Devonport, as well as at other places in this part of the county; and we believe that the Town Council of Plymouth would readily unite with the County Magistrates in building a Prison adequate to the purposes of both County and Borough.

We beg earnestly to recommend that some measure should be taken to induce the Magistrates of the County and Borough to effect this desirable Object. The distance from Devonport and Stonehouse to Exeter is 44 miles. The remoteness of the County Gaol operates with great hardship on Prisoners, as well as unfavourably on the administration of Justice; and when it is considered that the population of Devonport, Stonehouse, and Plymouth is estimated at little short of 100,000 souls, the importance of having a Prison on the spot, for the custody and proper discipline of offenders, must be at once obvious.

For the temporary confinement of Prisoners in and within three miles round Devonport, the only provision consists of one Day-room and three Cells for Men, and the same for Women; each Cell being 10 feet by 6 feet, and 6 feet high. The female prisoners are not attended by any Woman. Prisoners have been detained here as long as three weeks, and there have been at one time as many as eighteen in confinement. The Gaoler assured me that he had been obliged to place three Prisoners in one of these contracted cells. In 1835, 320 Prisoners had been committed to these cells, of whom 190 were discharged upon examination.

At Stonehouse, the Prisoners are kept in the old parish Workhouse. There are but two Cells, each 8 feet by 4 feet, and 8 feet high. A small Room in another part of the Workhouse is appropriated to female prisoners.

This is the extent of accommodation for Prisoners at Stonehouse. No one seems to consider himself responsible for the care and management of the Prisoners. One of the Overseers stated that the servants of the workhouse were not required to attend to the cleaning of the Cells, and that the police officers refused to do so; the consequence was, that the night buckets were sometimes left in the Cells unemptied for four or five days.

From January to September 1836, 50 prisoners were committed to these filthy and unventilated cells. One was in confinement seventeen, and another twenty days.

DARTMOUTH.

Dartmouth.

THIS Prison literally consists of two Cells, 11¾ feet long, 7 feet wide, and 8 feet high. One of these Cells is appropriated to male and the other to female Prisoners. There is a grating at the back of one Cell which looks into a public thoroughfare, and the prisoners may thus communicate with persons from without. The Gaoler has known six persons confined at one time. The floors of the Cells are damp, and they are in a very dirty state. There is a small Yard (the length of the cell) in which the prisoners are allowed to walk during the day. This Yard is separated from the public Street by a wall only 10 feet high. The Gaoler sleeps in an apartment above the Cells; but being also the Police Officer of the Town, and resident elsewhere during the day, he is seldom at the Prison, except at night.

Female prisoners are not attended by a Woman. The total number of Prisoners in 1835 was 22; but from January to June 1836, there had been 36 in confinement.

The Town Council are desirous immediately to build a new Prison. We inspected two Sites, one of which is extremely well adapted to the purpose.

BIDEFORD.

Bideford.

THE Gaol at Bideford forms part of the parish Workhouse. There are six Cells, three for the Gaol on the ground floor, and three on a floor above. The Gaol-cells are 12 feet long, 6 feet 9 inches wide, but the Prisoners can converse together without difficulty from Cell to Cell; the Cells above are 10 feet 4 inches long, and 6 feet 2 inches wide. They admit of the same communication as those below.

Fourteen has been the whole number committed in the year 1835, and six the greatest number in confinement at one time.

The Council are disposed to attend to any suggestion that may be made for the amendment of this Gaol, or the erection of a new Prison, and we beg to recommend the latter as a measure in every respect preferable.

WINDSOR.

Windsor.

We have already reported to your Lordship that the magistrates of this Borough contract with the County Justices for the maintenance of Debtors and Prisoners sentenced to hard labour in the County Gaol at Reading.

The Borough Magistrates, therefore, reserve their Gaol for Prisoners committed for trial, prisoners convicted, but not sentenced to hard labour, and Vagrants.

The part of the Gaol appropriated to male Prisoners consists of a floor containing four Cells (the doors of which are constantly open during the day), 8 feet 6 inches by 6 feet 3 inches. Here all classes of male prisoners are placed together. The floor above is allotted to female prisoners, and consists of two Cells of the same size, and a Day-room.

The situation of the Prison is low and damp. It is in a bad Neighbourhood. The Windows of some of the Cells communicate with the Street, and the Prisoners can therefore converse with persons from without. Spirits, and other objectionable articles, may be introduced without difficulty.

The greatest number of Prisoners at one time in confinement in this Borough Gaol, in the last three years, is stated to have been sixteen.

The very contracted space in which the Gaol now stands renders it impossible materially to enlarge it, and the present Site is so highly objectionable, that a new Gaol is indispensable. Should this be determined upon, it will be for the magistrates to say whether, under these circumstances, they will not make provision for all their prisoners, rather than continue to incur the expense of conveying any part of them to Reading, a distance of 17 miles.

LUDLOW.

This small prison stands in a garden at the back of a House occupied by an Officer of Police. A brick paved passage on the right conducts to two Cells, each 8 feet 8 inches by 6 feet 9 inches. One of them is occupied by Men, and the other by Women. A grating between the Cells is the only mode of admitting Air to the inner Cell, in which females are confined. The Men's Cell has a Window into a Garden. There is, therefore, every facility for the conversation of prisoners in the respective Cells. We found a female in the women's Cell: it was exceedingly close and offensive, as well as damp. It had not been before unlocked that day, although it was 12 o'clock. These lower Cells are not fit to be inhabited. In a floor above are two Rooms, the windows of which look into the garden. In this garden the Prisoners are allowed to take exercise daily for an hour; the men and women alternately. On these occasions conversation goes on with the prisoners of both sexes. We found two men and two women in the upper apartments. The number of commitments to this gaol is small. In the year 1835 but nine prisoners were in confinement. An increase has taken place, as in the first six months in 1836, 14 prisoners had been committed.

The female prisoners are not attended by a female officer. There is no separate Apartment for the Sick, nor any religious instruction. One Debtor was in confinement a year and 73 days. The prison-garden can be overlooked from adjacent Buildings, and attempts are frequently detected of throwing articles over the wall to the Prisoners when walking therein.

At the period of this visit we found six persons in confinement, three men and three women. We were, however, assured that this was above the average number, which did not exceed four. We beg to recommend the erection of a sufficient number of Cells which will not admit of communication.

The distance to Shrewsbury is 30 Miles, and the expense of conveying a prisoner to the County Gaol is 30*s.*

SAFFRON WALDEN.

Saffron Walden.

This Prison is within the walls of the Workhouse. The Male Criminals are confined in four Cells; two of which are together, having a Yard. The Cells are 8 feet long, 6 feet 6 inches wide, and 9 feet high. There is in each a barrack bedstead, 7 feet by 3 feet. Two of the Cells open into a Yard, 16 feet by 15 feet, and the others into a Yard, 16 feet long by 12 feet 10 inches wide.

Above the Men's Cells is an Apartment for female Prisoners, the windows of which look into the Yards below, to which the men have at all times access.

The Borough contracts with the County for sending a part of the prisoners to Chelmsford, a distance of 28 miles. The cost of conveying a prisoner is £1. 16*s.* 6*d.*

I.
HOME DISTRICT.
Borough Gaols.

The total number of Prisoners confined in the Borough Gaol in 1835 was 15. In the first six months of 1836 there were 17. The greatest number in custody at one time, in 1836, has been seven. During that year, there were 15 prisoners at Chelmsford, at the expense of the borough. At the period of our visit, seven prisoners were in custody.

The Magistrates are prepared to build a new prison, and the County Magistrates in this division of Essex, feeling the great inconvenience which arises from the want of a County prison, are, we believe, disposed to unite with the Borough Magistrates in the erection of a Gaol sufficient for the custody of prisoners committed within their concurrent jurisdictions.

This prison is in a very dirty state, and the prisoners appeared to us to be neglected. There is not sufficient room for two persons in the men's barrack bedstead.

No vigilance is exercised in excluding improper books. We found in the Cells a novel, intituled "The Old English Baron," "Paul and Virginia," and "Almoran and Hamet."

At the period of our inspection there were three women in one apartment. Two were hardened "Tramps," who had been convicted of forging Passes, and sentenced to transportation. They were evidently experienced Offenders. The third was a decent servant girl, aged 16, belonging to a neighbouring village, who had been sentenced to a month's imprisonment. She had been well brought up, and her connexions were respectable. She had been, however, for some weeks in close contact with these women, during which she had not had a separate bedstead. This was the more inexcusable as there were several bedsteads in an adjoining room, in which the girl might have been confined apart.

BANBURY.

Banbury.

PRISONERS sentenced at Sessions to hard labour are sent to Oxford. The prisoners committed to the Borough Gaol are Debtors, Prisoners committed for trial, summarily convicted, and sentenced to imprisonment only.

There are three floors. On the ground floor is a day-room for Men, 16 feet by 13 feet, and 8 feet high. This room has a Window, the only means of admitting Air, 2 feet by 1 foot 10 inches.

On the same floor is the sleeping room for the Men, 13 feet by 14 feet 6 inches, and 8 feet high; it has a window, 2 feet by 1 foot 3 inches. In this room there are three bedsteads, each 6 feet by 4 feet. There have been as many as 10 Men confined in this Apartment at one time.

On the first floor is a room 14 feet 6 inches by 8 feet 6, and 10 feet 6 inches high. There are four Windows, about 14 inches square. This room is generally appropriated to female prisoners. Adjoining is a small tread-wheel.

On the upper floor are three garrets. No. 1, 12 feet 6 by 6 feet 6, and 7 feet high, having a Window, 1 foot by 1 foot 10 inches. No. 2, 12 feet 6 by 6 feet, and 7 feet high. No. 3, the same.

These rooms are divided merely by lath and plaster walls.

The Windows of all these Apartments, excepting those on the ground floor, look into the market-place, and the Prisoners can hold communication from persons outside without difficulty. A bag containing tobacco was not long since attempted to be conveyed into the prison by one of these Windows. The prisoners can also hear almost everything which passes in the Yard below.

This Yard is 18 feet by 13 feet. Here we found a male and female prisoner washing clothes. The privies are very offensive. There is evidently but little personal separation between the Sexes during the day; nor indeed does the nature of the Building admit of its being otherwise.

There were 43 Prisoners committed to this Borough Gaol in the year 1836, of whom 10 were females. The greatest number in confinement at one time was 14.

The Authorities of the Borough are fully aware of the improper state of this place of confinement, and quite disposed to build a new Gaol. Situated as is Banbury, on the borders of four Counties, and at a considerable distance from any County Gaol, it would be very desirable if the Magistrates of those Counties could be induced to unite with the Council of Banbury to erect a Prison for this District.

CHICHESTER.

Chichester.

THE gaol in this city is an old building, and very ill adapted to the purposes of a place of confinement. The ground floor is occupied by the Apartments of the Keeper, in the rear of which is a small yard, in which the prisoners are allowed at certain hours to take exercise. On the first floor are two Rooms, one appropriated to Debtors, 15 feet by 8 feet 10 inches, and another, the only apartment for females, 12 feet by 11 feet. In an upper story are four small rooms or cells.

No. 1, 10 feet 8 inches by 9 feet;
No. 2, 5 feet by 6 feet;
No. 3, 11 feet 10 inches by 6½ feet;
No. 4, 12 feet by 11 feet.

The Windows of the Women's Apartment and the Cells in the upper Story look into the High Street, and, notwithstanding they have hopper blinds, there are means of communicating with persons from without. The keeper stated that he had detected attempts of the kind, especially in the case of the female prisoners, most of whom are Prostitutes, and have connexions in the City.

The Corporation contracts with the County for the support of Prisoners sentenced to hard labour. All Prisoners of this description are sent to Petworth, a distance of 14 miles. The cost of conveying a Prisoner thither is seventeen shillings. The Town Gaol is consequently appropriated to Prisoners under examination, prisoners summarily convicted, but not to hard labour, and debtors. But few Vagrants are committed, not that there are no such offenders in the Borough, but because, as we were informed, the gaol does not admit of their being confined therein, and the expense of conveying them to Petworth is considered too serious to be incurred for such light offenders.

In the morning, the doors of the Men's Cells are unlocked at seven o'clock, when they breakfast, and are allowed to go down into the Yard until half-past nine. They are then locked in their Rooms, and the women are permitted to take exercise in the yard until half-past ten. They are then confined in their Rooms, and the Men have again access to the Yard, until the hour for locking them in their Cells for the night. During the day and night the Prisoners have no other resource but conversation with each other. The Keeper frequently hears them talking at night.

On unlocking the cells in the morning, they are described to be exceedingly offensive. The Keeper says that if he has ten Prisoners in Gaol, four or five of them become soon ill from the want of ventilation in the Rooms. The situation of the Women is truly deplorable. Debtors, Prostitutes, persons committed on suspicion of the slightest offence, and others of criminal habits and hardened character, are placed together in one small apartment.

The Town-Council are quite sensible of the defects of this prison, and most creditably anxious to build a new gaol. We have examined a Site adjoining the court-house which is in all respects very eligible, but some doubts appear to exist as to whether it can be obtained.

HASTINGS.

Hastings.

This prison stands in a densely populated part of the Borough. The Windows of the prisoners' apartments look into the street; but, although hopper blinds have been placed at the Windows, there are great facilities for communicating with the Prisoners. Any person in the street hallooing may be distinctly heard by a prisoner. There is a small yard at the entrance, divided from the street by a wall about 12 feet high.

On the ground-floor are the keeper's sitting-room, and an apartment for Male prisoners, 14½ feet by 11½ feet, and 8 feet high.

On the first floor is the keeper's bed-room, and two sleeping cells for Male prisoners.

On the second floor is the female prisoners' bed-room and two sleeping cells for men.

On the third floor is the Women's day-room, 14 feet 7 inches by 10½ feet, and two sleeping cells for Male prisoners.

On the upper floor is an apartment 14 feet 7 inches by 10½ feet, in which female prisoners are allowed to walk, and also another day-room for Men, 15½ feet by 12 feet, and 8 feet high.

There are thus two day-rooms and six sleeping cells for Men. Each of the Men's sleeping cells is 11 feet by 5½ feet, and 7 feet high, with a Window 2¼ feet by 3½ feet. In each cell are three wooden bedsteads, 6 feet by 2½ feet. The partition walls of the cells are of wood.

The Women's night apartment is 14 feet by 7½ feet, and 8 feet high. It contains three wooden bedsteads, each 6¼ feet by 2½ feet. Two Women lay occasionally in one of these bedsteads.

We found five Male prisoners in the ground-floor apartment. They are allowed to wash themselves in the yard adjoining their room, but at no other time are they permitted to go into the open Air. From morning to night they are confined together in their day-room, without any occupation. The Men in the upper day-room are not allowed to descend into the yard to wash; they never therefore go into the open Air.

From the closeness of the apartments, we are convinced that there is a good deal of physical suffering in this gaol. The health of such persons as those who are generally committed to this prison—men accustomed to live much in the open air—cannot fail in a short time to be seriously injured. We are compelled to add that this fact did not appear to us to have been duly regarded by the Authorities. The surgeon, who ought, under such circumstances, frequently to visit every room, and to see that the apartments are kept in a state as favourable as possible to health, does not appear to consider this as part of his duty. One man, a sailor, charged with an offence, who had been six weeks in the prison, said that he had complained of illness a fortnight ago, but that he had never seen the Surgeon since he had been in confinement. The Keeper, who was present, admitted that he had neglected to report the complaint to the surgeon; but we are of opinion that, in such a prison as that at Hastings, it is especially necessary that the surgeon should frequently visit every sleeping cell and apartment in the prison, with a view to suggest any means that may appear to him desirable for the preservation of health: and that he should see every prisoner in the gaol at least twice in the week.

The condition of the female prisoners is truly deplorable. We found four women shut up in their day-room, of the ages of 18, 21, 26, and 63. They are not attended by any female, and, when any one is unwell, the others have to attend upon her. One of these women was suffering under a venereal complaint; but, although thus afflicted, and to all appearance seriously ill, the other women were shut up with, and obliged to sleep in the same apartment with her. There is no separate place for the sick; and, notwithstanding this case of illness, there had been washing in the room only the day before, and the wet clothes were hung up to dry.

Notwithstanding the closeness of this apartment, the women are never allowed to go into the open Air. From the proximity of their apartment to the Men's sleeping cells, and the Men's upper day-room, constant conversation between the Males and Females, by day and by night, is unavoidable. This, indeed, could not be effectually restrained, if the Keeper, or some one acting for him, were always on the spot; but this is, we apprehend, far from being the case. The Keeper being a widower, without family or servant, there is no one in charge of the prison when he leaves it. On both occasions on which we visited the prison we found the Keeper absent; and on our first visit we had to wait about half an hour before he could be found.

The situation of the prison is damp. The rooms and cells ought to be frequently whitewashed.

By a Contract which the Corporation has made with the County, Capital offenders, and others sentenced to hard labour, are sent to the House of Correction at Lewes. The distance is 32 miles; but Debtors, Persons committed for trial, or summarily convicted, are sent to this gaol. In 1835, 112 Prisoners were in confinement, and in 1836, 111. The greatest number in 1836 was 15, of whom four were Women. This, however, must not be taken as an Estimate of the extent of crime in the jurisdiction of the Borough of Hastings, as we were informed that magistrates are often induced to pass over Offences in consequence of their reluctance to commit to a Prison which is calculated to inflict much bodily suffering and moral injury to all confined within its walls. We are glad, however, to be enabled to state that the Magistrates are sensible of the evils of the Gaol, and are desirous of taking immediate measures for building a new prison.

BATH.

Bath.

ALL Prisoners when fully committed for trial, and after conviction by a Court, are sent to the County Gaol at Shepton Mallet, under a Contract which has been entered into by the City with the County Justices. The Prisoners confined in this gaol are those under examination, Prisoners convicted summarily of breaches of the peace, others committed for want of bail, and Debtors.

The Prison contains two Day-rooms, two Yards, and six Sleeping Cells for Prisoners committed for want of sureties, &c., five Cells for Vagrants, four Sleeping-rooms for the superior class of debtors, and one Sleeping-room for common Debtors, who have also a Day-room. There is also an Apartment for Female Debtors. Two rooms, occasionally appropriated to the Sick, are also used for the superior class of Debtors. We found in confinement 10 Debtors, three Men convicted of assaults, and four female prisoners.

The male and female prisoners can converse together without difficulty. The male debtors can communicate with persons in the street.

The greatest number in custody from January to July 1836 was 256 males and 64 females. Of these, 86 were debtors. The greatest number in custody at one time during that period was 54. The greatest number of Untried Prisoners in the County Gaol at the expense of the Corporation from January to July 1836 was 41.

We have the pleasure to state that the magistrates have determined to erect a new gaol, a plan of which has received your Lordship's sanction. We inspected a piece of land which had been selected for the building. This ground appears to us to be open to certain objections which we pointed out to the Gaol Committee, and the Council are now engaged in endeavouring to purchase a more eligible spot.

TIVERTON.

Tiverton.

THIS House of Correction contains a Day-room 15 feet square, and three Cells 9 feet by 8 feet for Males. On a floor above are the same number of Cells for Female Prisoners. The Cells are built of solid stone; the partition walls are 15 inches thick; they have each a privy; they are secure and dry, and the ventilation is tolerably good. With a trifling expenditure, these cells might be rendered very suitable for the application of the Separate System.

The Borough contracts with the County for the maintenance of any number of Prisoners not exceeding ten, convicted at sessions, or by justices out of sessions, for any felony or misdemeanor. They are sent to Exeter, a distance of 14 miles. The total number committed in 1835 to the Borough Gaol was 38; the greatest number in confinement at one time has been seven. Three have been detained here a twelvemonth, and several for two or three months.

The prisoners' Cells are open, however, to a serious objection, as the Windows look into a garden which adjoins the lane in which the Prison stands. Any one may without difficulty get into this garden, and thus communicate with the Prisoners.

I.
HOME DISTRICT.
Borough Gaols.

The apartments appropriated to the Debtors form the worst part of the Prison. There is but one room for their confinement by day and by night. They take Air and Exercise in the garden, and, unless constantly watched, they may talk to the other Prisoners through their cell-windows.

The Magistrates are disposed to do whatever may be thought necessary for the amendment of the Gaol, and we are of opinion that it may be enlarged and considerably improved at a moderate expense.

GRANTHAM.

Grantham.

This Prison is situated in the rear of the Town-Hall. There are four Yards, in each of which is a day-room and four cells on the ground-floor 8 feet by 6 feet. The Yards may be inspected from a Window in the turnkey's room. There are in the whole 16 Cells. There were but five Prisoners in confinement at the date of our visit.

Prisoners sentenced to hard labour are employed at a Tread-Wheel.

The prisoners associate freely; but we are of opinion that, considering the small number of commitments, the Gaol may be so altered as to prevent this communication; we would, therefore, recommend the adaptation of the Building to the purposes of Separate Confinement.

There is no Register of Commitments to this prison before January 1835. From that period to August last, the ordinary average number in confinement had been 12 prisoners.

CARMARTHEN.

Carmarthen.

There are in this Gaol eight cells for Criminal Prisoners, each 8 feet 6 inches by 6 feet 6 inches, and two rooms 13 feet by 12 feet, with a day-room and a yard for each sex. The Debtors have four rooms and a yard, but there is not a proper degree of separation between the Debtors and Felons.

The Borough does not contract with the County Justices for the custody of any of its Prisoners; there is, indeed, no occasion for any such arrangement, as the Gaol is sufficiently capacious for the Prisoners committed, although the arrangement of the cells requires amendment.

The total number of Criminals committed from the 1st January to 1st August 1836 was seven Men and three Women, and 20 Male Debtors and two Female Debtors. The greatest number of Prisoners at one time in confinement has been two Criminals and seven Debtors.

The small number of commitments to this Gaol renders it very practicable to adapt it to the Separate System, and we recommend that the necessary alterations be made for that purpose.

DONCASTER.

Doncaster.

This Gaol is modern, and built on the radiating principle, with the Keeper's House in the centre. There are four Buildings occupied by Prisoners, to each of which an airing Yard is attached. The Day-rooms on the ground floor are each 15 feet 6 inches by 13 feet. The sleeping apartments above are of the same dimensions.

Prisoners committed for trial, as well as those sentenced by a Court, are sent to the House of Correction at Wakefield. The Prisoners ordinarily in confinement are Persons under examination, Vagrants, and Debtors.

The number of Prisoners which passed through the Gaol in 1835 was 367; the greatest number in confinement at one time was 32. The greatest number of Prisoners at one time at Wakefield, sent from this borough, was 14.

This Prison was built with a view to classification, and, as the Prisoners are associated in Day-rooms and Sleeping apartments without inspection, the utmost facilities are afforded for corrupt intercourse. The rooms, however, admit of being divided into separate Cells, and the Prison of being enlarged; a measure which we suggested to the Authorities, and which, on your Lordship's recommendation, they are disposed to adopt.

IPSWICH.

Ipswich.

There are two Prisons in this borough, the Borough Gaol, so called, and the Bridewell.

The Borough Gaol contains six Day-rooms, with Sleeping apartments, and four Yards. They are thus appropriated, viz., to Male Debtors, Felons after trial, Misdemeanors, Felons before trial, Female debtors, and Female Felons.

The Prison is very insecure. A Stockade, at the end of each Yard, might easily be converted into the means of Escape; and the disposal of the Prisoners is such that they could, without difficulty, combine and make a general rush. Each of the classes which we have named has a Day-room and Sleeping cells above. The Day-rooms are about 17 feet by 12 feet. There are 20 cells, each 10 feet by 7, and 10 feet high.

I.
HOME DISTRICT.
Borough Gaols.

Conversation and Idleness prevail throughout this Gaol. The Prisoners in their day-rooms are beyond the reach of inspection. The discipline is very lax, nor, indeed, would it be possible materially to improve it, in this badly formed Prison, where the means of association abound in every direction. The Prisoners can in fact communicate with each other from yard to yard, round the Gaol, in a few minutes. The numbers committed render its improvement a matter of importance. The total number in confinement in 1835 was 132, and in the first six months of 1836 there had been 89 Committals; the greatest number in the prison at one time was 36. Some of the Prisoners are sentenced for long periods. Four women were, not long since, imprisoned for 18 months, and a girl for a twelvemonth. The Untried and Convicted Females are placed together. Vagrants, and occasionally other Prisoners, are sent to the borough bridewell. The duties of the gaoler are performed by a Female.

IPSWICH BOROUGH BRIDEWELL.

This is part of an ancient Establishment under the control of an Institution called "Christ's Hospital;" the keeper also superintends the Mendicity-house, which is in the same Building. In the Prison there are, on the ground floor, a Day-room and four Cells; and three cells above, with a covered gallery which serves for the Prisoners to walk in. The day-room is 12 feet by 14, and the cell 12 feet by 7, and 18 feet high. The Prisoners, and even the sexes, can communicate with each other.

The prison is very insecure; there were two escapes over the wall in May last. The privy is in the yard, but in a filthy state, some of the boards of the floor having been taken up. The Men and Women are allowed to take exercise in the yard alternately, for an hour daily, during which the sexes can converse. The Gaoler states that his wife occasionally attends to the Women, but she is not required to do so, and receives nothing for her services. No Clergyman attends, nor is there any Religious Service. A bath is occasionally given to a Prisoner. Friends are allowed to visit. Re-commitments are frequent. The Gaoler stated that one of the prisoners must have spent the greatest part of the last seven years in the Prison.

At the period of this visit we found six Men and three Women in confinement; two of the Women had scarcely a covering. The total number of Prisoners confined in this miserable place in 1835 was 286 Males and 20 Females. The greatest number at one time was 11. The longest period of imprisonment has been six months.

The two Prisons belonging to the Borough of Ipswich are eminently calculated to encourage crime. The corruption of the Prisoners is inevitable in both the Gaol and Bridewell, although appearances in the former are more decent and orderly than in the latter, in which the prisoners are very much neglected. The lowest characters in Ipswich are here assembled, and with little restraint.

We are of opinion that a good Prison should be built, and both the present places of confinement superseded.

LINCOLN.

Lincoln.

This Prison adjoins the Court-house. It contains, on the ground-floor, four Day-rooms, four Cells, and seven Airing-yards; the Rooms are 17 feet 6 inches by 10 feet, and the Cells 10 feet by 8 feet.

In the upper Story is a Sleeping-room 17 feet 6 by 10 feet, an Infirmary of the same dimensions, and eight Cells about 10 feet by 8 feet.

The Prisoners are divided into the following classes:—Debtors, Male Prisoners before trial, Convicted Male Prisoners, and Female Prisoners of all descriptions.

The Prisoners associate freely in their Day-rooms and Yards. The construction of the interior, and the position of the yards, are remarkably favourable to communication, even among Prisoners of different classes. Conversation, laughing, and singing prevail throughout; nor are there any means of punishing prisoners guilty of disorder. Few prisons exhibit a more entire disregard to discipline, and the effects of the confinement must be highly prejudicial to the morals and manners of those committed.

From the 1st January to 30th June 1836 the total number in custody was 115; during this period 35 was the greatest number at one time in confinement. In 1835 there were 249 committals. The longest period of confinement has been 18 months.

We attended a meeting of the Magistrates, and represented to them the necessity of their taking steps for the enlargement of the Gaol. By availing themselves of a piece of ground in the rear of the prison buildings, belonging to the Corporation, material improvements may be effected. We were informed that, with every disposition on their part to comply with the conditions on which they received their grant of Quarter-sessions, they found themselves placed in circumstances of some embarrassment owing to the peculiar position in which the city of Lincoln stands in reference to the Gaol and Municipal Acts.

This difficulty will be removed by a section in the Bill now before the Legislature for the amendment of the Municipal Act; and we are of opinion that the Magistrates should be required to avail themselves of the ground in the rear of the prison, in order to rebuild it upon the separate system; or to contract with the County, and abandon their Gaol.

YARMOUTH.

Yarmouth.

This Prison was rebuilt in 1824, but part of the old Gaol was retained. This part consists of certain Dungeons under the Sessions House, four of which are entirely dark, badly ventilated, and unfit for human habitation. These cells are 6½ feet below the level of the Street.

In the Gaol is a day-room 12 feet square, and 13 feet 6 inches high, a Sleeping Apartment 23 feet long, 9 feet 6 inches wide, and 13 feet 6 inches high. There are besides, four Cells 7 feet long, 4 feet 6 inches wide, and 9 feet 9 inches high, and a Sleeping Apartment, 12 feet long, 7 feet wide, and 14 feet high.

The day-rooms in the House of Correction are 13 feet square and 9 feet high. The Cells are 9 feet long, 6 feet wide, and 8 feet 8 inches high. The partition walls of the Cells are 9 inches.

The prison is bounded on three sides by public thoroughfares, and the interior of the House of Correction may be inspected from the contiguous buildings.

The form of the interior construction of this prison is so radically bad, that we know of no way in which it could be materially improved. There is no power of inspection, and the prisoners are consequently left to themselves, with every facility for communication. The consequence is, that the discipline of the prison is extremely defective, and it is scarcely possible for any man to be confined within its walls without injury to his morals.

The number of prisoners confined in the gaol in 1835 was 124, and in the House of Correction 89, making the total number of commitments 213. The greatest number of prisoners at one time in confinement was 52.

The difficulty of the case is greatly increased by the pecuniary difficulties in which the Corporation is placed. The present state of things, however, is so bad, that we earnestly recommend that if possible an arrangement be made for sending a part of the prisoners to the County Gaol; that means be taken to effect the individual separation of those Prisoners whom the magistrates retain in their Gaol; and that the Dungeons be immediately discontinued.

CANTERBURY.

Canterbury.

The prisoners committed within this borough were formerly confined in the Tower of the western gate at the entrance of the City. In 1826 an Addition was made to the Tower, to which the new Buildings are slightly connected by a Bridge.

The old Tower contains a room about 24 feet square, appropriated as a Chapel. Adjoining are two rooms, 12 feet square. They are nearly dark, having only an aperture of about 6 inches in length, and one inch in width. These are used as night apartments.

Over this Story is the lead flat of the Tower, on which are two rooms about 15 feet square and 10 feet high. One of these apartments is used for Male Debtors, and the other for Female Criminals.

The Prisoners occupying these Apartments walk on the lead flat of the Tower for Air and Exercise, the men and women alternately. Of course, communication between the Sexes is unavoidable.

The modern part of the Prison consists of Apartments for the Gaoler, two day-rooms for untried and convicted Prisoners, with Yards, an Infirmary 16 feet by 14 feet, and 10 feet high; two rooms for superior classes of debtors 15 feet by 10 feet, and 10 feet high; and eight Cells, each 9 feet by 6 feet, 8 feet 6 inches high.

All descriptions of Prisoners are sent to this Gaol, except prisoners summarily convicted, who are sent to the City Bridewell, a place of confinement attached to and within the walls of the Workhouse.

The whole of this prison is extremely unfavourable to inspection and separation, especially the part situated in the old Tower. The prisoners, when walking on the flats, can communicate, not only with other Prisoners (to which we were ourselves witness), but also with passengers below; and instances were mentioned to us of parties having been detected conveying into the prison prohibited articles from the Street. The Tried are separated from the Untried.

The Prisoners in the modern part of the Gaol associate freely; and the Money expended for the enlargement of the Prison appears to have been most injudiciously applied.

The difficulty of amending this Prison is much increased by the confined nature of its situation. The Site does not admit of enlargement, and the only means of improving the construction of the gaol is by a more advantageous division and appropriation of the space on which it stands. We are of opinion that the Tower over the West Gate should be abandoned; that the City should be required to re-construct, on the separate system, the modern part of the Prison, and to contract with the County for the maintenance of those Prisoners for whom accommodation cannot be provided in the Borough Gaol. It is but justice to the Magistrates to add, that they are aware of the defects of the prison, and that they would willingly consent to the erection of a new Gaol, if the finances of the corporation admitted of such a measure. The Magistrates are, however, desirous of doing whatever may lay in their power to effect improvements.

BRIDGNORTH.

Bridgnorth.

THIS Prison is in the rear of the Workhouse, there being but one entrance to both Establishments.

On the ground floor are two Cells 17 feet by 8 feet, and 8 feet high; they have each a Window 14 inches by 12; they are dark, cold, and damp. The partition walls of the Cells are 20 inches, and of brick. There is in each of the Cells a privy. There is also a wooden bedstead 6 feet 6 inches by 5 feet 6 inches.

Adjoining the Cells is an Apartment 17 feet 6 inches by 11 feet 4 inches, and 9 feet high. The floor is of brick.

On an upper floor is a room for Debtors, 17 feet 6 inches by 11 feet, and 7½ feet in height. The Window is 3 feet 6 inches by 2 feet 6 inches.

Adjoining is a Bed-room 12 feet by 8 feet, and 7½ feet high.

Another Room on the same floor is 16 feet 6 inches by 8 feet 6 inches, and 7½ feet high. The Windows of these Apartments are 2 feet by 18 inches.

We found but one Prisoner in confinement, a Deserter. He was confined to his bed with a disorder which the Surgeon said bordered on typhus. The Surgeon complained that there is no adequate accommodation for the Sick.

All Prisoners sentenced to hard labour are committed to the County Gaol at Shrewsbury. Debtors, who take the benefit of the Act, are also sent thither.

The total number of Commitments in 1836 was 22; and the greatest number in confinement at one time was three.

As the distance from Bridgnorth to Shrewsbury is 14 miles, and as there are great facilities for enlarging the present Prison, we conceive that it will be advantageous for the Borough to reconstruct the present Gaol for the separate confinement of as many Prisoners as are likely to be at one time in custody. The magistrates are ready to conform to any arrangement for this purpose.

POOLE.

Poole.

THERE are in this Prison six Cells, besides a day-room appropriated to Debtors.

There is no Day-room, properly speaking, for Untried or Convicted felons. A passage is allotted to this purpose 14 feet by 4 feet, and 9 feet high; here all classes of Males, except Debtors, associate. In this passage are two Night Cells, each 9 feet by 6 feet, and 9 feet high. There are two similar Cells on a floor above. Two prisoners sleep in a Cell.

Prisoners sentenced to hard labour are placed on a Tread-Wheel, but as they are uninspected, they work the Wheel at their leisure, and at times it is stopped. Conversation and levity of all kinds abound in this yard.

From the windows of the upper Cells Prisoners can communicate with persons from the windows of houses in the street.

On the opposite side of the Prison is a debtors' apartment 12 feet by 9 feet, and 9 feet high, over which are two Cells of the dimensions described.

In the rear of the Building is a room 10 feet by 8 feet, and 7½ feet high, containing a bedstead 5 feet by 5 feet 6 inches. This is the only Apartment, day and night, for Women.

The Prisoners are so closely placed together, that they cannot fail to hear everything that is passing throughout the Gaol.

Prisoners of every description, committed within the Borough, are sent to this Gaol. In 1836, 64 were in confinement, of whom five were Women. The greatest number at one time in that year was 14.

There are two Yards, each about 50 feet by 33 feet. There is also a piece of ground in the rear of the Building belonging to the Corporation; and we beg to recommend that the Prison should be materially enlarged. The Sheriff and Mayor are desirous of adopting whatever measures may be considered advisable, to render the gaol an efficient place of confinement.

NORTHAMPTON.

Northampton.

THERE are two day-rooms in this Gaol—the one 13 feet square, and the other 23 feet by 16 feet. There are two other Apartments occupied occasionally in the day, 7 feet square. In addition to these Rooms, there are 16 Cells, eight of which are 10 feet by 6 feet, and the others 11 feet by 7 feet 6 inches. The lower Cells have each a court-yard of the same size as the Cells. In the arched ceilings of the lower range of Cells are trap-doors opening into the Cells above. The trap-doors between the upper and lower Cells afford great facility of communication.

There is a tread-wheel in the South-east corner of the premises.

Seventy-seven Prisoners were confined in this Gaol in 1835, during which period the greatest number at one time was 21.

We beg to suggest that this Gaol be enlarged for the separate confinement of Prisoners. Much may for this purpose be made of the space within its walls.

COLCHESTER.

Colchester.

THIS is a very incommodious building at the back of the Town-Hall. It is appropriated to Prisoners before trial—prisoners after conviction, if not very bad characters—Vagrants, and Debtors.

All prisoners sentenced to hard labour are sent to the County House of Correction near Colchester.

The Prison is divided into a number of Apartments:—

No. 1.—16 feet by 13 feet 6 inches, 7 feet high } in the Town-Hall.
No. 2.—15 feet by 9 feet, 7 feet 4 inches high }
No. 3, below—14 feet by 9 feet 4 inches, and 8 feet high }
Upstairs.—15 feet by 10 feet, and 7 feet high } old part of the Prison.
Below.—15 feet by 10 feet, and 8 feet 3 inches high }

At the end of the Area on the ground floor, are two Cells, 9 feet by 5 feet 9 inches, and 10 feet high.

The number of Prisoners who passed through this Gaol from January to July in 1835 was 154, and the greatest number at one time in custody during that period was 25. In this period 14 persons were in the County House of Correction at the expense of the Borough. The longest period for which a Prisoner has been in confinement in the Borough Gaol has been four months.

It is impossible to maintain an efficient superintendence in this Gaol; and the prisoners confined in the several Cells must necessarily be left to themselves.

As the County House of Correction is within a mile of the Town, we beg to recommend that the Magistrates should, if possible, send all their prisoners thither; reserving their present Gaol as a lock-up house only for Prisoners while under examination, with the means of individual separation.

WINCHESTER.

Winchester.

THE Gaol belonging to this Borough contains a Day-room and a Sleeping apartment for Prisoners of each sex. The Borough contracts with the County for the support of Prisoners after conviction.

The whole number in the Borough Gaol from 1st January to 1st July 1836 was 15 Prisoners; but there have been as many as 11 at one time in custody during that period. Prisoners have been as long as seven weeks in confinement.

We beg to recommend that all prisoners after being fully committed for trial should be sent to the County Gaol, and that the Borough Prison be retained merely as a lock-up house for the separate confinement of Prisoners under examination. Provision should, however, be made for the separate confinement of the sexes.

Debtors committed by the Borough Magistrates are sent to the County Gaol.

DEVIZES.

Devizes.

A SATISFACTORY arrangement has been made with the County Magistrates for the maintenance of all the Borough Prisoners after being fully committed. The Borough Gaol is retained merely as a lock-up house for Prisoners under examination.

NEWARK.

Newark.

THIS gaol is connected with the Workhouse, the same entrance being common to both Buildings. It consists of two Cells on the ground-floor—one 21 feet by 11 feet, the other 11 feet 6 inches by 7 feet 6 inches, and two Cells above—one 21 feet by 11 feet, the other 18 feet by 12 feet; there is also a Cell under ground which is not at present used for the confinement of Prisoners.

There is an Airing-yard 25 feet by 10 feet. Over the gateway is a room for Debtors.

The Gaoler's apartments are on the opposite side of the Gateway.

The Borough has entered into a Contract with the County Magistrates for the committal of Prisoners for trial, and after Sentence, to Southwell House of Correction. The distance is eight Miles. There are, however, sometimes seven or eight persons in confinement in the Borough Gaol, and occasionally persons are detained for a considerable time. One Boy was lately in confinement for 11 months, and Debtors have been there for 16 or 17 weeks. From January to June 1836, there were in confinement 82 Prisoners, and in 1835, 156 Prisoners passed through the gaol. There is no matron to attend the Female Prisoners.

There is no religious instruction, nor is any Divine Service performed on Sundays.

The Gaol is far too limited in space for the confinement of the Prisoners committed to it.

The Borough ought not to be allowed to retain this very bad Gaol. It is extremely defective in every point of view; and we are of opinion that the Magistrates should be required to send all their Prisoners to Southwell, retaining this Prison as a lock-up house for the separate confinement only of persons under examination, separating the Sexes.

PONTEFRACT.

Pontefract.

THIS Prison is on the ground floor of the Town-hall. Upon entering, on the left hand, are two Apartments appropriated to Debtors—the longest 14 feet by 11 feet, the other 12 feet by 11 feet. On the right is a passage leading to the Vagrants' cell, two other Cells, and an Apartment 20 feet by 10 feet, in which the Prisoners are at times allowed to take Exercise, there being no airing-yard of any description attached to the prison. The Windows in this apartment look into the Market-place, and the Prisoners can communicate with persons outside. Spirituous liquors have been thus introduced. Adjoining this Apartment, and deriving their light and air from it, are the two Cells before-mentioned:—One, 12 feet by 8 feet, the other, 12 feet by 5 feet. The Vagrants' cell is an Apartment 12 feet square; these Cells have only a borrowed light, and are very badly ventilated.

By an Arrangement which the Borough has made with the County Magistrates, Prisoners committed for trial, as well as those sentenced, are sent to the County House of Correction at Wakefield. In the year 1835, 62 Prisoners were conveyed from Pontefract to Wakefield, of whom 57 were vagrants. The distance is nine miles.

There is no female Officer appointed to attend to the Women. We did not find a single Bible, or religious book, in any part of the prison. The Gaoler is not resident. He is the police-officer of the town, and receives no salary for attending at the Prison.

We submit that this place ought not to be used for any other purpose than that of a lock-up house; and that the Magistrates should be required to send all their Prisoners to Wakefield, or to make such alterations in the Building as will provide for the separate confinement of all the Prisoners.

SUDBURY.

AT the back of the Town-hall are two Cells on the ground floor, and two above, which are appropriated to the confinement of Prisoners under examination, and also Vagrants. These Cells are 9 feet 6 inches long, 2 feet 6 inches wide, and 9 feet high. The Cells on the ground floor are damp. The Ventilation is very imperfect. Prisoners are seldom detained beyond a few days, when they are sent to the County Gaol at Bury St. Edmund's, a distance of 16 miles. The expense of conveyance is 19*s*. The Gaoler resides in the Town-hall.

There were not any Prisoners in confinement at the date of our Visit. Four Prisoners were stated to be at that time in the County Gaol at the expense of the Borough. From the distance to the County Gaol, the expense of commitment of a man for trial, his conveyance back to sessions, and again to Bury after conviction, amounts to £2. 17*s*.

We were informed that, in order to avoid this expense, offenders were often allowed to escape punishment.

If the Magistrates continue the commitment of their Prisoners to Bury, they should be required to use their present Gaol for no other purpose than as a lock-up house for the separate confinement of Prisoners under examination and during the period of trial.

MALDON.

Maldon.

THIS Borough Gaol is under the Town-hall. It contains two rooms, the one 18½ feet by 20¾ feet and 20 feet high, and the other 16 feet by 11 feet. In the latter there is a recess 6 feet by 7 feet. There is a Yard behind these rooms 18 feet by 9 feet. Prisoners under examination only are kept here. All others are sent to the County Gaol at Chelmsford, a distance of nine miles.

We find that in the year 1835 there were 29 persons committed to this Prison. The greatest number at one time confined during that period was five. The longest period of detention was three months. Prisoners of all classes are placed temporarily in these two Rooms.

There is no separate place for any Prisoner who may be sick. The Women, on going to and from their room, must pass through the men's apartment. No officer is resident.

The Magistrates should be enjoined to use this Gaol only as a lock-up house for the separate confinement of Prisoners under examination.

READING.

Reading.

THE Magistrates already contract with the County for the maintenance of such of their Prisoners as are fully committed for trial, and for all convicted Prisoners sentenced to hard labour. They commit to this Town Bridewell all Prisoners under examination,—Prisoners sentenced to imprisonment, but not to hard labour, and Debtors.

It appears, on examination of the prison books, that in the first six months of 1836 there had been committed to this Gaol 99 Prisoners, and that the greatest number in confinement at one time was 11. The term of Commitment is generally for a few days; but during the period referred to there were ten persons who had been sentenced for various terms from 11 to 50 days. In the last Year there were 16 persons in custody from 15 to 70 days. There are three Cells only allotted to the confinement of the Prisoners. These Cells, which are divided by thin partitions, are in a deplorable state, and incapable of material amendment. Occasionally they have been overcrowded to a most unjustifiable extent. In one cell, 16 feet by 10 feet, and 6 feet high, there have been as many as six persons shut up by day, and five persons at night. Of the suffering thus occasioned an idea may be formed when we state that the only aperture in this cell is a small hole in the door 7 inches square, in which are inserted four bars, which reduce the space for the admission of Air to 7 inches by 5 inches.

I.
HOME DISTRICT.
Borough Gaols.

The County Gaol being situated in the Town, we earnestly recommend that the Borough Magistrates should make arrangements for the maintenance of all their Prisoners, even those under examination, in the County Gaol; but should they not succeed in effecting this object, we would suggest that, instead of the present defective Gaol, which ought to be entirely abolished as soon as practicable, a few Cells, adequate to the number of Prisoners likely to be committed, should be erected.

The Magistrates declare their readiness to accede most cheerfully to any suggestions which your Lordship may make to them.

GUILDFORD.

THE only place of confinement belonging to this Borough is merely a lock-up Cell, with straw on the floor.

Although the magistrates state their intention to be to send all their Prisoners to the County Gaol, we submit that they should be required strictly to act up to this arrangement, as their present Gaol is scarcely fit for the confinement of a Prisoner even for a single Night.

HYTHE.

Hythe.

THIS Prison has three rooms:—No. 1.—15 feet by 10 feet and 13 feet in height, having a window about 3 feet 2 inches square. This is generally used as a day-room for men. No. 2.—9 feet 6 inches by 12 feet 3 inches, and 7 feet 9 inches in height; the Window is 2 feet 2 inches square. No. 3.—9 feet 3 inches by 7 feet 5 inches; the height is 7 feet 6½ inches; the Window is 2 feet 3 inches square.

We found one Female, convicted of shop-lifting, who had been five months in the Prison. The total number of Commitments in 1835 was 12, and in 1836, six. The greatest number at one time in confinement was one man and one woman. No prisoners are sent to the County Gaol.

The Magistrates are about to make an arrangement with the Borough of Dover, for the maintenance of their Prisoners—a very desirable measure. Should this be concluded, the present gaol should only be used as a lock-up house for the separate confinement of persons persons under examination.

FOLKSTONE.

This gaol is the property of the Earl of Radnor, who, as lord of the manor, appoints the Keeper.

There are four Apartments:—No. 1.—9 feet by 10 feet, and 6 feet 7 inches in height; the window a foot square, not glazed. No. 2.—10 feet 9 inches by 9 feet 3 inches, and 6 feet 9 inches in height; the window the same. No. 3.—10 feet 5 inches by 6 feet 4 inches, and 6 feet 9 inches in height; the window the same. No. 4.—8 feet 9 inches by 10 feet 4 inches, and 7 feet 4 inches in height; the window the same.

Prisoners committed for trial, Debtors, and persons convicted and sentenced for short periods, are sent to this gaol—the numbers, however, are remarkably small; the total number of committals in 1835 being only seven, and in 1836, six. There has been no female prisoner since July 1834. The greatest number at one time in confinement in the last three years was three.

There were no persons in confinement at the period of our Visit.

The Magistrates of Folkstone cannot do better than arrange with the Council of Dover for sending to the Gaol of that place Prisoners who are fully committed for trial, or summarily sentenced, as well as Prisoners convicted at the sessions; using the present Gaol merely as a lock-up house for the separate confinement of Prisoners committed for and under examination.

It will be necessary, however, to provide some means of ventilating and warming such of the Apartments as may be retained even for that purpose; for, at present, they are not fit for the confinement of a prisoner. The bedsteads and bedding were wet with the damp of the rooms.

DEAL.

Deal.

There are four Rooms in this Prison:—No. 1.—23 feet by 12 feet 8 inches, and 14 feet in height; in which are four bedsteads 4 feet 5 inches wide. This room is ventilated by a window about 2 feet square over the door. No. 2.—16 feet 6 inches by 8 feet 4 inches, and

I.
HOME DISTRICT.

10 feet in height. No. 3.—12 feet 8 inches by 12 feet, and 7 feet 3 inches in height. No. 4, is over the room last described, and of the same size.

The rooms numbered 1 and 2 are used for Male Prisoners; the other Apartments for Women.

A Contract has been made by the Town-Council for sending Prisoners to Sandwich Gaol; but it is at present the practice to commit to the Deal Gaol all persons committed for trial, and others sentenced to imprisonment without labour.

There have been but two Debtors within the last two years. In 1836, the total number committed was 14, one only of whom was a woman. A period of seven months has elapsed since the commitment of a female prisoner.

At the period of our Visit there was no Prisoner in confinement. These facts are highly creditable to the moral character of a Population consisting of 7000 souls, and among a part of whom there has for some time prevailed considerable distress.

We beg to recommend that the arrangement which has been made to send to Sandwich certain descriptions of Prisoners only, be extended to all others who may be fully committed for trial, or summarily convicted, and that the present Gaol at Deal be retained only as a lock-up house for the separate confinement of such as may be committed to it.

BUCKINGHAM.

Buckingham.

THERE are four Rooms in this Prison, to which is attached a Yard 32 feet by 28 feet. In this yard is a pit 7 feet by 6 feet, and about 5 feet deep, containing an accumulation of filth. The filth is only removed once a-year. The privy and drains are also very offensive.

The Prison is entered through the kitchen of the Keeper's house. One of the rooms on the ground floor is 15 feet 6 inches by 12 feet 6 inches, and 8 feet high, with a window 3 feet 10 inches square; part only of the floor is paved with stone: here the Male Prisoners sleep, as well as associate during the day. There are no bedsteads.

The adjoining room is 14 feet by 11½ feet, and 7 feet high, with windows of similar dimensions, and is entirely unpaved. There is no fire-place in either of these Apartments.

A Room up stairs, 14 feet by 11½ feet, and 7 feet high (having a fire-place), is generally appropriated as a Sleeping room for Female Prisoners. The Men, however, have access to this Apartment, and the Women to the Men's room and yard below. One Woman was in custody at the date of this Visit; she had free communication with the Men during the day.

An adjoining Room up stairs, of the same size as that described, is seldom used for the Prisoners.

The Gaol is cold, damp, and offensive.

It was painful to find a lad of 17 years of age who had been for five months confined in this miserable place.

The greatest number of Prisoners at one time in 1836 was six, one of whom was a female. All Prisoners sentenced to hard labour are sent to the County House of Correction at Aylesbury—a distance of seventeen miles.

We are of opinion that this Prison should be abandoned, or retained merely as a lock-up house for the separate confinement of Prisoners before they are fully committed; and that, even in this case, some arrangements should be made for the effectual separation of the Sexes. There is a strong disposition on the part of the Magistrates to build a new Gaol if the funds of the Corporation permitted them to do so; this, however, is not the case. Unless, therefore, the judicial boundary of the Corporation be extended, or the County Magistracy can be induced to join with the Borough-Council in erecting a prison, there is, we understand, no possibility of funds being obtained adequate to the purpose. Should neither of these objects be attainable, we beg to recommend that the present Contract with the County be, if possible, extended, and that all Prisoners, except those under examination, be sent to Aylesbury.

FAVERSHAM.

Faversham.

There are three rooms in this Prison of the following dimensions;—No. 1.—12½ feet by 11 feet, and 10 feet high. No. 2.—11½ feet by 10 feet, 10 feet 3 inches high. These Rooms are on the ground floor, and have access to a yard 41 feet by 10½. No. 3.—10½ feet by 7½ feet, 8 feet high.

The Apartment, No. 3, is on the upper floor, and is generally appropriated to Females. The number of Prisoners is very small; not more than 11 having been committed in the year 1836. Of these, three were Debtors: one had been confined 20, another 28, and the third 45 days.

We beg to recommend that this place be used merely as a lock-up house for the separate confinement of Prisoners under examination, and that the Council contract, if practicable, with the County for the maintenance of all other descriptions of Prisoners.

IMPRISONMENT OF MILITARY OFFENDERS.

I.
HOME DISTRICT.

Imprisonment of Military Offenders.

ANOTHER subject to which, pursuant to your Lordship's instructions, we have devoted much inquiry and reflection, is that of the Imprisonment of Military Offenders under Sentences of Courts Martial.

In the correspondence respecting military imprisonment, which has taken place between your Lordship, the General Commanding in Chief, and the Secretary at War, and to which your Lordship has been pleased to direct our careful attention, we find two different modes suggested, by one or other of which it is believed that the sentence of imprisonment upon offenders convicted under military law may be advantageously carried into effect.

The first is that which appears to your Lordship to be the best that, for the present at least, can be adopted for effecting this object; that is, to provide suitable accommodations in those prisons to which the largest number of military delinquents is now sent; the Government providing for a portion of the expense which will necessarily be incurred in placing those prisons in a state to afford the means of entire separation of the military prisoners confined in them.

The other course, suggested by the General Commanding in Chief, is, that eleven separate military prisons should be erected in Great Britain and Ireland; one in London, one in Kent, one in Manchester, one in Northamptonshire, one in York, one in Winchester, one in Devonport, one in Edinburgh, and three in Ireland, exclusively of the Provost Prison in Dublin; or that, if this project should be considered as formed upon too large a scale for immediate adoption, three only should be built in the first instance, as an experiment; one in England, one in Ireland, and one in Scotland.

We may here state that, on considering the two plans just noticed, a third course occurred to ourselves, as an efficient means of carrying your Lordship's views into effect; namely, the erection of a certain number of cells attached to each garrison, or barrack station, in which the sentences in question might be undergone, under the immediate inspection and control of the Commanding Officer of the corps to which the offender belonged.

It was your Lordship's desire that we should consider the subject of the abovementioned correspondence "in all its bearings," and "report fully the result of our inquiries." In order that our investigation might be as extensive and complete as possible, we pointed out to your Lordship the necessity of our visiting and inspecting the principal prisons to which the largest number of military delinquents is now sent, and the barrack stations in their neighbourhood. With this view we were furnished with letters from your Lordship to the Visiting Justices; from Lord Fitzroy Somerset (by direction of the General Commanding in Chief), to the Commanding Officer of the several barrack stations in England and Wales; and from Sir Andrew Leith Hay (by direction of the Master-General of the Ordnance), to the several Barrack-Masters; informing them that the Inspectors of Prisons for the Home District had been directed by the Secretary of State to report fully upon the best means of carrying into effect the sentence of imprisonment upon offenders convicted under military law; and requesting them to afford the Inspectors every facility and information in the inquiries which they might find it necessary to make. And we have much satisfaction in reporting to your Lordship that, from all the parties with whom we have had occasion to confer, we have met with the greatest attention, and have received the most valuable information and assistance.

In the course of our inquiries we have visited and inspected many of the principal prisons to which the largest number of military prisoners is sent; we have conferred with Visiting Justices, and we have examined many experienced and intelligent keepers of prisons; we have also visited the principal garrisons, and several barrack stations in various parts of England; and we have carefully examined the cells, or black-holes, and other places of confinement attached to them; we have also conferred with nearly 50 Officers in commands at the several Garrisons, Barrack stations, and Depôts, which we have visited. The result of these inquiries we have now the honour to submit to your Lordship.

And first, with reference to the arrangement proposed by your Lordship, that of

I.
HOME DISTRICT.

Imprisonment of Military Offenders.

providing suitable accommodation in those prisons to which the largest number of military delinquents is now sent, so as to afford the means of entire separation of military prisoners confined therein :—

In none of the prisons which we have visited do the means of affording entire separation of military prisoners now exist. In one or two there is a separate yard and a separate compartment of the tread-wheel allotted to them. But even in these prisons, when any of the soldiers are ill, they are removed to the prison hospital or infirmary, where there is an indiscriminate association of all classes of prisoners. From the previous dissolute life of this class of soldiers, from their broken constitutions, and from their known habits of feigning sickness in order to avoid duty and labour, by inflicting superficial wounds upon themselves or otherwise counterfeiting illness (habits which prevail, under the name of "malingering," to a great extent, and for which a punishment is specially provided by a clause in the Mutiny Act), the number of military prisoners sent to the hospital is great; and under such circumstances, the soldier of perhaps the very worst character in a regiment, the rustic convicted for poaching, the apprentice for running away from his master, and the thief, experienced, hardened, and confirmed in crime, promiscuously mingle.

In some of the prisons to which a separate ward, yard, and compartment of the wheel cannot be given, the soldiers confined under sentences of courts martial are placed with the misdemeanants only; but in others, and more especially whilst on the tread-wheel, they are mingled with felons, utterers of base coin, and with the worst classes of prisoners.

We have carefully inspected the prisons, and we have examined plans, with the view of ascertaining what are the practicable means of improving the construction, so as not only to give the military prisoners a portion of the prison entirely separate from civil prisoners, but so as to prevent them from holding any communication with each other. But we cannot point out a single instance in which this could be done without the entirely new construction of a wing or portion of the prison for military delinquents. In some few prisons there is space within the present boundary wall for such an erection; but, in by far the greater number, this necessary enlargement of the prison would be quite impracticable without an extension of the boundary wall; and in several instances there is no ground adjoining the prison to allow of such an enlargement.

Looking at the prisons generally to which the largest number of military delinquents is now sent, we are compelled to say, that we think it impracticable so to improve them as to afford the means of entire separation of the military prisoners confined in them; and, in those instances where such improvements are practicable, they could only be effected by occupying the space which is indispensably necessary for the improvement of those prisons for the civil prisoners confined in them.

In our communications with the Visiting Justices, and with the Keepers of the prisons, we have found a strong desire on their parts to be relieved from the military prisoners. In consequence of the numbers of military prisoners committed to them, and of their having been obliged to appropriate to their use space which they much needed for the civil convicts, they have, in some instances, been compelled to allow an illegal commixture of the classes. Instead of assigning to each prisoner a separate night cell, they have at times been obliged to sleep them three, and even more, in a cell. The tread-wheel has been so filled up by the military prisoners, that they have been unable to give to the civil prisoners the allotted hours of hard labour. With the exception of some few prisons in the north of England, to which only a few military delinquents have been committed, a strong complaint has been made against the conduct of the soldiers whilst undergoing their imprisonment. It has been stated to us that they are by far the worst conducted class in the prison; that they are with great difficulty made to recognize and submit to civil authority; that they still consider themselves military men, guilty of military offences, and sentenced by military law, and therefore they resist civil authority. The peculiarities of their condition, character, and habits, render the case still more difficult; they are generally men of great bodily strength; that strength has been further developed and increased by training; and, from being taught and habituated to act in combination, they feel, when associated together, a consciousness of strength, which not only renders them remarkably daring and dangerous in disposition, but emboldens them, while in confinement, to the commission of acts of insubordination and violence, which necessarily subject them to additional punishment. Nor is this evil always confined to themselves; it unhappily, in some instances, spreads, by the force of their instigation and example, to the other prisoners, whom they have incited to mutiny within the prison. In one instance the Governor of a gaol was violently assaulted and severely injured by some of the military prisoners; and we have found in the minute books of the Visiting Justices, and in their reports to the Quarter Sessions, cases recorded respecting the misconduct of soldiers, and which strongly exemplified the inconvenience arising from having, in their prison, offenders so dangerous and unmanageable.

I.

Imprisonment of Military Offenders.

Not only therefore is it, in our opinion, impracticable to afford that entire separation contemplated by your Lordship, and which is so necessary for giving increased efficiency to imprisonment as a military punishment; but the attempt to do so would require the appropriation of a larger portion of the civil prison than is at present occupied by the military; whilst even that is found to interfere with the wholesome discipline, the legal classification, and the means of improvement, so much needed as regards civil offenders.

We now proceed to observe upon the measure suggested by the General Commanding in Chief,—that separate prisons should be erected at certain points in Great Britain and Ireland for the confinement of military offenders only.

This course appears to us to be objectionable on many accounts. It is the most costly mode of proceeding. The erection of a new prison, upon an improved plan, must, under any circumstances, be attended with considerable expense. Not only must cells be provided for the prisoners, but also apartments and offices for the superintending and subordinate officers. The boundary wall, the chapel, the hospital, the kitchen, and other offices, all involving a considerable outlay, must be provided in a new prison. There must be high salaries for the Governor, Chaplain, Surgeon, and superintendents. The labours of these officers in a prison are difficult, distasteful, and unintermitting; and cannot be expected to be undertaken and retained by efficient, intelligent, and upright men, without a liberal salary. Great expenses must also be incurred for journals, character and account-books, and stationery, necessary for a large prison, and for clerks to keep and arrange them. The cost of construction, and maintenance of a proper staff for each of these prisons, would amount to a very large sum.

But even were the larger number of prisons recommended by the Commander-in-Chief constructed; that is, eleven for Great Britain and Ireland, exclusively of the Provost Prison in Dublin, still, though the sites were fixed upon, as Lord Hill suggests, with reference to the gaols in which the greatest number of military prisoners are confined, it will be seen, from what follows, that they would be more remote from several of the barrack stations than the civil prisons now employed for the confinement of military offenders. The Commander-in-Chief suggests, in the first place, the erection of seven military prisons in England: but, by the return made to the House of Commons in 1834, it will be seen that there were 39 gaols in England to which military offenders were committed. Now, even in this latter case, where the 39 gaols must have been so much more contiguous to several of the barrack stations than any seven prisons could be in the same space, one of the strongest grounds urged by nearly all the military men with whom we have conferred, against the practice of committing soldiers to prison, is the additional duty and burden which it throws upon the well-conducted soldier. Not only is the duty of the well-behaved soldier increased by the absence of the bad one, whilst he is in gaol, but there is a heavy duty of escorts, who are to take the prisoner to gaol, and fetch him back to the regiment after his term of imprisonment shall have expired. These escorts cause a considerable expense to the country, as well as to the men themselves, in the additional wear and tear of their "necessaries," which are to be made good out of their own pay. Besides, the absence of the escort necessarily throws additional regimental duties and fatigues upon the diminished number of the corps at home.

Another objection to the marching of military offenders to a distance, accompanied as they must be by their escorts, is the public attention which they excite; inasmuch as considerable disgrace is thus brought upon the military character and profession, by the mischievous and erroneous impression which is made upon the public mind by the frequent escort, with its military costume and array, and the handcuffed offender exposed, on the highway, to the public gaze, and producing a belief that military offenders are disproportionately numerous, when compared with the civil offenders, whose committal, in the prison van, and often in the night, or accompanied by the constable, in the civilian's garb, seldom attracts the public notice. This objection is, we respectfully submit, entitled to particular attention. Appearances of frequent occurrence, calculated to produce on the public mind impressions inimical to the character of the army, cannot be too scrupulously avoided; and the earnestness with which we have found military men protesting against this evil gives an emphasis to this objection, which, we are persuaded, will procure for it due consideration from your Lordship.

We think there is danger to be apprehended from concentrating, at any given point, large numbers of the worst characters of the different regiments of the army. Military men, as we have observed under the former head, are collectively more powerful than an equal number of any other class; they would always require a considerable staff to control them; and prisons allotted solely to large numbers of such characters might, in difficult and dangerous times, be made by the disaffected points of attack; and be deemed sources of assistance by insurgents, which it would be impossible to contemplate without much uneasiness and alarm. This objection, whatever force it may have with respect to the larger number of military prisons which the plan of the Commander-in-Chief contemplates, acquires much greater weight when considered with reference to only one prison for each of the three kingdoms. These are our reasons for objecting to the plan proposed by the Commander-in-Chief.

The third course suggested was the erection of a certain number of cells attached to each garrison or barrack station, in which the sentence of imprisonment by Courts Martial might be undergone. This course, as we have observed, occurred to ourselves, on considering the two other plans, suggested severally by your Lordship and by Lord Hill; and in submitting it to your Lordship, we beg to state that, for the main facts and arguments by which we are about to support its fitness and expediency, we are indebted to military men of practical knowledge and of long-tried and extensive experience. And we persuade ourselves that, in seeking for and confining ourselves to such arguments and facts as our careful examination of such evidence and authorities have furnished us with, we shall best satisfy your Lordship's expectations, and our own sense of the importance of the inquiry to which our attention has been directed. We felt, from the commencement of our investigations, that this was a practical question, to be determined only by practical men, upon practical grounds; that it would be presumptuous in us, in a matter so peculiar, and so exclusively appertaining to the military profession, to offer our own sentiments only; and that the information we might possess on the question of civil prison discipline, would not, of itself, in this case, stand us in stead. We are certain, therefore, that your Lordship will not deem the caution with which we have thought it necessary to proceed, either excessive or misplaced, or consider the field of investigation too wide, from which we have endeavoured to collect our information and materials. Our inquiries brought us in contact with military officers of distinguished talents and experience, intimately acquainted with the character, habits, and propensities of their men; for whom we found they felt a strong attachment, and in whose welfare they took a deep and unfeigned interest; men who, from extensive experience, knew well the working of the present system, and who were fully sensible of its merits and defects. We have had the honour of conferring with at least 50 officers; some of them generals commanding garrisons; others, colonels, majors, and captains commanding regiments, detachments, and depôts; and adjutants, who have had great experience of the means requisite for maintaining the discipline, and for the punishment of the various infractions of duty; and in proceeding to detail to your Lordship the result of our inquiries, it shall be our endeavour faithfully to report their sentiments, and the information with which they have furnished us. To men so well qualified to form a just opinion on this important subject, we proposed the three different plans under consideration; that is to say, the plan for providing the means of entire separation, either in the civil or in military prisons, or in the cells attached to each garrison or barrack station. We endeavoured to make it clearly understood, that the cells in each of these three cases are supposed to be of exactly similar form and construction; that they should be so constructed as to preclude intercommunication between the prisoners; that they should be of sufficient size, properly ventilated, and so furnished as to render it unnecessary for the prisoners to quit them, except by order of the surgeon, when necessary for health; that means should be provided in the cells for giving hard labour in those cases where it is awarded by the sentence of the Court; and for this purpose a simple machine has been constructed, by which labour can be given in a separate cell, and can be rendered light or severe, according to the strength of the individual, or the degree of punishment it is deemed advisable to inflict; with a recording index, by which the quantity of work performed is accurately indicated. We assumed that a uniform diet should be laid down for all prisoners; but that those prisoners who refuse or neglect to perform the sentenced amount of labour should be put on a reduced or punishment diet, until they perform it; as is the practice in civil prisons with the refractory or idle prisoners. And we stated that, where this system had been tried in county prisons with prisoners in separate confinement, it had almost invariably succeeded in producing obedience; that the prisoner soon saw the folly of opposition; that in consequence of the confinement being separate no stubborn prisoner was encouraged in his obstinacy, by having his fellow-prisoners as witnesses and applauders of his contumacy; that there was nothing to keep up false courage or false shame; that there was ample time for reflection; and that thus obedience became certain and uniform. We showed, moreover, that in those few instances of extraordinary obstinacy, where a man persevered in refusing labour, and therefore remained on the reduced or punishment diet, when there was the least prospect of its injuring the health, then the prisoner came immediately under the surgeon's hands, his cell became his hospital, and whatever was necessary was given by the surgeon's order; but that the prisoner was to be made clearly to understand that the time so passed under the surgeon's hands should not, in this case, count as part of the awarded term of his imprisonment; but that, from the time when the surgeon reported the prisoner well, he should again be considered as under the operation of his regular term of sentence. Thus would all possible encouragement to obstinacy be totally cut off, and the prisoner would see it to be his own interest to submit to and perform his awarded punishment. We supposed, also, that in every case the cell should be light; our own experience having attested the fact, that dark cells have the effect of hardening and brutalizing those who are confined in them; that the prisoner, in this case, sleeps away the greater part of his time, in a state of listless apathy and stupid insensibility to his condition, and, consequently, in a heedlessness of the misconduct which brought him into it. We have seen more than one instance of a prisoner who, after having successfully held out for a month together in a dark cell, had been in a few days subdued, and become submissive, in a light one. It may be also proper to remark, that in a light cell the salutary effect of reading and instruction may be expected.—

Such, then, being the supposed construction of the cells, and the discipline to be maintained in them, with the power of securing separate confinement, with or without hard labour, according to the degree of punishment deemed necessary, or according to the known character and disposition of the prisoner, we asked the officers, severally and individually, In which of these three cases supposed (that of the civil prison, or military district prison, or cells attached to the barrack), would you prefer to have such a cell constructed for the confinement of military offenders? And nearly 40 out of the 50 officers answered, "I should prefer those attached to the garrison or barrack. Of the remaining two, I should choose the cells in the civil prison, provided the confinement were strictly separate: I approve least of the cells constructed in a military district prison."

The reasons assigned for this choice by so large a majority corresponded with the uniformity of their opinions. They stated that, in the first case, they should have an efficient punishment immediately and always at hand, so that the punishment would surely and closely follow the crime; that they should then have the advantage of example, the benefit of which would be lost under the other two plans; inasmuch as when once a man is marched off to a distant prison, he, his offence, and his punishment, are alike forgotten; but when the men are called in turn to mount guard over the cell in which a companion is confined, where no intercommunication can take place, they would have a constant warning of the promptitude, the certainty, and the severity of the punishment which must await the offenders; that men would feel the disgrace of having their punishment inflicted in the midst of their comrades; that the system would have a great moral effect upon the corps; which is not the case with imprisonment in a civil prison, even in cases where such punishment is of service to the sufferer. The officers further pointed out the advantage of having the offenders under their own superintendence; where they could see the regulations laid down for a uniform system of punishment carried into effect, without the uncertainty as to the degree of punishment which might be inflicted according to the strictness or laxity of discipline which prevailed in the civil prison to which the offender might be sent, according to the character, disposition, and habits of the officer by whom the prison might be regulated; nothing, in fact, being so different as the degree of punishment inflicted in different prisons. They added that, by this plan, they would be spared the expense and inconvenience of sending away so many men upon escorts, weakening the efficient force upon which falls the fixed and often heavy duties of the regiment; that shorter terms of imprisonment would suffice; and that thus offenders would be sooner restored to their company and to their share in the daily duty. They also said, that the same principle which has led to the disuse of corporal punishment, namely, a sense of the degradation involved in its infliction, should lead us to guard the military offender from the public exposure attending the committal of a soldier to a civil prison, and from an association in confinement and punishment with the vilest characters, with whom he is exposed to the danger of forming an acquaintance—characters, many of whom may be inhabitants of the very town in which the soldier is quartered, and who, after enlargement, may have opportunities of improving, to the worst and most dangerous purposes, an acquaintance which originally commenced, by sight only, in the civil prison. It was further observed that, by having the cells near at hand, a proper measure of punishment would uniformly be awarded to each offender; whereas, where the place of punishment is remote, and where the committal of an offender thereto is attended with many difficulties, it is only in extreme cases that this mode of punishment is resorted to. Thus many are not punished with due severity; others escape altogether; and the offender who might, by a salutary severity in the beginning, have been reclaimed or deterred, becomes so hardened in guilt before severe punishment overtakes him, that it then arrives too late. They said, likewise, that by this plan they should be spared the painful duty of going on with a system which they have so long found to be inefficacious, as is indicated by the increased defaulters' list, the increased numbers of courts martial, of commitments, and re-commitments to civil prisons; and, above all, that they should be spared the painful necessity, to which they are now sometimes driven, of awarding corporal punishment in lieu of the only one they now have—of committing to prisons; which they know has less terror for some men than the bare necessity of performing their duty.

It was stated, however, that the power of committing to the civil prison should be still retained by the military, to be exercised only in the case of old and hardened offenders, whose crimes were great or disgraceful, or whose terms of imprisonment were long, or when the garrison or barrack-cells were all occupied; the means being afforded in the civil prisons of giving to each of this limited number of military offenders entire separation from all other prisoners.

Of the remaining officers with whom we have conferred, nearly all were in favour of retaining the power and the practice of committing military offenders to the civil prisons; and the reasons assigned in support of this opinion were the following:—

That they did not consider those upon whom must devolve the duty of enforcing the system of discipline to be maintained in the barrack-cells equal to the trust. That those only who had made the subject of it the study, and the administration of it the business of their lives, could safely be intrusted with it; that, besides skill, ability, and experience, the office requires unimpeachable fidelity.

That commanding officers should not be subjected to the responsibility of carrying into effect such a punishment.

That the less the military interfere with punishments the better.

That there is so much esprit de corps, so much fellow-feeling and understanding between soldier and soldier, that there would always be efforts to relieve each other; and that a system, the working of which must to a great extent be confided to non-commissioned officers, would not, in consequence, be faithfully worked out.

That by sending the military delinquents to civil prisons, the army were shown that the civil power sanctioned and upheld the military power. That the soldier felt sensibly his removal from his comrades and his barracks, and his being handed over to strangers to undergo his punishment.

The very few officers who were favourable to the construction of military district prisons assigned as the ground of their choice similar arguments to the foregoing; but with this observation in addition, that, by committing to a prison set apart for the military offenders, the service would be spared the degradation of having soldiers, guilty only of military offences, associated in punishment with felons and the worst of characters, and that a more decidedly military feeling would be maintained.

Under the existing system, crime in the army has gone on increasing. According to the returns laid before the House of Commons in 1834, it appears that the number of prisoners committed, under sentence of courts martial, to the several gaols in England, were—

By the returns annexed to this Report it appears that there were

|---|---|
| In the year 1834 . . . | 1328 |
| „ 1835 . . . | 1329 |

The numbers above stated include numerous recommittals; at the same time the defaulters' list has greatly increased, as has also the number of courts martial.

This, we respectfully submit to your Lordship, is in part to be accounted for by the mode in which the present system of confinement in civil prisons operates; the degree of punishment involved in imprisonment depending upon so many circumstances which vary, and must vary, to a very great extent in different civil prisons to which military delinquents are committed. In consequence of the absence of uniformity in their construction and discipline, some prisons afford greater facilities than others for intercommunication, exact less labour, enforce similar regulations with less uniformity and rigour, or adopt a system of discipline in many and important points dissimilar from the rest.

But the increase in the number of military offences is, we think, mainly to be accounted for by the deficiency of power vested in the Commanding-Officer, and of proper means for carrying his sentences into effect. Upon this subject we found the military men with whom we have conferred nearly unanimous. And we feel that we should not be obeying your Lordship's instructions, "to consider the subject in all its bearings," "and to report fully upon it," if we did not bring under your notice circumstances which, in the opinion of experienced officers, no less than in our own, have mainly contributed to produce so great an increase of military commitments to our civil prisons.

The commanding-officer has the power of confining a man in the dark cells or black-hole for 48 hours. We have carefully examined these dark cells in all the barrack stations which we have visited; and we can without hesitation affirm that, viewed as places of punishment, nothing can be imagined less fit for the purpose than these cells. They are generally constructed of wood, but with partitions so slight, and with apertures for ventilation so large and so numerous, that prisoners confined in contiguous cells can freely communicate with each other; they can hear every change of guard, every footfall near the cell; they can often overhear the conversation in the barrack-yard and guard-room—all circumstances calculated to alleviate the tediousness of confinement. In some instances we heard the prisoners confined in the cells singing, and conversing with each other. Not only does the construction of these cells admit of intercourse between the prisoners, but in very many of them there are apertures through which tobacco, pipes, beer, and spirits, may be and are in fact frequently conveyed to the men under punishment. In some barracks the cells are so placed that the windows or apertures for air open upon the lanes in the town or upon the public road, so that the prisoner can both by day and by night converse with his comrades, friends, girls of the town, or other bad characters, and receive from them spirits, tobacco, and other prohibited articles.

Inefficient as these cells are in themselves as a means of punishment, they are rendered still more so by the course adopted with the prisoners confined in them. In most instances we found that the prisoners, unless under confinement by sentence of court martial, received their rations, having their comfortable hot meals as regularly as the good soldier. Each prisoner is let out for an hour's exercise, which at some barracks is taken upon the public parade; on which occasions the prisoners are amused by seeing all that is going forward, they have an opportunity of seeing their comrades, and of exchanging signs, if not words, with them. It is plain that these interruptions of the continuity of the punishment must materially diminish its severity, and deprive it of its efficacy: these periodical alleviations, thus frequently occurring, are to the prisoner subjects of pleasurable anticipation and retrospect, and sufficiently account for that inefficacy of military imprisonment, which is indicated by the increased number of courts martial, and commitments to civil prisons, noticed above. During the time the soldier is under confinement in the black-hole by order of the Commanding Officer, he draws his full pay, so that at the expiration of the 48 hours there is some accumulation of money, furnishing both the means and the temptation to a repetition of the excesses which brought the man under punishment. There is a feeling of languor and debility consequent upon riot and drunkenness, which renders a 48 hours' rest more a boon than a punishment; and, under such circumstances, the performance of the arduous and fatiguing duties of a soldier would be felt to be more oppressive than the two days' rest in a cell, miscalled a punishment! By limiting the term of imprisonment to 48 hours the offender is just enabled to sleep off the consequence of his excesses, and to escape all perception of his punishment; and, just when he is beginning to feel the effects of his misconduct to be irksome and distasteful, the power of the Commanding Officer terminates, and the man returns, with money in his pocket, to his comrades. It must therefore be evident that the punishment of the black-hole, inflicted and limited as it is at present, is worse than powerless as a means of deterring from crime, or of reforming the offender.

I.

Imprisonment of Military Offenders.

But there are many barracks which do not possess even these means, ineffectual as they are, of upholding discipline. In some there is only a lock-up room, where they are under a necessity of associating all prisoners together; in others, where there is no place at all specially appropriated to prisoners, offenders are necessarily confined in the guard-room, not only to the great inconvenience of the guard, but also to their own disadvantage, inasmuch as they are exposed to temptations to heighten their misconduct, and thus to increase their punishment. And two instances of this came, in the course of our inquiries, under our own notice. In a barrack which had no lock-up room or black-hole, a drunken soldier was put in the guard-room until his case should be brought under the notice of the Commanding Officer. He attempted to break his arrest; he broke the windows of the guard-room, he assaulted the soldiers, and finally the serjeant of the guard; and, when ironed, continued through a great part of the night to annoy the guard, and disturb the barrack, by his noise and violence. The other case was similar; but the prisoner did even more mischief, by tearing to pieces a cloak, and breaking some of the furniture of the apartment. Nor are such cases as these rare; on the contrary, we have been credibly informed that they are of frequent occurrence where there are no places of confinement except the guard-room. We can further illustrate the evil arising from the want of proper places of confinement in barracks for military offenders, by stating that in one guard-room we found nine prisoners, seven untried and two convicted, sentenced to 20 days' solitary confinement; but there were no cells in the barrack in which to place them; the few garrison cells were full; and though there were two civil prisons near at hand, yet they were both at the time so crowded with military prisoners, that they could receive no more. There were other stations at which we found soldiers undergoing their punishment in the guard-room, there being no other place of punishment vacant or available.

Another punishment which the Commanding Officer has it in his power to award is confinement in the defaulters' room for seven days. This is a room set apart for those who are on the defaulters' list, in which they are locked up, and over which there is placed a guard. Men confined in the defaulters' room perform all the usual duties of the soldier; they mount guard, they are employed in all fatigues, and, in addition, they are awarded four hours' extra drill in heavy marching order. While thus confined they draw their full pay; but, as they are not allowed beer and tobacco in the defaulters' room, there is at the termination of the punishment an accumulation of pay (except in the case of men who are in debt to their captain), which often leads to a repetition of that misconduct and excess which constituted their original offence. This is a great evil, and its frequency of occurrence proves that it is inherent in the system.—Another evil which necessarily arises from this mode of punishment is, the associating together in one room of all the worst characters in the regiment; here they corrupt each other, and acquire an acquaintance with all the tricks of the service; here they amuse themselves during the allotted period of their imprisonment, and while away the time in narrating their guilty adventures, in indulging in obscene language, or in boisterous mirth; they inflame each other's mind against the service, and against the maintenance of discipline, by exaggerated statements of military hardships, restraints, and punishments; they learn and practise all kinds of deception, by which they endeavour to feign sickness, impose upon the surgeon, and escape their own fair share of duty, which they thus cast upon the good soldier. Between the hours of duty they lounge away their time, contracting, in this way, slovenly, idle, and unsoldierlike habits. It is plain, from this account of the discipline to which such offenders are subjected, that, as a punishment, it is highly objectionable; the practice of taking men out to guards, drills, exercise, parades, &c., breaks in upon that continuity of seclusion and tediousness, to which confinement owes much of its efficacy as a punishment.

We found by far the greater number of the officers with whom we conferred strongly disinclined to this mode of punishment. They were of opinion that, with the old hardened offender, whom no degree of vicious companionship could possibly render worse, it might be slightly felt as a restraint; but with the young soldier, as yet uncorrupted, and ignorant of the tricks of the service, it was his certain ruin. Once commit such a man to the defaulters' room, and he inevitably comes forth a confirmed skulker, and almost in all cases becomes the companion and imitator of the worst and most debauched soldier. In fact the defaulters' room is the school in which the bad soldier disseminates all the evil which he knows and practises. To the punishment of the defaulters' room, however, the Commanding Officer is compelled to resort for the repression of crime: the limited powers with which he is invested forbid him to employ more efficacious means; the barrack cells, owing to their bad condition, affording him no resource.

Another punishment which the Commanding Officer has the power of awarding is a certain number of hours' extra drill, in heavy marching order, for four hours a day, at periods of two hours each; confinement to barracks for certain periods, sometimes as long as a month or six weeks; inhibition from entering the canteen being usually annexed to it. This is a punishment much disliked by the men; and it has been found much more efficient than the defaulters' room; inasmuch as the restraints of that place of confinement are imposed upon men without subjecting them to the evils arising from the associating of so many bad characters together; and as the good men in the barracks may be, and in many instances are, made responsible for the bad ones, thus making it the interest of the well-behaved to aid the Commanding Officer in upholding the discipline. There are, however, many inconveniences attending it. Circumstances are constantly occurring during the period of punishment, which have a mischievous tendency to alleviate its severity, and, in a measure, to destroy its character as a penal infliction. Numerous postponements of the allotted task of extra drill unavoidably happen through the necessity of mounting guard and of performing other duties. There are so many opportunities and temptations to evade the order of confinement to barracks (especially where the barrack is an open one), an offence for which the period of punishment is usually increased, that an arrear of punishment accumulates, and new punishments are added, till at length the offender is led to despair of ever being freed from them. He becomes reckless and hardened; and, to escape from under his restraints, thus rendered galling and vexatious, he commits some graver offence which will subject him perhaps to the defaulters' room for seven days, and thus he is quit of his punishment. An accumulation of pay also takes place in this case, which leads to great excesses, absence without leave, and serious breaches of military discipline. We found, on referring to the regimental books, that many of the offences which had rendered courts martial necessary, were committed by men who were, at the period of the offence, undergoing other punishments, such as confinement to defaulters' room, or to barracks, or to simple extra drill.

The foregoing particulars demonstrably prove that a great evil is inherent in the very nature of these minor punishments; they have an inevitable tendency to instigate to the commission of a second crime before the first is atoned for; and a second offence being engrafted, as it were, on the first, carries with it a general character of recklessness and daring which greatly aggravates its criminality.

We have endeavoured to specify the peculiar features of this case with more than ordinary minuteness, because it strongly exemplifies two evils, which more or less pervade the system of military penal discipline—that of neglecting to define distinctly the precise nature of the punishment; and that of destroying the efficacy of the punishment by permitting the intervention of various military occupations and duties, which interrupt its continuity and mitigate its irksomeness. In short, a punishment which is perpetually changing its character, and is affording constant variety of excitement to the mind of the prisoner, defeats its own purpose; and of this we believe the statement above given will be found to exhibit a convincing proof and example.

Another punishment which the Commanding Officer has power to award is the stoppage of pay for absence not exceeding five days. Though stoppage of pay is disliked by the men, it has not been found to have the effect of checking crime, unless coupled with some other punishment. By confinement to the hospital, defaulters' room, or barracks, an accumulation of pay often takes place, which enables a man not only to pay this penalty for his absence, but to take a companion with him, and pay for him also. Friends not unfrequently send the men money; and women of the town also will come to the barrack-gate, and offer beforehand to pay down the fine which the men will incur by quitting their barrack and their duty for a few days' indulgence and excess with them. At some periods of the year soldiers can earn wages more than sufficient to pay the fine imposed for this offence. It has been found, therefore, in almost all cases, that when stoppage of pay is the only penalty for absence without leave, that offence, at all times the most prevalent in the army, has increased to an enormous extent, and the uniform statement of the military men with whom we have conferred has been to this effect—that in lieu of, or to the exclusion of, other regimental punishments, stoppage of pay is worse than useless; in aid of, or in connexion with, other regimental punishments, it would prove one of great value and efficacy; it would greatly strengthen the hands of the Commanding Officer, and improve the discipline of the corps. It has, however, been stated to us by several officers, that one good effect resulting from stoppage of pay for absence not exceeding five days has been this—that though the number of such offences has increased, yet the period of time during which the soldier absents himself has, in many cases, been diminished; for the soldier, calculating the amount of his punishment, returns sooner to his barrack, and consequently resumes his duties with his strength less impaired, and his health less injured, by that intemperance and excess which almost uniformly accompany absence without leave: for during this time the men are usually in a state of continued drunkenness, going about from brothel to brothel, and from one public-house to another, without taking off their clothes, and subject to all the evils which arise from intemperance and exposure to cold and wet. The operation, then, of this penalty is proved to be so far beneficial, inasmuch as it is shown to have the effect of inducing the men to limit their absence to shorter periods.

I.
HOME DISTRICT.

Imprisonment of Military Offenders.

We found in some stations that the offence of selling necessaries almost invariably attended absence without leave. The consequences of this were, numerous courts-martial, and sentences of longer or shorter periods of imprisonment; but these had not the desired effect of checking an offence so serious in itself, and so burdensome to the captain, who has to advance the money for keeping the soldier's kit in an efficient condition. It is very difficult to convict persons of the charge of purchasing soldiers' necessaries, as discharged men have liberty to dispose of theirs, bearing the regimental stamp. It was, however, very earnestly urged by several officers, that something should be done to check this practice, and to facilitate the detection and punishment of those who encouraged it, by purchasing soldiers' necessaries. They were of opinion that on no account should the sale of such articles be permitted out of the regiment; that an allowance should be made, on a fair valuation, to discharged men, for their necessaries; which might be re-issued at the same rate to recruits; who are now, owing to the inadequacy of their bounty, unable to pay for many months for the outfit of new necessaries, which they are obliged to provide on first joining. This load of debt causes much discontent with the service, and often spoils a man, who might otherwise have made a good soldier. Dead men's effects might be taken in the same way: then the mere possession of soldiers' necessaries would be sufficient evidence to convict a civilian.

Drunkenness, too, is a very prevailing vice among the military, and is the occasion of courts martial and long imprisonments. The accumulation of pay, which, as was observed, is a consequence from the present system of minor regimental punishment, has a tendency to produce an increase of drunkenness; and thus, by injudicious management, the very means by which discipline is sought to be upheld become instrumental in subverting it.

The Canteen system, likewise, as we have been informed by many officers, tends greatly to encourage the vice of intoxication in the army. The canteen is let by the Board of Ordnance to the highest bidder; and, owing to competition, the rent is so high, that the canteen-keeper, in order to recompense himself, and to obtain a fair interest for his money, and a remuneration for his time and services, has a strong temptation to induce the men to drink. He claims also to be the only person in the barrack having permission to sell such articles as butter, milk, tea, coffee, &c.; and in order that the men may be persuaded to drink beer or spirits, which yield a greater profit than the other articles, he either does not provide them at all, or else at so high a price and of so bad a quality, that the men are led, both by the nature of the canteen-keepers' stores, as well as by the company they meet with there, to spend their money upon beer and spirits only, and hence they contract confirmed habits of drinking. If, to guard against consequences so pernicious, the canteen were made over, at a very low rent, to some respectable discharged non-commissioned officer, he would be induced, by the hope of retaining so profitable an advantage, to maintain good order and sobriety in his house; he would feel that, for any permitted excesses among his customers there, his dismissal would be the certain consequence. Under such regulations as these the interest of the keeper of the canteen would be no less concerned than that of the Commanding Officer in maintaining discipline and sobriety. In this case, also, a licence might be granted to soldiers' wives or others to sell tea, coffee, milk, &c.; the soldier would then be able to procure those articles of a good quality and at a reasonable price, instead of being under the necessity of obtaining them at an exorbitant rate, and of the worst quality, amidst the vicious associates and temptations he must meet with at a public-house.

Imprisonment of Military Offenders.

Having thus briefly adverted to some of those features in the present system of secondary military punishments, which appear to us to have greatly contributed to increase the number of commitments to the civil prisons, we proceed to submit to your Lordship certain propositions for the improvement of the system, by the adoption of which we feel persuaded that a great reduction in the amount of military offences and punishments may be effected, and the numerous but obvious consequences of both may be prevented.

1st. That a certain number of cells be erected in each garrison or barrack-station, at the rate of about 3 cells per 100 men.

These cells are to be used for offenders under sentence either of the Commanding-Officer, or of Regimental or District Courts Martial; except it shall be deemed advisable, in the case of crimes of a disgraceful nature, or of some hardened offender sentenced to a long period of confinement, to commit him to the nearest civil prison. And this number is very small, as may be seen on a reference to the returns annexed to this Report:—

Of 1328 military delinquents committed in 1834 to civil prisons in England, 20 only were for terms exceeding 6 months.

Of 1329 offenders committed to civil prisons in 1835, 24 only were for terms exceeding 6 months.

The principal Garrisons possess convenient situations for the erection of a block of cells.

Pentagon, No. 4, in the General Penitentiary, may be conveniently set apart for the troops in and about the Metropolis; but it will be necessary to construct all the cells in this Pentagon upon the same plan with those which have recently been erected in that prison.

Sites for the requisite number of cells may be found in, or adjacent to, the greater number of barrack-stations in England.

And in situations where the regiment is much distributed, it may be necessary to have the cells at head-quarters, or in some central situation; and the marching the prisoners to a remote place of confinement, which is now the general practice, would then be the exception to the rule, and an event of rare occurrence.

Plans and ample details for the construction and fitting up of a good prison-cell on the Separate System will be found in this Report, (Page 32, Plate M.)

The expense of the erection of each cell will be the same, whether it be constructed in a civil prison, or in a garrison or barrack-station. But in the latter case no boundary wall will be requisite, nor apartments for the officers who are to superintend them. Both a Surgeon and Chaplain are available in each barrack-station; and the guard of the day will furnish a sentinel. The Officer of the day may visit the prisons and inspect the cells. In short, the staff necessary for the due regulation and superintendence of good barrack-cells is already provided at each barrack-station.

But were it practicable, and deemed advisable, to construct the cells for military delinquents in civil prisons rather than in barracks, it would still be necessary to improve the present barrack punishment-cells, for better carrying into effect the sentence of the Commanding Officer; and the considerable outlay which the alteration would involve would be saved by the erection of the cells in the barracks; as they could then be available for all prisoners, whether sentenced to confinement by the Commanding Officer, or by a Court Martial.

2ndly. That a provost-serjeant be appointed for each barrack, with one assistant or more, from amongst the non-commissioned officers, according to the strength of the garrison, to regulate the prison discipline, to see that prisoners have proper diet,

I.
Home District.

Imprisonment of Military Offenders.

according to their sentences, and to superintend whilst at work those who may be sentenced to hard labour.

These provost non-commissioned officers should also perform the duty of military police, being actively employed in keeping bad characters away from the barracks; in preventing irregularity throughout the garrison; and frequently visiting the canteen, to prevent drunkenness and gambling.

3rdly. That the power of the Commanding Officer to award confinement to the barrack-cell, or black-hole, be extended to 7 days.

4thly. That stoppage of pay (with the exception of a sum not exceeding 6*d.* per day, to be drawn for subsistence) shall accompany the sentence of confinement to the cell by the Commanding Officer, as it now does the sentence of a Regimental, or District Court Martial.

This proposition is founded upon the equitable principle—that when a man by misconduct disqualifies himself for the performance of duty, he cannot justly claim that pay, to which the performance of duty can alone entitle him. And that no possibility or suspicion of abuse may attend this increased power, it is suggested that monthly returns of the mode and extent of its exercise be transmitted to the Horse Guards. After much consideration of the subject we are led to the conclusion that, where such publicity is given to all proceedings, and such responsibility is involved in the exercise of authority, no apprehension can justly be entertained of an undue or tyrannical exercise of power on the part of the Commanding Officer. It is with great and unfeigned satisfaction that we embrace the occasion of bearing testimony to the kindly and almost parental feeling which we have seen manifested on the part of the officers towards their men: they appeared to us to feel and to act as if they considered that they could never do enough for the well-conducted soldier, whilst they only require a proper degree of power to restrain and punish the dissolute one. Care, however, may be taken not to allow the increased power to devolve upon inexperienced officers of junior rank, when on detached duty. We would observe finally upon this head, that, by investing the Commanding Officer with increased power, the number of courts martial will be lessened, and their efficacy, when it is necessary to resort to them, proportionably increased.

5thly. That the authority of Regimental Courts Martial be extended to the power of awarding 40 days' imprisonment, with or without hard labour; and that they also be empowered to try offenders for habitual drunkenness, or for the crime of stealing from a comrade, or from regimental or public stores.

Under this head we would observe that it is a matter of the last importance that a court should sit, and that its sentence should be approved and carried into execution, as soon as possible after the commission of an offence and the apprehension of the offender. The delay which, under the present regulations, unavoidably takes place both previous to and after trial by a district Court Martial, is attended with this great inconvenience—that, through lapse of time, the delinquent becomes almost insensible to the heinousness and disgrace of his offence, and to the real character and design of his punishment. Besides, in some parts of the kingdom, it is difficult to assemble a Garrison or District Court Martial; and much expense and inconvenience are occasioned to the public and to the witnesses, both by the delay and by the distance to which the latter must go to attend the trial.

6thly. That stoppage of pay for absence without leave be in aid, not in lieu, of other regimental punishments.

7thly. That a uniform code of regulations be laid down for enforcing the discipline to be observed in the garrison or barrack stations.

8thly. That a uniform diet be ordered for all prisoners confined in garrison or barrack-cells; reference being had, in framing it, to the nature and duration of the sentence.

9thly. That a uniform scale of crime and punishment be laid down.

10thly. That a uniform set of report and defaulters' books be kept throughout the Army.

With reference to propositions 7, 8, 9, and 10, we found great discrepancy in the practice of different corps, even where stationed in the same barrack.

11thly. That better regulations be adopted as to the management and letting of canteens.

12thly. That the sale of soldiers' necessaries shall in no case be permitted out of the regiment; and that the having possession of them be declared an offence, and sufficient to convict a civilian.

13thly. That the time passed in confinement in a prison or punishment cell, whether by sentence of a Commanding Officer or of a Court Martial, be not reckoned as part of the soldier's service.

We deem it incumbent upon us to advert to the great necessity and advantage of the services, moral and religious, of a Chaplain, whose attendance upon the men under confinement in separate cells is calculated to produce upon their minds impressions of a most salutary nature. Nothing can be conceived better fitted to give effect to the admonitions and instructions of the minister of religion than the circumstances under which he finds the prisoner; nor is it easy to overstate the value of the opportunity which is then afforded of giving to the offender's thoughts a proper direction, laying before him the nature and consequences of his guilt, the justice of his sentence, and the duty of repentance and amendment. Without such a monitor and guide at such times men are apt to become sullen and revengeful, and come forth from their confinement either with feelings depressed through a sense of shame and disgrace, or (which is worse) with a reckless indifference, or a hatred and contempt for those regulations and restraints for which the interests of the service demand that the soldier should be taught to entertain an habitual reverence. There is a state of mind, the very reverse of this, which experience attests to be the almost uniform consequence of a zealous and judicious discharge of the duties of a Chaplain with the prisoner; and with this persuasion, we cannot too strongly recommend that the services of such an officer be secured in every Barrack Station; and that where there is no regular Military Chaplain, an arrangement should be made with the clergyman of the parish in which the barrack is situated, to secure his regular attendance with the men under confinement. On the subject of the importance and necessity of a Chaplain's services with soldiers under punishment we beg to refer your Lordship to the evidence of the Rev. Harry Stuart, Military Chaplain to the Depôt at Aberdeen, given before His Majesty's Commissioners for inquiring into the system of Military Punishments in the Army—an evidence deserving of much consideration, and marked by judgment and experience, discretion and zeal. To the duties of the Chaplain (of which we have spoken with an earnestness only proportioned to their importance) are to be added those of the Inspecting Officer of the day, and of the Surgeon, whose regular attendance is in all cases to be insured by the strict enforcement of the rules of the barrack. From all these advantages, seconded by the circumstances of the prisoner—his short term of imprisonment; the improved construction of his cell; the care with which his health and general well-being are provided for—the best results may be confidently anticipated. The soldier, at the expiration of his imprisonment, is restored to home, and pay, and occupation in the service; the very circumstances in which he finds himself upon his enlargement have a tendency to cherish and confirm any good resolutions he may have been previously led to form; for his condition, unlike that of the discharged civil offender, exempts him from that destitution and loss of friends and character, by which the latter too often feels himself encompassed and discouraged. Indeed, the very certainty with which the soldier looks forward to the resumption of his comforts, station, and employments, tends materially to aid the efforts of the Chaplain, by that freedom from anxiety about the future which his condition happily imparts to him.

And now, my Lord, in conclusion, we would respectfully submit to your Lordship, that had it been your pleasure to instruct us to report upon the subject of military criminal discipline, taken in its fullest extent, we should, were we to stop here, be doing but half our duty. The foregoing observations have reference only to bad soldiers, with a view to restrain them the more effectually from crime: but our inquiry has strongly impressed upon our mind the conviction that this is but a very partial view of this most important subject; the consideration of suitable rewards and encouragements for the good soldier, and of the means of contributing to his happiness, by raising him in his own estimation, and in that of his comrades, and of the service generally—this is a subject which has been forced upon our attention throughout the whole course of our inquiries. Nothing would have a greater influence in encouraging good habits, and in supplanting bad ones; in raising the tone of discipline, and the general character of the soldiery, than the consulting the comforts and interests of the good soldier, and the conferring upon him those marks of distinction upon which the men greatly pride themselves, and which, however intrinsically slight, are, in the soldier's esteem, of the very highest value, and a source of the very greatest gratification. This fact constitutes one of the many proofs which we have met with in our intercourse with military men, that, to be able to arrive at a just and well-grounded conclusion on a subject of this nature, no help can be safely derived from preconceived theories, however ingenious they may appear—that experience alone, and a wide and deep acquaintance with the habits, inclinations, and peculiar feelings, and even prejudices of military men, are absolutely necessary to qualify any one to pronounce an opinion upon this subject; and that any legislative enactments, or regulations proceeding from authority, which are not based upon a careful induction of particulars, and a full and complete register of facts relative to the habits and character of the Army, will want that which is essential to a sound and efficacious code of regulations, namely, an adaptation to that to which it is meant to be applied. Upon the subject of military rewards we have received many valuable suggestions from officers of great judgment and experience; but we refrain from offering them to your Lordship here, lest we should incur the charge of presumption, in overstepping the limits prescribed to us in our instructions.

Whatever be the conclusion to which your Lordship may be led, on an examination of the facts and suggestions which we now have the honour to present in this Report, we feel it due no less to your Lordship than to our sense of the magnitude of the national interests involved in this inquiry, to say that the state of crime in the Army calls for well-weighed interference without delay. The absence of strictness and uniformity in the present system is unequivocally marked by the prevalence of desertion, drunkenness, and other crimes in the Army; and the very means by which those crimes are sought to be repressed become themselves, as we have shown, incentives to their repetition in a more aggravated form. Punishment and crime, under the present system, are found to react upon and inflame each other, and it will be difficult to assign a limit to abuses which may result, if a timely and judicious remedy be not applied. We have endeavoured to mark the defects of the system, and to show what, in our judgment, supported by the opinions of numerous and unquestionable authorities, would tend to correct the present evils, and to produce, in their stead, sobriety, attention to duty, satisfaction in the performance of it, and a fair and equitable share by every member of each corps of those burthens, which are now too often shifted by the idle and worthless upon the well-behaved and willing soldier. Thus will crime, punishment, and expense be diminished, and the efficiency of the Army be augmented.

JUVENILE OFFENDERS.

Juvenile Offenders.

The treatment and disposal of juvenile offenders, a subject on which your Lordship was pleased to direct us to report at an early period of our labours, has continued to receive much of our attention. The nature of the evil, and the remedies which appear to be best calculated to arrest its progress, were so fully entered upon in our last Report, that we deem it necessary to say but little more on the present occasion than that subsequent inquiry has confirmed the statements and views which we have already laid before your Lordship, in reference to this interesting and important class of delinquents.

We regret to find, by the following statement, that there has been, in the past year, an increase in the numbers of commitments of boys to the metropolitan gaols:—

Number of Boys, aged 16 and under, committed to the Gaols in the Metropolis in the Years 1835 and 1836.

| | 1835 | 1836 |
|---|---|---|
| Newgate | 319 | 401 |
| Giltspur-street Compter | 233 | 149* |
| Bridewell | 174 | 464 |
| Coldbath-fields Prison | 937 | 984 |
| Clerkenwell Prison | 511 | 587 |
| Westminster Bridewell | 681 | 547 |
| Borough Compter | .. | .. |

The mischievous effects of imprisoning boys in the metropolitan gaols, and, for the most part, in all other prisons, is now so generally admitted, that we refrain from offering any further remarks upon the subject. Whatever measures may be adopted by the Legislature for the more speedy trial and ultimate disposal of criminal boys, we trust that arrangements may be made for committing them no longer to ordinary gaols. The mere sight of, and occasional intercourse with, other prisoners, render a youth familiar with scenes and impressions most unfavourable to his morals and character; and we believe that it is rarely that a boy enters a gaol, however slightly he may be tainted by crime, without deep and permanent injury.

Among the remedies which have been suggested for the suppression of juvenile delinquency, there are none of greater importance than the establishment of a Reformatory for this description of offenders. We rejoice that His Majesty's Government have determined upon this wise and benevolent measure. The success of this Institution will, however, in a great measure, depend on its internal regulations—the estimation in which it is held by those classes of society in which the juvenile depredator is mostly to be found—the duration of the imprisonment to which the boys will be subjected—and the manner in which they may ultimately be disposed of.

We are of opinion that but little, if any, permanent benefit will be produced, if the boys are committed to this prison for short periods. The imprisonment should be sufficiently long to wean the offender from his vicious habits, and give scope to the employment of those means which experience has proved to be indispensable for the correction and reform of criminal youth. Short periods of imprisonment, however frequently they may be repeated, produce no regenerating and lasting effects upon the mind and character. In the cases in which the nature of the specific crime does not apparently justify a long sentence, we submit whether the repetition of such acts should not constitute an aggravated offence, and be visited by lengthened imprisonment and subsequent banishment.

The discipline of the Reformatory should be adapted to the habits of youth, and moral and religious instruction should form in it a very prominent place. But although whatever is essential to the real welfare of the boys should invariably be attended to, the Institution should be decidedly of a penal character, and in every sense of the word, a prison. The criminal boy is, doubtless, an object of great commiseration, but he must not be placed in a position superior to that of the honest and industrious classes of the rising generation. In the discipline, therefore, of the Reformatory, he must be made to feel the penalties which attach to guilt, and the consequences which attend the violation of the laws. This consideration is of the more importance if we regard the injurious effect which the Institution would be calculated to produce upon the minds of many parents, if conducted upon milder principles. There are in this metropolis alone hundreds among the indigent classes who are ever seeking for means by which they can throw off from themselves the burthen of supporting their children. In the constitution, therefore, of the boys' prison, abuses arising from this propensity must be carefully guarded against: otherwise, parents will be encouraged to relax in the most sacred of all obligations, and a premium will be afforded to idleness and crime. It is, therefore, necessary not only that the Reformatory should be corrective, but that its general aspect should be of a severe and an uninviting character.

With a view of avoiding any abuse which would be likely to arise from this source, and also of securing in every other respect the success of the Institution, we deem it of great importance that, during the detention of a boy, he should not be permitted to hold any intercourse, except under very special circumstances, with his friends. We have already expressed our opinion that the imprisonment should be followed by banishment to a non-penal colony; and further reflection convinces us that this is the most advantageous mode of disposing of the offender. Those only who have been thus engaged can be aware of the extreme difficulty which exists in procuring suitable employment for boys discharged destitute from prison. The loss of character, and the fact of having been the inmate of a London gaol, are almost insurmountable barriers to any favourable settlement in this country; and, even when employment can be obtained, the boy is constantly exposed to the seductions of former associates. The Committee of the "Refuge for the Destitute," have had much experience on this subject, and the difficulties with which they have had to contend, in this respect, have compelled them to have recourse to emigration as the channel by which they can best dispose of the objects of their care. New scenes of life are thus open to a boy in a country in which there exist but few inducements to do wrong, and many strong motives to do right. What the Committee of the "Refuge" have effected on a small scale, and under many disadvantages, may, we are persuaded, be carried into effect by His Majesty's Government upon an extended plan, and with the most beneficial results. Care will, doubtless, be taken in the Reformatory to give to the education of the boys such a direction as shall qualify them to be useful apprentices in the colony to which they may be sent. Nor will the banishment of the boy be without its salutary effect on the mind of his parent, with whom the fear of parting from him for ever will not fail to operate in preventing imposition, and obviating abuses to which institutions of this nature, not guarded by adequate checks, would inevitably lead.

METROPOLITAN PRISONS.

Metropolitan Prisons.

THE SECOND PART of our Report contains an account of the present condition of the Metropolitan Prisons. We have deemed it advisable to consider these gaols apart from the other prisons of our district, as they exhibit many important features to which we feel it our duty to invite your Lordship's attention. The Coldbath-fields House of Correction, and the Bridewell department of the Westminster prison, exemplify the operation and results of the Silent System, and are for that reason fully described. We cannot refrain from especially referring to the treatment of untried prisoners in the gaols of the county of Middlesex, where the association of prisoners prevails in its worst forms—where the criminal cannot fail to become yet further debased—and where the innocent and less guilty are constantly exposed to the contamination of the hardened and depraved. We have also detailed the alterations which have been made in the state of Newgate since the presentation of our last Report. We are glad to find that the full and faithful exposure which we therein felt it our duty to make of that prison has been productive of at least some advantage, inasmuch as it has aroused the attention of those upon whom Parliamentary Reports and Grand Jury Presentments had hitherto failed to make the slightest impression.

The alterations which we have described to be now carrying on in Newgate are those only which the City Authorities have deemed it advisable to make in that gaol, and constitute the extent of the measures beyond which they consider that they are not called upon to advance, either by the necessity of the case, or by your Lordship's recommendations. Your Lordship will perceive that while the evils of this gaol are but very slightly, or rather but apparently mitigated, the principle from which they inevitably flow is still left untouched. The mischief of gaol association, which has been demonstrably proved to be the fruitful source of all the abuses and irregularities which have so long disgraced Newgate, is not only permitted still to exist in this prison, but is rendered more powerful than before, by the very circumstances which are supposed to weaken its influence. It will be seen that, to arrest the evil of contamination, the prisoners are more strictly confined together than under the former regulations. It is true that they are associated in smaller numbers, but they are thrown into closer contact, and companionship is more directly facilitated; their mutual acquaintance is more perfect; their knowledge of each others' habits, tempers, and capacities is more readily acquired, more firmly established, and more mischievously brought to bear against the interests of society, and their own well-being and reformation. What, my Lord, but mischief, inevitable and manifold, can be expected from locking up from morning to night, without intermission and change, in utter idleness (in numbers varying from three to fifteen, or even more), the most abandoned characters, adepts in crime, compelled associates with the uninitiated or trivial offender? We feel bound to declare our conviction that no real and permanent benefit can arise from alterations so partial and limited, and we deem it our duty distinctly to protest against such measures being regarded either as efficient or final.

We beg most earnestly to call your Lordship's attention to our Reports of the condition of the Giltspur-street and Borough Compters,—both under the same jurisdiction with that of Newgate, and both exhibiting, even in a still greater degree, the lamentable evils of gaol association and consequent contamination, which have so long marked and disgraced the chief prison in the City of London.

In the description of these prisons, which it has been our painful duty to lay before your Lordship, we have been consoled by the reflection that the very enormity of the evils which we have exposed releases us from the necessity of expatiating upon them. The bare recital of such abuses as these will assuredly arrest that attention which we should otherwise feel utterly unable to awaken in an adequate degree. Nevertheless, we cannot dismiss the subject without making a few observations upon the deep responsibility which attaches to those upon whom the management and control of the Metropolitan prisons devolve. When we reflect upon the incredible number of persons in this great City whose character and circumstances expose them to almost inevitable temptation to crime; when we consider how deeply the interests and well-being of society at large are involved in the efficacy of those measures by which so vast a mass of human depravity may best be kept in check, we confess that we have turned with no ordinary feelings of anxiety to the prisons of the Metropolis. It is idle to expect that such discipline as is adopted in them can have any efficacy as a punishment: it is worse than idle to look for the reformation of the offender. The prison authorities, indeed, appoint the use of the offices of religion, but they permit the prisoners to be encompassed with every thing that can have a tendency to exclude or frustrate her influence. What dread can that place of confinement excite in those whose whole term of imprisonment is one perpetual round of idleness, vicious companionship, and depraved conversation? Or is that System calculated to lead an offender to abandon a life of immorality, fraud, or violence, which consigns him to such pursuits and associates as must inevitably render him more dexterous in fraud, and plunge him deeper in crime?

Your Lordship has been pleased, in compliance with our suggestion, to direct a circular to be addressed to the Visiting Justices of Prisons throughout England, requiring information on the principal points connected with the condition and discipline of the several gaols. From the returns which have been made in conformity with your Lordship's directions, we have compiled the Tables which form the Fourth Part of our Report. Owing to the defective manner in which the Books and Accounts are kept at several of the prisons, the columns have not, in every case, been filled up with that accuracy which we could have desired. Nevertheless, the Tables now presented to your Lordship are extremely valuable, inasmuch as they contain a much larger body of statistical facts relating to the prisons in England than has ever yet been collected.

We have the honour to be,
My Lord,
Your Lordship's most obedient humble servants,
WM. CRAWFORD,
WHITWORTH RUSSELL,
Inspectors of Prisons for the Home District.

Postscript.

While the preceding sheets were in the press, we have had an opportunity of acquiring very recent intelligence respecting the progress of the Separate and Silent Systems of prison discipline in the United States. Impressed with a sense of the national benefit to be derived from the adoption of an improved plan of prison construction, the French Government, some months since, commissioned M. Blouet, the architect to the government, to proceed to America, for the purpose of examining the principal Penitentiaries in that country. On his arrival, M. Blouet was naturally induced to extend his inquiries, with a view of forming a judgment of the comparative efficacy and advantages of the Separate and Silent Systems. In this investigation he was so fortunate as to be benefited by the assistance of three gentlemen by whom he was accompanied, viz., M. De Metz, Conseiller à la Cour Royale, M. Gustave Davaux, and M. Jean Verel. Following in the footsteps of their eminent countrymen,—M. De Tocqueville and M. De Beaumont,—M. Blouet and his friends narrowly inspected every department of the American Penitentiaries; and, having completed their inquiries, they have within a few days returned to France viâ England.

We have had the pleasure of conferring very fully with these gentlemen, and it affords us satisfaction to be enabled to inform your Lordship that the facts which they have collected, and the convictions which have been impressed upon their minds by their researches, are, in the highest degree, confirmatory of the views of prison discipline which we have advocated in our Report.

The official Report of these gentlemen will, doubtless, soon be presented; but, in the mean time, we cannot refrain from making known a few facts which they have been so obliging as to communicate to us.—

It is well known that the Penitentiaries of Auburn and Sing-Sing, in the State of New York, have hitherto been conducted on the Silent System, on principles of extreme severity. It appears, however, that of late this severity has been considerably relaxed. This circumstance is, in a great degree, to be ascribed to the impracticability of continuing to carry on the system by the punishments (severe as they were) by

I.
HOME DISTRICT.

Imprisonment of Military Offenders.

which it has been hitherto enforced. It has been found that the superintendents can no longer persevere in a system of prison government which is continually requiring greater severity and frequency of punishment.

It also appears that, at Wethersfield, where the Silent System was formerly conducted with comparative mildness, it has been necessary to resort to extreme severity; such a measure being found indispensable, in order to render the discipline in any degree effective. We particularly beg your Lordship's attention to these facts, which appear to us to prove two points of great importance in illustration of the character of the Silent System. The case of Wethersfield shows that, when not enforced by extreme punishments, the system becomes inefficient; while, from the examples of Auburn and Sing-Sing, we learn that even when the System is wrought up to the highest degree of discipline, yet it cannot be maintained, from the necessity of having recourse to still greater severity, and to punishments improper in themselves, and which public opinion would not justify.

We learn, on the other hand, that the Separate System continues to be enforced at the Philadelphia Penitentiary with improving discipline, and marked and undeviating success. Every year's experience at this establishment tends to prove the facility with which its arrangements may be simplified, and to inspire confidence in its high character, and satisfactory results. Of the Separate System as enforced in this Penitentiary these gentlemen speak in terms of unqualified approbation. They are convinced that it produces no prejudicial effect upon the mind or health. They have conversed with prisoners who have been confined alone in their respective cells for a period of four years, without leaving them on any occasion; and they are satisfied that the health of such prisoners has not suffered from the seclusion.

These gentlemen return to France with a deep conviction that the Silent System is objectionable and inefficient; and that the means by which alone it can be enforced, are unjustifiably severe. Their impressions are equally strong in favour of the Separate System, which they are satisfied is perfectly safe, and the most rational and efficacious mode which has yet been adopted for the government of prisons.

NOTE.—The remarks contained in page 19 of the preceding Report, relative to the mingling of the sexes in the prison vans, do not apply to the van which conveys prisoners from Union Hall to the Surrey prisons; and in which, we understand, the sexes are kept separate.

PART II.

METROPOLITAN GAOLS.

COLDBATH-FIELDS HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

I.
HOME DISTRICT.

Metropolitan Gaols.

Coldbath-fields House of Correction.

It may be expedient to describe somewhat minutely the construction of this prison—the largest and most important in the kingdom for criminal prisoners. Those who have not seen it will have difficulty in conceiving how vast is the machinery employed, how arduous the duties of the officers, and how complicated the details and routine of its discipline; circumstances which are dependent, in the present case, as indeed they are in all cases, upon the construction of the prison, and the system selected and adopted for the control and government of the prisoners. All the old gaols have their defects of construction, and this among the rest. And although, considering the magnitude of this prison, those defects are comparatively few, yet are they sufficient to render the classification required by the Gaol Act, in a great degree, abortive and nugatory. The intercourse between the various classes which that Act was intended to preclude, cannot be effectually prevented. Everything which good discipline can accomplish has been done; but the best discipline cannot cure defects of construction or of system; and if the prison were under the control of a less able, vigilant, and zealous officer than Mr. Chesterton, a channel would be opened for communication and contamination to a very great extent. Whenever, therefore, we speak of defects in the construction or system as affording such opportunities, it will be understood that we speak of them abstractedly, and without impugning the discipline, which is, we think, extremely good.

The most important portions of this Report, in relation to the silent system, will be found under the following heads: "Offences in Prison and their Punishments," "Officers," and "Mr. Chesterton's Examination."

Site, Construction, Classification.

The prison is situate in the parish of St. James, Clerkenwell, and is under the jurisdiction of fourteen Visiting Magistrates, appointed at each Quarter-Sessions, of whom four go out quarterly by rotation. It consists of three distinct divisions, viz., the principal or old building, erected in 1794; the new vagrants' ward, completed in 1830; and the female prison or wards, completed in 1832.

The Old Prison.

The old prison is in the form of a square, and has two wings, one on its north-east, the other on its south-west side. There is a passage communicating from wing to wing, and dividing the interior into two equal sections. In the middle of each section are two rows of buildings extending from wing to wing, through each of which there is another passage. These great divisions of the interior are again intersected at right angles by another chain of buildings, which runs down the centre of the pile, and thus divides the whole of the interior into eight equal parts, which are called the eight inner yards. The wings are also divided into eight parts, which are called the eight outer yards.

Inner Yards.—The great mass of male delinquents are placed in the inner yards; Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of which are assigned to felons; Nos. 4 and 6 to misdemeanants; No. 5 to misdemeanants and soldiers; Nos. 7 and 8 to rogues and vagabonds. All of these are sentenced to hard labour. Each inner yard consists of a large court, in which is erected a stage with three tread-wheels for the employment of the prisoners. Underneath these stages are the dining-rooms, where they take their meals. In the courts of the respective yards are also several sleeping-cells; and in some of them large rooms, where several prisoners sleep together; but the greater number of cells and sleeping-rooms, appropriated to the respective inner yards, are in the galleries on the first floor, accessible by separate staircases. In each of these galleries is a double row of cells, divided by a passage: each cell has a ventilator, or open grating window, two feet six by two feet, over the door, and opening upon the passage. The doors and ventilators of the cells on the one side are immediately opposite to the doors and ventilators, respectively, of the cells on the other side of the passage. By means of these ventilators conversation may be carried on in a low tone of voice, certainly between the opposite cells, and probably from cell to cell on the same side; and prisoners folding up their bedding might stand on it, so as to see and be seen by the other prisoners across the passage from the opposite ventilators. Whenever either the class of felons or that of misdemeanants is so numerous that there are not sufficient cells or rooms for that particular class in its own yard, and any of the sleeping cells or rooms of the other class are not full, then a part of the over-crowded class is brought into the galleries of the other, and both classes are mixed in one gallery. This mixing of classes, however, takes place only in the galleries of yards 1 and 2. The precaution is used of locking up one class first, and they are never mingled in one sleeping-room. In the galleries of the first floor are also sleeping-rooms, of various dimensions, where bodies of prisoners of the inner yards sleep together, though in separate berths or beds. Such are the portions or divisions of the prison allotted to the classes confined in the eight inner yards; and there is nearly a uniformity of construction throughout the whole, or the variations are so trifling as not to require particular notice.

Outer Yards.—The outer yards are situated in the two wings or extremities of the building, and each has its airing-court, day-room, and sleeping-rooms, in the latter of which bodies of prisoners sleep. Some of these yards, viz., Nos. 3 and 4, and Nos. 5 and 6, are now united, and, instead of four, constitute only two yards; but they are still distinguished by their original numbers. These outer yards are assigned to the following classes of prisoners:—The first outer yard to convalescent prisoners, where all classes mix in a large room by day, and in which they sleep at night. The second to old infirm men of all classes; these dine together with the convalescent prisoners in the first outer yard, and at night sleep in one large room in their own yard. To this sleeping-room of the infirm old men, when not fully occupied, prisoners of all classes, when they cannot be accommodated in their own yards, are also occasionally brought to sleep. The 3rd and 4th outer yards (now one) are assigned to misdemeanants sentenced to labour not severe; these sleep, some in separate cells, and others together in rooms. Of the 5th and 6th outer yards, the buildings are not occupied by any class of prisoners; but the airing-yards are used for exercising the refractory; namely, prisoners under punishment for offences committed in the prison, and who are kept in separate cells during the term of punishment, except when they take their airing. In these yards refractory prisoners of all classes mix. The seventh outer yard, or part of it, is assigned to prisoners being artisans and labourers, employed about the work of the prison, and who dine here together in one room, and sleep at night in two rooms. These artisans and labourers are selected from all classes. The eighth outer yard, or part of it, is used as a dining-room and sleeping-rooms for the oakum-pickers, being misdemeanants, who have been sentenced to labour not severe. Belonging to the outer yards there are also seven refractory cells for all classes, wherein conversation can take place from cell to cell, and with not much chance of detection.

On the first floor of the inner or central building, the greater part of which is allotted to the inner yards, there is also a gallery, called the lower gallery, containing a double row of separate sleeping-cells, and appropriated to the use of disorderly apprentices, where they work by day, and sleep at night; and on the second floor there is another gallery, called the upper gallery, containing a double row of cells, and appropriated to prisoners convicted of unnatural offences; where they work by day and sleep at night. When the prison is full, and the disorderly apprentices, or prisoners convicted of unnatural offences, are not sufficiently numerous to occupy all the cells in their respective galleries, the vacant cells are appropriated as sleeping cells to prisoners belonging to other classes, whether felons or misdemeanants, according to the class which is most full.

On the first floor there are also two large oakum-rooms for the employment of the oakum-pickers, one for felons and vagrants, and the other for misdemeanants, each capable of containing about sixty prisoners; and here all classes assemble, and sit close together, for the purpose of picking oakum.

There are also four infirmaries, in each of which, when occupied, all classes are mixed; the general store-room; the chapel (for male prisoners only, the female prisoners having a separate chapel in their own prison), which is divided into eight compartments for different classes, besides separate boxes for prisoners convicted of unnatural offences; four state rooms; two of which are used as a sleeping-room and day-room for persons committed for re-examination, one as a school-room for the apprentices, &c., and the fourth as a tinman's shop; twelve refractory cells; the bath-room, in which two prisoners or more are frequently bathed at the same time—(we ourselves, on one occasion, saw as many as four); two fumigating ovens; and a tailor's and shoemaker's shop; all which are used for the prisoners both of the old building and new vagrants' ward. The refractory cells are appropriated to all classes; and prisoners can converse from cell to cell, although not without risk of detection.

The kitchen for the three prisons, and the carpenters', painters', and millwrights' shops adjoin the old building, and are accessible only by the prisoners who work therein, through the garden.

New Vagrants' Ward.

This building, originally intended for vagrants only, is now used also for boys who are reputed thieves. It consists of five radiating wings, issuing from a semicircular building; and these five wings, with the four intermediate airing-courts, constitute four yards. Three of these wings are double, and three stories high; each being divided in the centre from end to end, both above and below, by a double row of passages; so that to each yard is attached one half of each wing. At the extremities of these passages, of which there are six in each double wing, is an iron grating, open to the garden from top to bottom, with wooden shutters inside, which are only occasionally put up. The cleaners, who are prisoners, are locked into these passages almost daily, and can then communicate with persons in the garden, through the iron railing. The first yard of this building is used as the general reception ward for the males of the whole prison: it consists of two day-rooms, twenty-four cells, and three sleeping-rooms. The prisoners brought and placed in this reception-ward greatly vary in point of numbers, being sometimes 40, sometimes as many even as 80. The separate cells are always first used; but, when insufficient, then the prisoners of all classes, exceeding the number of cells, are taken to the two sleeping-rooms, and there mixed together under the care of one monitor in each room. Conversation can easily be carried on from cell to cell, although not without risk of detection by the turnkey or watchman. The second and third yards are constructed alike; each consisting of two small day-rooms, four sleeping-rooms, thirty-five separate cells, and one large airing-court, in which are three tread-wheels. The second yard is appropriated to boys who are reputed thieves, and who work on the wheels, except between the hours of three and five, when they assemble in their school-rooms (being their day-rooms) for instruction. As many as can be accommodated occupy the separate sleeping-cells. The average daily number, however, in this yard being about fifty, those who cannot be so accommodated are taken to the separate cells in the receiving-ward, if there is room; if not, then to separate sleeping-cells elsewhere. All boys (except reputed thieves) are assigned to the different classes of men; there being no distinct yard for them. The third yard is appropriated to vagrants, some of whom work at the tread-wheels; and others, who are excused from tread-wheel labour by order of the surgeon, work in the oakum-rooms in the old building, and sleep at night in separate cells, or together in rooms, in this yard. The fourth yard resembles the first in its construction, but is used only for sleeping-rooms for vagrants; except that one room is used as an itch-ward.

In the garden, and adjoining the vagrants' ward, is the smith's shop; the approach to which leads close by the open iron gratings at the extremities of the different wings. In each passage (of which altogether there are 18) in these wings, one prisoner at a time takes exercise, being locked in alone during a portion of each day; so that, occasionally, several prisoners at exercise are in the passages at one time; and these, as well as the cleaners, may, through the open gratings, communicate with other prisoners in the garden; and may, indeed, have frequent opportunities of doing so with the prisoners working in the smith's shop, who must frequently pass close to the gratings in their way to and fro.

Female Wards.

This is a distinct building, but in its construction greatly resembling the new vagrants' ward. It consists of three double and two single radiating wings. The three double wings are appropriated to six different courts or yards, viz., one-half of each wing to every yard, and the two single wings to two other yards; so that there are altogether eight yards. In each of the yards Nos. 5, 6, and 7 there are two tread-wheels, each capable of containing about 11 prisoners; only 66 prisoners can therefore be at one time employed. The greater number of each class assemble together—in winter in their day-rooms, where they pick oakum or are engaged at needle-work—in summer they work in their separate cells. Yards Nos. 1 and 2 are appropriated to felons; No. 3 to women having children; No. 4 to misdemeanants sentenced to labour not severe; Nos. 5 and 6 to disorderly prostitutes; No. 7 to misdemeanants sentenced to hard labour; No. 8 is used as a reception-ward. The entire building contains about 141 separate cells; 13 sleeping-rooms, each sufficiently large to contain about nine beds; and a day-room to each yard.

The matron resides in a house in the centre, from which the wings radiate, but detached and separated from those wings by an area, or open space, of considerable width.

There is no night supervision whatever in any part of the prison, except that of the monitors, who sleep in the rooms; there is probably, therefore, very little restraint upon conversation. The cells are so constructed that conversation can, and, as the matron admits, does, take place from cell to cell.

In yard No. 3 women of all classes, with their children, are mixed together. The general washhouse for the whole prison is also in the same yard, and the number of prisoners employed there in washing daily is about 15, besides the two monitors and two cleaners. These washerwomen are taken indiscriminately from both felons and misdemeanants, with reference to their capability only. There is a drying-yard attached to the washhouse, which is separated by a wooden fence (measuring, from within the yard, seven feet in height) from the garden of the prison; in which garden about 20 prisoners, of all classes, work daily. The washerwomen go continually into this yard; the only restriction being that, if two or more go together, a monitor must accompany them. In the day-room of the fourth yard, all classes, for whom there is not sufficient room on the wheels, mix together at their work,—felons, misdemeanants, and prisoners summarily convicted. In one of the day-rooms of each of the yards five or six prisoners, for whom there is not room on the wheels, are employed in picking oakum; and there was one amongst them, on one of the days when we inspected the female wards, who had been before committed to this prison about 120 times. In yard No. 8, which is the reception-ward, there are 10 separate cells and one large sleeping-room. The cells are always preferred; but, if they are found to be too few for the numbers received, then the rooms are used; and the matron says that there are always some prisoners in the latter, and she has had as many as 12, and sometimes 20, there at a time, of all classes,—felons, misdemeanants, vagrants, prostitutes, &c.

There are two Infirmaries, in each of which prisoners of all classes are indiscriminately mixed.

There is also a Chapel, divided into seven compartments for distinct classes; but the prisoners in the front rows of some of them can see prisoners in other compartments.

Under the Infirmary there are several refractory cells for females, the only approach to which is through the garden, where about 20 labourers (prisoners) work daily. Conversation can be distinctly carried on from cell to cell; and, on one of the days on which we inspected the female wards, there were two women in separate cells, the furthest apart, singing some song in concert.

In the wings of this prison there are also passages, at the extremities of which are open gratings from top to bottom, on both floors, with wooden movable shutters on the inside. These open gratings look into the garden, and afford means of communication with it.

Garden, Shops, &c.

In the garden and shops, which communicate with each other, there are generally between 30 and 40 artisans and labourers, being prisoners, employed. The gardeners especially are necessarily distributed over various parts of the grounds. The rule is, that the artisans are not to quit their respective shops, unless the nature of their employment renders it absolutely necessary; and then, if more than one at a time, they are said to be accompanied by a turnkey. We have no doubt that every possible precaution is taken to prevent conversation and communication between prisoners in the grounds and prisoners in the vagrants' and females' prisons, nor do we indeed believe that it does take place in any great degree; but, considering the extent of the grounds (about nine acres), the number of prisoners requiring to be watched, and the many circumstances which must continually occur to require them to go from place to place, there must inevitably be numerous opportunities for eluding the vigilance of the officers. We observed a small shed built against the infirmary, to which a male prisoner, working in the grounds, occasionally went alone for mortar which had been mixed there; the female refractory cells are under the infirmary, and two female refractory prisoners were then confined in them: the male prisoner might unquestionably have conversed with, and most distinctly have heard, and been heard by, these refractory females.

The whole prison, in its three several buildings, will contain altogether, without being crowded, about 900 prisoners. There has frequently been a much greater number, and in 1831 there were 1,325, besides children, confined in them at one time. It is, therefore, said not to be sufficiently capacious. The old building will not contain, in its cells and sleeping-rooms together, without being crowded, more than 500 prisoners; but there have been 800 in it at one time. The new vagrants' ward was built for the reception of 150 prisoners, and sometimes there have been 200 placed in it. The female wards were erected for 250 prisoners, whereas 400 and upwards have been confined in them at one time. On the male side some of the sleeping-rooms are 37 feet in length by 7 feet 9 inches in width, and 11 feet 9 inches in height; others are smaller. In some of these, berths are constructed in three tiers, with means of ascent to each. No one room contains more than 15 berths; but iron bedsteads are often placed in the remaining space; and sometimes, when the prison is very full, as many as six or eight, when they are necessarily very close together. On the female side the sleeping-rooms are 27 feet 7 inches in length, 10 feet in breadth, and 9 feet 2 inches in height, and from 8 to 11 prisoners sleep in separate beds in one room. The dining-rooms on the male side, with some slight variations, are in length 65 feet, in breadth 13 feet, in height 7 feet 9 inches. In each of these from 50 to 120 prisoners, and occasionally more, (when some of the classes are very numerous,) assemble at their meals. Forty can sit in one row, and, consequently, 120 will occupy three rows; and, when there are more than 120, another row is required. On the female side the day-rooms are of the same dimensions as the sleeping-rooms, and in each of which 30, 40, and occasionally as many as 50 prisoners take their meals in several rows. Of the two work-rooms on the male side (where the prisoners pick oakum) one is 29 feet 2 inches in length, 24 feet 8 inches in breadth, and 10 feet 7 inches in height; the other is a few inches smaller every way except in height. In the largest the number usually at work is from 40 to 70 prisoners, sometimes as many as 80. On the female side the prisoners who do not go on the wheels work in their day-rooms, which have been already described. On the male side 380 prisoners can be accommodated with separate sleeping-cells; in the female prison 141 prisoners can be so provided for. These cells (some of which are used for sleeping only, and others for sleeping and working) vary in dimensions from 7 feet 4½ inches in length, 5 feet in breadth, and 8 feet 10½ inches in height, to 8 feet 6 inches in length, 6 feet 4½ inches in breadth, and 10 feet 4½ inches in height. Some of the refractory cells are 7 feet 6½ inches in length, by 5 feet in breadth, and 10 feet in height; and others 6 feet 10 inches in length, 4 feet in breadth, and 8 feet in height. The latter, of course, are not used for, or included in the number of, sleeping cells.

In 1831 there were confined in this prison, at one time, 1,325 prisoners, besides children. The commitments for each year between 1823 and 1836 have fluctuated as follows:—

The prison is in substantial repair. It is tolerably secure against escapes. There is a coping-stone, however, projecting over the boundary-wall, calculated to facilitate escapes. The height of the boundary-wall in some parts is 23 feet, in others only 18 feet. Some few escapes have been effected, and others unsuccessfully attempted.

There is a fire-engine on the establishment, and the greater part of the buildings are fire-proof.

The means of inspection are not particularly good, there being no part whence either of the buildings can be wholly overlooked. There are inspecting-holes into all the rooms and cells; but these should be covered with gauze or wire. At present the prisoners within may see the inspecting officers looking through. In the female wards, owing to the construction, there is no supervision of the sleeping-rooms after the hour of 10 o'clock.

With regard to employment, the tread-wheels are well adapted to the uses to which they are applied; of these, in the three prisons, there are altogether 36, each capable of holding 11 prisoners. In the female wards there are not a sufficient number of tread-wheels. Prisoners, in bodies, might work in their several dining-rooms and day-rooms, as the female prisoners do in their day-rooms. With regard to the separate cells, they are well adapted for any employment not requiring machinery.

The separate cells, to prevent communication, (which now is practicable,) would require material alterations.

The prison is clean, dry, well ventilated, and well drained. There is no proper mode, however, of heating it; but fires are used in the work-rooms of the female wards, and also in the infirmaries, both on the male and female sides, during the winter months. The prisoners in solitary cells must often suffer severely from the cold. In the passages the draughts are very great, and must be injurious to health.

System—Discipline.

Silent System.

The system of discipline enforced is that which is denominated the Silent System; that is to say, the prisoners work in bodies, silence being preserved by strict surveillance. At night, 520 sleep in separate cells; the remainder in berths or separate beds, in large sleeping-rooms, under the rule of silence, maintained by frequent inspection at uncertain periods.

Labour.

The hard labour performed here is that of the tread-wheel, picking oakum or coir, painting or whitewashing the prison, menial offices, labour in the grounds, such handicrafts as are necessary for the service of the place, and scouring and washing. The employment, or labour not severe, consists of picking oakum or coir in reduced quantities, handicrafts, &c., by free consent; and in the female prison of needlework and knitting. The labour of the tread-wheels is not applied to a profitable use; the profits of other employments are paid to the county fund. Prisoners under sentence of transportation (when any such are in custody) are placed at hard labour, as a mode of undergoing a part of their commuted punishment. The Untried are occasionally employed, by their own consent, to pick small quantities of coir, or, in some few instances, to work in the garden. The hours of labour are from six and a half to nine hours, varying with the length of the days. The numbers at work on each wheel vary from 6 to 10. The height of each step is eight inches; the ordinary velocity per minute 48 steps; the ordinary proportion of prisoners on relief to the total number employed one-half for each wheel; the number of feet in ascent per day, as per hours of employment, is from 12,000 to 16,800, varying with the length of the days; the daily revolutions are from 750 to 1,050, varying with the hours of employment; the amount of labour performed by every prisoner varies between 12,000 and 16,800 steps; and the mode of recording that labour is, by reducing the time of actual work into minutes, and multiplying those by 48 (the number of steps revolving in one minute), and the product gives the number of steps of ascent per day. The labour performed by the women is less severe, the numbers off the wheel being equal to the numbers employed. The tread-wheels in the female prison are not sufficient for the ordinary number of prisoners; and the consequence is, that some of the classes assemble at work in their day-rooms and go on the wheels on alternate days, an arrangement which occasions a great mixing of the classes, and more frequent opportunities for conversation. The number of tread-wheels, too, for the men, are said not to be sufficient to keep the classes distinct in each yard, where sometimes, therefore, they are mixed, although never on the same wheel. On one of the wheels in the male prison there are separate divisions. Captain Acklam's crank machine, as a substitute for the more expensive fly-wheel machinery, has been used for 12 months in one of the yards, and been found to answer well. It appeared to us, however, to be calculated to enable the men, if so disposed, to relieve themselves from their fair proportion of work, by imposing it on their companions. But this objection seems to apply equally to all crank machines. The amount of labour required from prisoners, otherwise employed than on the wheels, is, by males, the picking from 2½ to 6 pounds of oakum, and by females from 1½ to 3½ pounds, the quantity being regulated according to the sentence, &c., and the length of days, and ascertained with precision by weighing. The artificers, labourers on the grounds, washerwomen, knitters, &c., &c., are required diligently to work during the ordinary hours of labour; but there is no mode of recording the amount of their performance. The labour exacted, both on the wheels and in picking oakum, is generally regarded as a punishment; but more easy work as an alleviation of the imprisonment.

Visitors.

Visitors are admitted on any days, except Sundays, between 11 and 1, by orders from magistrates; but such orders have been required by the court of quarter-sessions to be given only under pressing circumstances. They are permitted to remain only one quarter of an hour, and are received at a double iron grating (the visitor on one side, the prisoner on the other) in the presence of a turnkey, who stands between the two gratings. Visitors are not searched; but it appears almost impossible, from the vigilance used, that they can pass forbidden articles to the prisoners; and they are not admitted, even with an order, if they have themselves been prisoners here, or are known to be improper characters, coming under pretence of relationship. In cases of sickness, prisoners are permitted to see their relations in the infirmaries, in the presence of an officer. The frequent visits of friends, before the adoption of the Secretary of State's recommendation, is said to have produced very injurious effects on the minds of the prisoners and on the discipline of the prison. The restrictions which have been since imposed are severely felt as a punishment.

Money.

The prisoners are not allowed the possession of money. If they bring it, it is taken from them and accounted for on their discharge. It is not, however, received on their account from their friends during imprisonment, unless in some very pressing cases; as where, on being discharged, they would have to travel a long distance to their homes.

Letters.

Letters, subject to the governor's inspection, may be received generally; but, unless imprisoned in default of the payment of fines or for want of bail, the prisoners are rarely allowed to write letters, until after the expiration of six months' imprisonment, and then only once a-month. This restriction is also severely felt as a punishment.

Newspapers, Beer, Meat, Tobacco.

Newspapers, beer, meat, and tobacco are inadmissible; and it is sufficient generally to observe that, from the excellent discipline maintained, it must be extremely difficult to introduce them clandestinely. Independently of the fact that visitors are now very few and closely watched, a turnkey and watchman, as soon as the prisoners are unlocked, and before they go into their yards, go round and search the prison and grounds, and repeat that duty in the evening. Bread and meat have sometimes (but rarely, however) been found in the garden. Spirituous liquors, beer, and meat, in cases of sickness, &c., are allowed under an order of the surgeon; which order he always writes in a separate book, kept expressly for the purpose.

Gaming.

Gaming in this prison, where the discipline is so strictly maintained, is quite out of the question.

Before attempting to present a view of the system in operation, by describing the routine of a day, it may be expedient to explain somewhat of the machinery by which that system is worked.

Arrangements for working the System.

To each yard or class of prisoners there are appointed two or more monitors, a yardsman, and a turnkey. The monitors and yardsmen are selected, for their good conduct, from the prisoners. The duty of the former is to maintain silence and good order; and of the latter (who are of a higher grade) to attend to numerous matters connected with the yards, and to control or overlook the monitors in the absence of the turnkey. The turnkey, of course, is the superior officer in each yard.

If the monitors observe in the conduct of the prisoners anything contrary to the strict rules of the prison, they are required merely to touch them, as an intimation that they are noticed; they are forbidden to speak either to the prisoners or to each other, except in the presence of the turnkeys, and then only to such an extent as the indispensable explanation of their duties may require.

The prisoners never move but in regular order. They go to and from work, chapel, meals, or exercise, in single files, and are forbidden to look around to the right or left, but each must look towards the back of the person who precedes him; and the same rule holds when at work, except in the case of carpenters, bricklayers, plumbers, &c., when it must obviously be dispensed with. When falling in (sometimes to the number of 100 in one yard) they do so in parallel lines of single files, each line being as far distant as possible from the other, to prevent conversation; and when required to move in a body these lines file off to the right and left, and break in regular order from sections into an extended line. The prisoners of every yard are numbered, and are called by their numbers only, that they may be kept, as far as possible, ignorant of each others' names, residence, or occupations.

In the passages which communicate with the different yards there are a distinct set of turnkeys, called passage turnkeys, whose duty is to attend to prisoners received and discharged, and to overlook others in their passage from the yards to the work-rooms and back, to convey provisions, deliver letters and messages, open and shut gates and doors, and, in short, to superintend all matters which take place in the passages, as well as to render general assistance. And the chief turnkey overlooks and controls all the others. Two of these passage turnkeys occasionally, and a day watchman continually (the latter being armed), perambulate the grounds, to overlook the artificers and labourers there employed. There are four basket-men or tub-men (being prisoners) who carry the meals from the kitchen to the several yards.

At night the turnkeys retire from their duty, and the monitors and yardsmen sleep in the rooms with the prisoners, to see that order and silence are observed, but they are not required to remain awake for that purpose. Watchmen (called the inner watchmen) at least once in every hour, and at irregular periods, go through the building, their feet being muffled; look through the inspecting holes into the sleeping-rooms, which are lighted up with wax wicks, floating in oil, and note on their slates, and report in the morning, any breach of silence or order; and they are especially to observe the conduct of the monitors. As already observed, however, there are no means of inspecting the sleeping-rooms of the female prisoners, who, after the hour of ten, are under no supervision, except that of the monitors. Another watchman armed (termed the outer watchman) perambulates the grounds, and at the appointed hour in the morning fires a gun, as a signal for the prisoners to arise.

Routine of a Day.

A detailed account of the daily discipline of the inner yards will be sufficient to convey a tolerably correct idea of the routine pursued in every part of the prison, which, with a few variations, is the same throughout.

At the appointed period for rising, the signal gun is fired. The turnkeys unbolt the doors of the sleeping-rooms. The turnkeys, monitors, and yardsmen, then station themselves at proper intervals, to observe the prisoners as they proceed to their work. First, those who sleep in rooms form into single file, and in that order descend to the yards. It sometimes happens that there are several new prisoners who do not understand the discipline: these frequently occasion a confusion and thronging in the ranks, and then greater opportunities occur for exchanging words. The prisoners from the cells next follow in the like order. These processions occupy 15 minutes. As the prisoners successively arrive in the yards, they walk round in sections until counted; which is done, throughout the eight inner and eight outer yards, by the chief turnkey: this occupies 15 minutes more. The oakum pickers then wash, three at a time; in summer, in the open yards; in winter, in their dining-rooms; and, that office performed, are conducted (one class only at a time) by the monitors and passage turnkeys to their respective work-rooms. The cleaners, being summoned from the ranks, then wash, and are locked into the several places which are to be cleaned; and the remaining prisoners go on the wheels, five minutes more being consumed before they commence their work. And, as these successively come off the wheel on relief, they also wash. The turnkeys who have attended thus far to the duties of the day are then relieved by others, and go to their breakfasts; but, in cases of sickness or heavy duty at the sessions, or from other causes, there are sometimes not a sufficient number to admit of this relief; and then, during the intervals, some of the yards are frequently left in charge of the yardsmen and monitors (prisoners) alone. In the course of the last three months there have generally, without intermission, been one, two, or three (and at one time there were four) turnkeys absent from such causes, a circumstance which has led to considerable inconvenience. Not only have the duties of the other turnkeys, which at all times are most arduous, been greatly increased, but the opportunities for conversation amongst the prisoners, and for which they continually watch, have increased in the same proportion. On the return of the turnkeys from breakfast, and before the prisoners themselves have breakfasted, the turnkeys report for misconduct during the preceding day and night. The prisoners so reported (the females excepted) are then conducted before the governor, who examines into the grounds of complaint, and awards the punishments. The basket-men then bring the breakfasts to the gate of each yard. The messes are placed on the dining-tables, which have been first numbered with chalk by the yardsmen, so as to correspond with the numbers of the prisoners. The prisoners from the oakum-rooms are next conducted back to the yards by their monitors and a passage turnkey. Those on the wheels, as they are entitled to precedence for relief, successively descend in file to the stages, and thence to the yards, and, with the oakum men, form first into sections, next into an extended line, and then all proceed to the dining-rooms. This procession occupies at least five minutes. The tables are less than a foot wide, and sometimes there are three rows in one room. Grace is said, when the meal is eaten. The prisoners sit, side by side, with their faces towards the monitors, yardsmen, and turnkey, who are stationed, at equal distances, in front. Half an hour is allowed for breakfast. The prisoners then advance in file to the yards, and proceed to chapel; and before they are seated 15 minutes have elapsed. After chapel they return in the same manner to the yards, and form into sections: the oakum pickers are conducted to their rooms, and the other prisoners go on the wheels, 15 minutes having elapsed during these processions. At the hour of dinner the same process of marching, countermarching, forming into file and sections, is repeated, which occupies five minutes or more. One hour is allowed for that meal, and a certain portion of the prison regulations is read. The oakum men are taken into the yards by themselves during the last half of the hour for dinner, are marched round (the weather permitting) for exercise, and, before the prisoners for the wheels have proceeded to their work, are reconducted in the order before mentioned to their work-rooms. At the expiration of the hour the other prisoners proceed, in like order, to the wheels, and five minutes more have elapsed. At the hour of supper the oakum men quit their rooms; each man bringing his work, which is received and weighed by the oakum master; they then return as before to their yards, fall into file, walk round for exercise, and are then searched by the turnkeys, to ascertain if they have secreted any of the oakum. The bell rings as a signal for the men on the wheel to quit their work, which they do in the order before stated. All the prisoners form into sections, then into line, and march to the dining-rooms for supper. This procession occupies five minutes. Half an hour is allowed for supper. All then proceed in file to the yards, form into sections, are counted by the turnkeys, and wait in that order until the chief turnkey has gone through the several yards to see that the numbers are correct. The bell rings for locking: they are called, according to their numbers, to their cells or berths, marching in file; the passages and galleries being lighted up, and the turnkeys, monitors, and yardsmen distributed in the passages, to overlook them as they pass. The last procession, counting, &c., occupy 20 minutes; at least one hour and 45 minutes being thus consumed in marchings, countermarchings, forming into files, and sections. In the sleeping-rooms the monitors sleep on iron bedsteads, opposite the tiers of berths, for the better observation of the prisoners. Such is the general routine.

It may be proper to observe that, when the cleaners have performed their work, they join the other prisoners on the wheels.

Upper and Lower Galleries.—The prisoners convicted of unnatural offences, in their respective cells, in the upper gallery, and the disorderly apprentices, in their respective cells, in the lower gallery, pick oakum, under the supervision of two monitors and one turnkey, stationed in the gallery passages.

Outer Yards.—The convalescents of all classes in the first outer yard, and the infirm of all classes in the second outer yard, pick oakum, whilst assembled in their respective day-rooms, under the supervision of two monitors to each yard, and one turnkey to the two yards; being required to do no greater quantity than the surgeon, or governor, in his discretion, may assign to them. Misdemeanants sentenced to labour not severe, under the supervision of four monitors and two turnkeys, attend by day on the sick in the infirmaries, and at night sleep in the third and fourth outer yards. The fifth and sixth outer yards are used for exercise-yards for the refractory. The artisans and labourers, who perform the work of the establishment, are employed, by day, in their several shops, or in the grounds; but they take their meals together in one room, and sleep in two rooms of the seventh outer yard; and are under the observation of two monitors and one turnkey, who attend them to and from their various workshops, &c. Another class of misdemeanants, sentenced to labour not severe, assemble in their day-room in the eighth outer yard, and prepare junk for the oakum-rooms and coir, under the supervision of one turnkey and two monitors.

New Vagrants' Ward.—Female Wards.—The prisoners in the New Vagrants' Ward, and the women, go through the same routine, so far as circumstances will permit; but the mixing of the classes in the female wards constantly takes place. In these wards, consequently, there are much greater opportunities for conversation; and the discipline cannot be, and is not, so vigorously enforced. And, generally, all prisoners, whether employed in the outer yards, oakum-rooms, shops, grounds, store-house, or elsewhere (so far as circumstances will permit), are under the same common discipline, which is as uniform, and maintained with as much vigour, as is well practicable.

Religious and Moral Instruction.

Chaplain's Duties.

There are two chapels; one for the males, the other for the females. Every morning the chaplain performs one Service in each; when prayers, selected from the Liturgy, are read, and scriptural expositions given. He also preaches one sermon in each chapel on every Sunday. There are schools for male juvenile prisoners, who, as soon as they can read, have books delivered to them; and, when capable, are required to repeat once a-week, before the male congregation, the church catechism and collects. Upon these occasions, the chaplain explains the principles of the Christian religion. Independently of the public services, he visits the prisoners in their cells, rooms, and in solitary confinement; instructs in the schools; consoles and prays with the sick in the infirmaries; examines into the character, previous conduct, motives, and views of those who apply for recommendations to asylums, or for assistance and advice for the advancement of their interests in any other mode; remaining with each class or prisoner, as occasion may require, from five minutes to half an hour; and he engages much of his time beyond the walls of the prison, in endeavouring to reconcile prisoners to their friends. His duties daily within the prison, including Sundays, occupy between five and six hours; but they must be so multifarious and arduous, as to make it obviously impossible for him, however zealous he may be, to bestow on the individual necessities of the prisoners that attention which they require. He keeps a journal, but no character book. Prisoners of different religious persuasions may be visited by their clergymen, on application to him, and with his approbation.

The officers generally (except those on necessary duty), as well as the prisoners, are regular in their attendance at chapel. But the chaplain states that the governor does not attend on week-days, and attends only one of the services on Sundays; and that his very arduous duties make it impossible for him to do more.

As soon as the prisoners have entered the chapel, a turnkey visits all the yards, &c., to see that the cleaning is performed, and that no prisoners have absented themselves; and, after the service, presents to the governor a written list of those who have necessarily been absent from sickness, or any other cause. The prisons, on Sundays, are swept only, which is done before the chapel hours; on other days, it is done after the chapel hours. Punishment by stoppage of food, and, in some instances, by locking up, is inflicted upon prisoners for non-attendance (which is said never to have happened but in one instance), or for failing to perform the necessary cleaning. We observed that the prisoners, whilst in chapel, were remarkably orderly. When there, they are required to keep their hands down by their sides, to prevent them from making signals. There is no doubt, however, that they have occasional opportunities for passing words.

Books.

The chaplain distributes Bibles, books, and tracts of a moral and religious character; and none are admissible into the prison but such as have been first subjected to his inspection.

School.

There are six schools for boys, and a regular schoolmaster is employed. They are only taught to read, and are gradually advanced from the alphabet to the Testament and Bible. Those who are reputed thieves (being by far the most numerous class) are kept by themselves, in the vagrants' yard. All other boys are assigned to their respective classes with the men, and are attended every day (each class separately for about 40 or 45 minutes) in one of the state rooms in the old prison. The reputed thieves are relieved from the wheels successively, in bodies of about 20 at a time, and receive instruction in their day-rooms, in the vagrants' prison, for about the same period each day. All boys, except reputed thieves, are attended by the schoolmaster alone; but in the case of the reputed thieves he is assisted in teaching by a monitor, who is a prisoner; and he states that these monitors require to be closely watched; not being in general sufficiently strict with the boys, who seize every opportunity of talking together, notwithstanding they are always punished when detected. But he never leaves the monitor alone with them. Few of the boys can read on entering the prison. Those between the ages of 8 and 12 are said to possess by far the greatest aptitude for acquiring knowledge. Whether imprisoned for short or long terms they alike attend the school. The average number is about 120. There is no school for men or women. The following table will show the state of the school at the present time:—

Visitors affording Instruction.

Ladies, being members of the committee of the British Society for the Reformation of Female Prisoners, visit, instruct, distribute tracts and religious books amongst the female prisoners, and read and expound to them the Scriptures, about two or three times a-week.

Health.

Surgeon. Examining, cleansing, fumigating, &c.

There is one medical attendant attached to the establishment, who is also in private practice. The prisoners, on their admission, are placed in the reception-wards; whence, almost without exception, they are taken to the baths and thoroughly cleansed; two or more being placed in one bath at a time, which appears to be inconsistent with decency. For so large a prison there should be a greater number of baths. At present there is but one, we believe, for the male, and one for the female, prisoners. After being cleansed, their clothes are taken from them, fumigated in an oven with brimstone, and placed in a store-room until the period of their discharge. It is the practice (and it is one which appears much at variance with the excellent discipline of the prison) to allow prisoners, who wear belts or flannels, to retain them on their persons without being fumigated, and, indeed, without being washed immediately on their admission, if found, upon examination, to be free from animalculæ and tolerably clean. They may, however, be in a condition, without its being obvious either that they are so, or that they require to be washed, to communicate infection or breed vermin. Whenever they are washed the prisoner is provided with no change, and must therefore remain without this part of his dress. After being thus cleansed, the prisoners are examined by the surgeon and passed to their classes.

The surgeon, once every day, visits the sick in the infirmaries, and sees all prisoners who complain of illness; and he attends, besides, as often as his services are required. He orders remission from work, extra allowances, and medicines, to all who, in his judgment, require such relief; entering in a book, kept for the purpose, his orders for all extra allowance. He keeps a separate journal, which is regularly laid before the quarter-sessions, and signed by the chairman.

Infirmaries. Prevalent Diseases, &c.

In the infirmaries, nurses selected from the prisoners attend the patients under the surgeon's directions; and a turnkey superintends these infirmaries in the surgeon's absence, directs the mixture, and administers the medicine, &c., according to his instructions, and attends to all the wants of the sick. Conversation amongst the patients is strictly forbidden. The most prevalent diseases are scurvy, bowel-complaints, rheumatism, and venereal disease; the three first depending on the period of the year. The surgeon considers that the prevalence of scurvy is caused by the sameness of diet, which, therefore, he varies for the prisoners, from time to time, as necessity requires. It seems that the exposure of the prisoners, during severe weather, whilst going through the passages to and from their work and meals, whilst mustering in the open yards, and whilst off the wheels on relief, warm, often perspiring, sometimes exhausted, and then exposed to the cold by sitting, as they generally do, on the outer edge of the wheel-stages, must be extremely injurious to their health. The average number of days, during which each invalid remained on the sick-list during the last year, was 13¼, not including slight indispositions. The proportion of sick to the whole number of prisoners admitted was 1 to 12 and a fraction. The proportion of deaths was 23 to 617 infirmary cases, 7,931 being the total number of prisoners.

Daily Washing of Prisoners.

For the purpose of personal cleanliness, one ounce of soap per week is allowed to each prisoner; one towel per week to ten; and the use of two combs between six prisoners. The washing we have already described in the routine of a day. The prisoners appeared to be perfectly cleanly in their persons.

Cleansing the Prison.

The wards, cells, rooms, and passages are limewashed twice every year; and the day-rooms, work-rooms, passages, sleeping-rooms, and cells are washed with water, in summer daily, and in winter as often as the weather will permit (Sundays excepted). The prison is clean throughout.

Washing Linen, &c.

Accommodations are provided in the prison for washing the prisoners' linen, &c. There is a most commodious wash-house and laundry, and other conveniences, in the female wards; where 15 washerwomen (prisoners) are continually employed for that purpose. The blankets, bedding, &c., are washed by four male prisoners, called scourers.

Air and Exercise.

The prisoners who work on the tread-wheels have sufficient air and exercise whilst at labour. The oakum-pickers and prisoners in solitary confinement take exercise during one hour each day in the yards before and after meals.

The prisoners generally are at this time in a healthy condition.

Surgeon's Recommendation of an occasional general Bath.

Before concluding this part of the Report it is proper to mention that the surgeon very strongly recommends (and apparently with good reason) that means should be provided to enable the whole of the prisoners occasionally to take a bath, at least during the summer months, for the promotion of cleanliness and health.

Diet, Clothing, Bedding.

Diet.

The allowance of diet is as follows:—

Men and Women.—Bread, 20 ounces daily; meat, 6 ounces, with 1 pint of gruel three times a-week; soup, 1 pint, with 1 pint of gruel three times a-week; gruel alone, 1 pint once a-week.

Boys.—Bread, 16 ounces daily; meat, 6 ounces, with 1 pint of gruel once a-week; soup, 1 pint, with 1 pint of gruel once a-week; gruel alone, 2 pints five times a-week.—Vide Dietary, Appendix, Returns No. 2 and No. 18.

The untried may supply themselves; but, if incapable, they receive (if adults) the first-class allowance given to convicted prisoners. Male prisoners, sentenced to six months' imprisonment and upwards, are allowed half a pint of gruel, as an extra evening meal; and on Saturdays all male prisoners, whose confinement has exceeded six months, are allowed six ounces of meat and half a pound of potatoes for dinner, instead of gruel. Prisoners not sentenced to hard labour, if they do not support themselves, are required to pay 5*s.* per week for their diet, &c., in order to exempt them from work. For soldiers sentenced to imprisonment by courts-martial, and deserters, 6*d.* per diem is paid to the county, by the respective regiments to which they belong, towards their support. The total cost of prison diet for the last year was £3,563. 4*s.*

Clothing.

The allowance of clothing to males is one shirt, one jacket, one waistcoat, one pair of trousers, one pair of stockings, a pair of shoes, a woollen cap, a stock, a pair of braces, and a pocket-handkerchief. To females, one gown, one shift, one wrapper, one calico dress, one flannel petticoat, a pair of stockings, a pair of shoes, one linen cap, one neck-handkerchief, and one pocket-handkerchief.

It is not considered necessary to have any periodical inspection for ascertaining what clothing is needful. The supply is not varied according to the seasons, except that in summer the women have cotton instead of woollen dresses. Two days in each week are appointed for giving out and changing clothes and stores. The storekeeper keeps a regular account of the issue of the articles and of their value; and no clothes are supplied, except by a written order of the governor on that officer, whose books are submitted to the visiting magistrates; and all bills of parcels for general stores supplied to the prison are left in the governor's office. None of the clothes (except shirts, shifts, women's cotton dresses, and stockings) are manufactured in the prison. Male prisoners, being felons, reputed thieves, and vagrants, wear a grey and yellow, and misdemeanants a blue dress. The last year's costs for prison clothes was 861*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.*

Bedding.

Each prisoner is provided with a separate bed or berth, and with one rug and two blankets. There are no stated periods for washing the bedding; it is done when found to be necessary; and it is shaken and aired by the prisoners, in the yards, once every week, the weather permitting; the turnkey of each yard attending to see that it is properly done. The bedding is generally in a clean state. The cost thereof for the last year was 143*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.*

Offences in Prison, and their Punishments.

Offences.

The most usual offences committed in the prison are neglect or refusal to work; destruction of clothes or bedding; defacing the walls or cells; talking, regardless of the order of silence; occasional swearing; foul language, and insolence when reported; and wilful disobedience of various orders necessary to be enforced.

Punishments recorded.

The punishments consist of the stoppage of a meal, or part of a meal; for several offences, stoppage of more than one meal, or being kept on bread and water, or locked up in the refractory cells on bread and water only. The visiting magistrates also occasionally convict, after hearing evidence on oath, and sentence to longer terms of solitary confinement on bread and water, or to corporal punishment. The punishments vary, between the minimum and maximum, from the stoppage of half a pint of gruel to three days' solitary confinement on bread and water only. Handcuffs are put on when violence is attempted or threatened; and irons are sometimes used in cases of violent assault or outrageous conduct. The instrument employed for whipping is the cat-of-nine-tails, similar to that used in the army, and graduated according to the age and strength of the culprit; the punishment being inflicted in the presence of the offender's class, and of the worst conducted of the other classes, and of the governor and surgeon. The number of lashes does not exceed three dozen. Whenever any such punishments take place they are recorded. The daily average number of prisoners during the year ending Michaelmas 1836 is stated to have been 871, (say, for the purposes of the following observations, 900,) and the daily average number of recorded punishments to have been 32 and a fraction. These punishments were—so that the recorded punishments were about or rather less than four per cent. daily.

| Various acts of disorder . . . . . . | 3,782 |
| | 11,932 |

Punishments not recorded.

There are other modes of punishment employed, however, which are not recorded, because they are considered to be within the scope and operation of the prisoners' sentence. For instance, the Act requires that prisoners shall work on the wheels not exceeding ten hours per day. The usual hours for labour, according to the prison regulations, are less than that number. Consequently, any order by the governor, when a prisoner offends, which imposes on that prisoner more than the usual quantity of labour required by such regulation, but less than, or not exceeding what, the law demands, is not considered in the light of a punishment for an offence committed within the prison. It is, however, no less a punishment in that sense of the term, and is a part of the machinery constantly employed for correcting such offences, and for upholding the prison discipline. The last-mentioned punishments are extra work on the wheels within the hours limited by law—stoppage of the plus, (a term signifying any excess of food, which, having been prepared beyond the limited quantity, is divided among the prisoners of the class in rotation,)—confinement in cells for a day or shorter period, without stoppage of food—and declaring the prisoner ineligible for any indulgence or employment in the prison. Such punishments average daily about 23, or 2½ per cent., upon a daily average of 900 prisoners. Mr. Chesterton thinks that the punishments of both kinds, which are inflicted daily, may be said to be about 6½ per cent., which, in relation to a daily average of 900 prisoners, will amount to somewhat above 58 punishments per diem. We should here observe, however, that the governor, in a return made by him to us, dated 4th May 1836, in relation to the punishments inflicted during the three months preceding that date, states as follows:—“ Prisoners ordered to work extra turns or half-turns through the wheels, or who have been “ put into cells for a few hours for some breach of the various necessary exactions, have not “ been registered, such checks not having been deemed to be punishments beyond what their “ original sentence warranted. On the male side, where I can the more confidently aver that “ the utmost strictness is enforced, the daily average number ordered extra hours on the “ wheels appears to be about three in each of the nine tread-wheel yards, capable of working "48 prisoners each." Now this return of Mr. Chesterton would make it appear that the unrecorded punishments on the male side, per diem, during three months preceding the 4th May 1836, were 27; and if to these the like punishments in respect of the prisoners in the female wards are added (which, we think, the matron said were about 13 daily, and which we consider to be a very moderate proportion, in relation to the numbers of prisoners in the respective buildings), then the whole of the unrecorded punishments during the period last mentioned would be 40 per diem, or about 4½ per cent; and if these are added to the recorded punishments, being about 4 per cent., then the total number of punishments daily will be about 76, or about 8½ per cent. Whichever of these calculations comes the nearest to a general average, we are satisfied, from the candour with which all our inquiries are answered in Coldbath-fields prison, that no statement has been made with a view to mislead; and, as we do not wish to overstate any facts, we have assumed the lesser amount of punishments for the purposes of this Report.

Reports.

The turnkeys report, either from their own knowledge, or on complaint made to them by a yardsman, monitor, or prisoner. In the male prison, the reports for offences, committed during the preceding day and night, are entered by the turnkeys on a slate, and are ready for delivery every morning, immediately before breakfast. One turnkey goes the round of the yards, and collects the slates from fifteen different yard turnkeys (exclusive of female turnkeys). The prisoners reported (females excepted) are then conducted before the governor, who inquires into the facts, and, if necessary, awards the punishments. And here are nearly sixty reports to be inquired into, daily, upon the best evidence that circumstances will afford; that evidence, in a great number of cases, and to a considerable extent, depending on the word and veracity of monitors and common prisoners. The latter have an interest in cashiering monitors, that they may themselves be promoted to their office and advantages. They anxiously watch opportunities to do so; and there have been instances of their doing it falsely; whilst, on the other hand, monitors are sometimes broken for favouritism to some prisoners, and have been known to make exaggerated statements against others.

Punishments by the Matron.

In the female prison the matron receives reports against the prisoners, inquires into them, and awards punishment, subject to the governor's confirmation or reversal. Mr. Chesterton, in his evidence, states his reasons for sanctioning this practice; a practice which, however it may work in a prison like Coldbath-fields, under the management of a good officer and a respectable matron, appears to be wrong in principle, and contrary to the Gaol Act.

The punishments have been much more numerous since the introduction of the Silent System than before; and have increased, rather than diminished, in proportion to the length of time it has been enforced. In the year ending September 1835, the number recorded was 9,435; in the year ending September 1836 it was 11,932.

Punishments insufficient to maintain the Discipline.

Notwithstanding the discipline is attempted to be maintained by never overlooking a single breach of it, however trifling (for if a prisoner speaks only once—even one word—he loses his meal); notwithstanding punishments generally are inflicted to the extent which the law sanctions; and notwithstanding the frequency of these punishments; yet it is admitted by Mr. Chesterton that they are insufficient effectually to keep up the discipline.—"The punishments are decidedly insufficient to keep up the discipline."—"They will not deter—it it almost impossible to make them (the prisoners) work."—"The punishments are not a preventive."—"I go as far as the law allows, and ultimately succeed with the individuals punished; but new-comers occasion the difficulty." *

The reduction of food, too, as a mode of punishment very frequently resorted to, is open to great objections. It is unequal in its effects, and might become extremely injurious to health, if not applied with great discretion. On this point Mr. Chesterton says, "It is a mode of punishment which cannot be made sufficient altogether to deter, without being carried to an extent which would be injurious to the physical strength of the prisoners."—"This is one of our difficulties."—"Some efficient punishment is sadly wanted."

Officers.

The officers of the establishment are—the governor, 1; chaplain, 1; matron, 1; surgeon, 1; clerk, 1; assistant ditto, 1; storekeeper, 1; deputy storekeeper, 1; surveyor, 1; schoolmaster, 1; chief turnkey, 1; turnkeys, male, 30; ditto, female, 8; infirmary turnkey, male, 1; ditto, female, 1; engineer, 1; gatekeepers, 2; altogether 54. For a statement of their salaries, fees, emoluments, allowances, &c., vide Appendix, Return 2, No. 21.

The governor, chief turnkey, storekeeper, one gatekeeper, and the matron, reside in the prison. The chaplain, surgeon, clerk, and all the turnkeys, (except 10, who are nightly employed within the walls on duty,) reside out of the prison. All the other turnkeys reside within the immediate neighbourhood.

After what has already been said, it is scarcely necessary to add, that the 1st Regulation of the Gaol Act, requiring "that no keeper or officer of a prison shall sell or derive any advantage from the sale of any article to prisoners," &c.; the 2nd Regulation, requiring "that a matron shall be appointed," &c.; the 3rd Regulation, requiring "that the keeper shall visit every ward and see every prisoner and inspect every cell once in every 24 hours," &c.; the 4th Regulation, requiring "that the keeper shall keep a journal, in which he shall record all punishments," &c.; and the 23rd Regulation, requiring "that no money, under the name of garnish, shall be taken," &c.,

appear to have been fully complied with; except as already stated under the head "Offences, &c.," in reference to certain punishments, which (it is presumed) ought, according to the 4th

Regulation, to be recorded, viz., those which are said to fall within the operation of the prisoner's sentence.

The various matters embraced by the other regulations of the Gaol Act have been reported upon in detail.

As to the duties of the chaplain, vide "Religious and Moral Instruction."

As to the duties of the surgeon, vide "Health."

The sub-officers appear to be well selected, and to have been taken chiefly from a class of individuals well calculated to discharge the duties of turnkeys. And great discrimination and care have been evinced in the choice of them. The chief turnkey especially, a most active and intelligent person, is admirably adapted for the office, and is spoken of in unqualified terms of approbation by the governor. The salaries, &c., of the officers, for the year ending Michaelmas 1836, amounted to £5,384. 11*s.* 8*d.* The following return will show in what manner the officers are distributed.

1 Governor,
1 Chaplain,
1 Surgeon,
1 Chief Turnkey,
1 Clerk,
1 Storekeeper,
1 Engineer,
2 Assistant Clerks, &c.
3 Gatekeepers; outer, centre, and inner,
1 Deputy Storekeeper,
1 Infirmary Turnkey,
2 Cooks, &c.
1 Oakum Master,
1 Superintending Works,
1 Gardener, &c.
10 In yards, &c., of Old Building.
  1—1st and 2d Felons,
  1—3d Felons,
  1—4th Misdemeanants,
  1—5th ditto.
  1—6th ditto.
  1—7th Rogues and Vagabonds,
  1—8th Ditto ditto.
  1—1st and 2d Outers, &c.
  1—3d and 4th ditto.
  1—2 Galleries, upper and lower,
1 1st and 2d Vagrant Yards,
1 3d and 4th ditto.
1 in charge of Refractory Cells,
3 in passages: to open and shut yard gates, conduct prisoners to work-rooms and back, convey provisions, and visit work-rooms, deliver letters, messages, &c., &c.
1 in passages, and from time to time to go round the grounds.
1 ditto, and to assist 1st and 2d yards.
1 Schoolmaster and Chapel Clerk.
5 Watchmen, day and night.

These are all considered by the Magistrates as Turnkeys.

It may be important also to set forth the three following Returns made by Mr. Chesterton:

LIST of Turnkeys at the House of Correction at Coldbath-fields who have resigned or been discharged between the 1st January 1836 and 1st January 1837.

Monitors, &c.

Besides the regular officers there is another class of individuals, viz., monitors, yardsmen, &c., selected from the prisoners, who fill various offices in the prison, and constitute a very considerable part of the vast machinery by which the system is upheld. These persons, and the circumstances connected with their appointment, unquestionably form one of the principal features of this Report.

The various persons altogether, who fill offices of trust in the prison, are 272. They are—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| First.—The regular officers of the establishment, as stated above | | 54 |
| Secondly.—Prisoners employed as monitors, &c., who receive extra allowance: vide "Return of Number of Yardsmen," &c. below | 151 | |
| From whom deduct those employed in preparing oakum, &c. | 12 | |
| | | 139 |
| Thirdly.—Prisoners employed as cleaners, who do not receive extra allowance | | 63 |
| Fourthly.—Prisoners emplowed as barbers and flannel-washers, who receive extra allowance | | 16 |
| | | 272 |

The daily average number of prisoners in 1836 was 871—say 900; so that, to a smaller proportion than four prisoners, one individual is employed either as an officer or in the character of an officer or attendant. But if, from the 272 persons (officers or attendants) so employed, the officers are excluded (which is probably the more correct method), the number of prisoners employed as officers will be 218; and, deducting that number from the daily average number of prisoners (900), the proportions will be 272 to 682; or 1 to 2½.

The numbers and various duties of the prisoners who are monitors, yardsmen, &c., will appear from the following statement. There are—

The following Return was made to us by Mr. Chesterton in May 1836. It contains a variety of information relative to a portion of the prisoners employed; and, we believe, includes all of them except the cleaners, barbers, and flannel-washers.

RETURN of the Number of Yardsmen, Monitors, &c., employed in the House of Correction, Coldbath-fields, on the 17th May 1836.

| Names. | Age. | Offence. | Sentence. | Date of Admission. | Date of Employment. | Nature of Employment. | Number of times Convicted. | Those marked N. L. are not sentenced to hard labour. | Extra Allowance. | Remarks. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| W. F. | 23 | Felony . . . . . . | 2 Years . | 12 June 1834 | 11 May 1836 | Yardsman . . . . | .. | .. | Extra pint of gruel for breakfast; half pint of gruel for supper, daily; and three times a-week a pint of soup for dinner. | The selection of Monitors is oftentimes a task of much difficulty, and is one of the most perplexing parts of the system. We are generally confined in our choice to prisoners with the longer sentences, since those sent for short terms (who compose the great majority) have not the same motives for vigilance as those whose long prospect of confinement makes them anxious to retain their situations. Again, prisoners committed to hard labour, for long periods, must have intervals of rest, increase of allowance, and variation of employment, or many of them in a short space of time, from mental anxiety, become extremely reduced; their employment, therefore, as Monitors, &c., answers the twofold purpose of enforcing silence and of maintaining their strength; but no persons who are not efficient are ever, under any circumstances, permitted to retain their places. The rule is not to appoint as Monitors prisoners who have been before committed, but, sometimes, for the above reasons, we are compelled to depart from this rule. It is our practice also to appoint prisoners, with long terms, to situations for two or three months, and then let them resume their former position; but some are so extremely vigilant and useful that we retain them longer, owing to the value of their services. In short, we are compelled to act for the best, with reference to the health, intelligence, and conduct of the prisoners generally. |

The ordinary sweepers and cleaners are not included in this Return, because they are taken for that service by rotation, have no additional allowance for it, and return to the labour either of the wheels or to pick oakum when the work of cleaning is done.

G. L. Chesterton, Governor.

I.
Home District.
Metropolitan Gaols.
Coldbath-fields House of Correction.

Such is a portion of the vast machinery employed in carrying on the system enforced in this prison. There are various other extensive and complicated details of a minor character, which it is unnecessary to explain, and which indeed could not be explained within the limited compass of a report of this nature. Mr. Chesterton, the governor, appears to have left no means untried, which ingenuity could devise, to perfect, so far indeed as it can be perfected, the discipline of the prison. He has many and great advantages, however, without which, he admits, he could not have succeeded even to the extent he has done. He receives the constant support and co-operation of a large body of intelligent magistrates; he possesses opportunities of selecting the best officers of every kind; and he has always under his control an immense number of prisoners from which to select monitors. The disadvantages against which he has to struggle are principally these; that in order to maintain good discipline the turnkeys must possess qualifications rarely united in any individual, a circumstance which obliges him frequently to take great pains to instruct them, and yet, after being so instructed, many of them, owing to the arduous nature of the duties, leave without engaging in the service—that of those who do engage in it many quit after remaining for five or six years (no fewer, for instance, than 11 having quitted from various causes last year)—that monitors must possess qualifications of a very high order, and yet these qualifications are to be sought for amongst felons, rogues, and vagabonds—that although he has always under his control an immense number of such persons from which to make a good selection, yet is he constantly obliged to break them when made (having, for instance, in the year ending 1836 dismissed and punished for neglect of duty, &c., no fewer than 130)—that in order to make that selection he must rely, in a great measure, upon the knowledge and recommendation of turnkeys, which affords scope for patronage and familiarities, and most unquestionably has a tendency to produce very serious evils—that, in order to keep up the monitors to the performance of their duties, it is necessary to receive reports against them from prisoners, and yet those prisoners have a direct interest in removing monitors from their office, and in some instances make false accusations with that object—that, when extensive sickness prevails, it causes amongst the officers the greatest " distress," and yet is an occasion on which their active co-operation is most required (for " the prisoners then become overwhelming in their complaints," and " the difficulties increase a hundred fold")—that punishment by reduction of food is one of the most powerful agents employed in working the system, and yet cannot, without the greatest discretion, be carried far enough to deter without injury to health—that, in short, he punishes generally to the extent of the law, and yet the punishments do not act as a preventive, and are insufficient to maintain the discipline.—(Vide Mr. Chesterton's Examination.)

Accounts, &c.

The different books used for the business of the prison are 43 in number. It will be sufficient merely to state their several designations. They form no unimportant part of the machinery employed. They are, 1st. Governor's Journal; 2nd. Ditto of Punishments; 3rd. Ditto Order Book for Visiting Magistrates; 4th. Ditto Account Book of Petty Disbursements; 5th. Ditto Report to Visiting Magistrates; 6th. Chaplain's Journal; 7th. Surgeon's Ditto of Patients in the Infirmaries; 8th. Ditto of Extras ordered by the Surgeon; 9th. Register of Appointment, Discharge, and Weekly Wages of Turnkeys; 43rd. Ditto of Sums Received from and Paid to Prisoners.

Miscellaneous.

Recommittals.

The number of prisoners in custody during the year ending September 1836, who had before been committed to this prison, appears to have been 2,795. The total number for the same year was 7,931.

Effect of Imprisonment on the Criminal Population of the Neighbourhood, on the Minds of the Prisoners, and the Habits of the Discharged.

Judging from the immense number of recommittals, it would almost seem that the effect produced by imprisonment on the criminal population of the neighbourhood, and the habits of the discharged, is not such as materially to deter from the commission of crime. One female has been recommitted to this prison about 120 times, but no correct inference perhaps can be deduced from that fact.

The Means of forwarding the Destitute to their Parishes.

Passes are rarely granted, and never unless, after a very strict examination, the prisoners are found to be deserving; a small sum of money is usually given, according to their circumstances, and the distance at which they reside from the prison.

Insane Prisoners.

There are no insane prisoners now confined in this prison.

Pardon.

No prisoner was recommended during the last year for pardon on the ground of good conduct.

Prisoners committed under the Revenue Laws.

No allowance is made to prisoners committed under the Revenue Laws.

Mr. Chesterton's Examination.

The examinations of the Chaplain and Surgeon are embodied in the Report under the respective heads of "Religious and Moral Instruction," and "Health." The examination of the governor bears upon a great variety of points which require to be kept distinct, and, for that reason, is given in a separate form.

Advantages at Coldbath-fields.

"I believe the Silent System is considered to be well enforced in this prison, and to have been brought as nearly to a state of perfection as it can be. We commenced it in December 1834, and have used every means which could be devised to bring it into its present condition. This is the largest criminal prison in the kingdom. I have had repeated applications from magistrates of counties, and governors of prisons, for information and assistance, and for permission to view the system in operation, as well as for my rules, regulations, mode of discipline, &c.; and I have, from time to time, given the information and assistance so required. I admit that my means of selecting good turnkeys and monitors are decidedly better than what are possessed by keepers of country prisons. There is here a much larger and more intelligent population, and I have a great number of prisoners; and with regard to turnkeys, I have also great advantages on account of the numbers of discharged non-commissioned officers residing in and about the metropolis. We have had, and now have, in this establishment, a great many artillerymen, who are persons of very superior intelligence, and peculiarly well adapted for the office. Another great advantage is, that our magistrates are more numerous, and, on account of the locality, are extremely regular in their attendance. I believe they take great pride in this prison; their meetings here are weekly, and on such occasions they average about six; and, independently of their weekly meetings, the visiting justices, of whom there are 14, are continually inspecting the prison. The magistrates afford me every possible support, taking the greatest interest in maintaining the discipline, and keeping up a most effective establishment; and without such support it would have been impossible to bring the system into its present state of working."

Arduous Duties at Coldbath-fields.

"My duties as governor, and the duties of the officers generally, are extremely arduous, and have decidedly become more so since the introduction of the silent system. The details being so much more numerous, the most unremitting attention is required. Constant watching and smart discipline are absolutely indispensable. In the event of the unavoidable absence or illness of myself and chief turnkey at the same time, good substitutes could not immediately be found; this would produce great inconvenience, and, indeed, great relaxation of the discipline. Substitutes would not have sufficient authority over the officers, they would not work the System with the confidence required; they might not, and in fact could not, have a competent knowledge of its numerous and complicated details; and therefore the evils, which the Silent System is intended to prevent, would again, no doubt, in a very great degree, be brought into action. It would be desirable, for perfecting the system, to have a great increase of officers; I mean in lieu of monitors; certainly the number of officers should be equal to that of the officers and prisoners now employed, in order to maintain a good discipline; but the expense would be so enormous as to make it impracticable."

Qualifications of Turnkeys, &c.

"The qualifications of a good turnkey are sobriety, punctuality, quickness, patience, honesty, temper, industry, sound health, firmness, vigilance, method (which is indispensable), habits of obedience, and a tolerable education, at least sufficient to be able to read and write well. There are few, especially in that class of society from which turnkeys are selected, who possess these qualifications:—amongst women there are fewer still. The turnkeys here come on three months' trial: perhaps one in six is found to be incompetent; but, if their characters are good, we take great pains to instruct them, knowing how rarely persons are to be found who are fit for the office. Many of those who come on trial, notwithstanding that the stipend is good, leave without engaging, upon finding the duties so arduous, and exposure to the weather in the yards and passages so very trying to their health. The changes, dismissals, and resignations of turnkeys have been very great. Between the 1st January 1836 and 1st January 1837, eleven have resigned or been discharged. I find that, after performing the arduous duties of this prison for five or six years, owing to the inconvenience they are subject to from exposure to the weather, and the necessary confinement they must submit to, they very naturally get tired of the office. Of the eleven mentioned, two were discharged for incapacity; two for neglect of duty; one resigned, because he had been removed from his yard for improper conduct; four had procured other situations; one resigned on account of his own illness; and one on account of the illness of his wife. I am not surprised at their leaving after a series of five or six years of such service: it must lead to that result. Doubtless, familiarity between monitors and turnkeys would generate great evils: it might open communications from outside the prison, and in various other ways would be most injurious to discipline. Before the adoption of the Silent System, instances of such communication, resulting from familiarity between monitors and turnkeys, have occurred here; but I believe not very frequently."

"A yardsman should be able to read, in order to call the numbers of prisoners; and both monitors and yardsmen should possess integrity, quickness, temper, vigilance, firmness, industry, and habits of obedience; but prisoners possessing such qualifications are rarely procurable; therefore the opportunities of making a good selection are extremely limited. It is a general rule with me not to take monitors, &c., from prisoners who have been before committed, unless compelled by necessity, which sometimes is the case; and then, of course, I must relax the rule. Monitors whom I have once broken or discharged I do not again engage, at least until they have atoned for their misbehaviour by subsequent good conduct. And, generally speaking, I do not select them from prisoners who have been sentenced for short terms, unless compelled by absolute necessity; and then I must procure them where and how I can. Prisoners, sentenced to long terms of imprisonment, are not promoted to the office of monitors until they have been first subjected to the discipline of the prison, and have manifested previous good conduct. And from the same class of prisoners, namely, those sentenced for long terms, I am often obliged to make monitors or yardsmen, because their minds and health become injured by long imprisonment, and it then becomes requisite to vary their employment. I retain none, however, who fail in the performance of their duty. In consequence of all these circumstances it becomes most difficult to procure fit persons for the office, and it is a difficulty which I admit to be one of the most perplexing parts of the System. Monitors fail to perform their duties, and I am constantly breaking and discharging them. I break more than one a-week; sometimes I break for not being vigilant, sometimes for speaking to other monitors, sometimes for favoritism, sometimes for endeavouring clandestinely to procure bread from other prisoners, and frequently for incapacity. Amongst the women it is still more difficult to make a good selection; and therefore I do not speak so confidently of the discipline of the female prison here, which, however, I believe to be superior to other female prisons. Prisoners eagerly watch opportunities to report monitors. Such reports are very frequent; but it is a practice which I think protects and upholds the Silent System. I receive such reports, of course, with suspicion, and with great circumspection inquire into their truth. I call on the monitor to explain. I ask the turnkey of the yard what he has observed generally of the monitor's conduct. I send for and examine other prisoners, without their knowing on what points they are to be examined; and I question other prisoners in the yard privately as to the general conduct of the monitor reported. No doubt the prisoners (rogues and vagabonds excepted, for we never take our monitors from that class) have an interest in procuring monitors to be broken, from a hope of being themselves promoted to the office; but I take every possible precaution to obviate this difficulty. I have had instances, however, of false accusations against monitors by prisoners; and unquestionably the sifting of these accusations and reports occasions much trouble. The same observations, for the most part, which I have made in reference to monitors and yardsmen apply also to the other prisoners employed in the various offices and duties of the prison, viz., artificers, scourers, labourers, washerwomen, and all others. With regard to the employment of monitors, I am of opinion that, so long as prisoners assemble in bodies, and monitors, on that account, are necessary, it is very desirable that they should be rewarded for good conduct; some inducement should be offered. Of course I should prefer officers (not prisoners). The appointment of monitors, yardsmen, artisans, &c., affords a means of keeping up the health of prisoners sentenced to long terms of imprisonment. I do not think, however, (generally speaking,) that they are to be trusted, and I believe that every possible check must be used to meet this difficulty. These monitors, yardsmen, and artificers are selected by myself, on the recommendation of the chief turnkey and of the turnkeys of the yards, and from my own observation of their previous conduct."

Sickness.

"There was great sickness here during the snow, with subsequent influenza; and a great number of my officers, as many as four at a time, were then laid up. Since then we have frequently had one or two turnkeys sick. There are occasionally other imperative causes for their absence, such circumstances happening in their families. I have now a turnkey who has been absent four days in consequence of the death of his wife. Sickness in the prison necessarily occasions much inconvenience and distress in working the system whenever it occurs. I am greatly disinclined to punish severely by reduction of food, not only that the physical strength of the prisoners may not be impaired, but because, in the great majority of cases, I am obliged to rely on the veracity of monitors and yardsmen (themselves being prisoners). Hence, of course, our control upon such occasions must be considerably diminished, and the discipline proportionably relaxed. Prisoners are sharp-sighted, and avail themselves of every circumstance in their favour: in cases of sickness they become overwhelming in their complaints, as well for the purpose of eluding the discipline as of getting into the infirmaries; and they will then practise every sort of deception to gain these ends."

On the 6th January 1837, Mr. Chesterton, on the subject of sickness, stated as follows:— "The cases of sickness are double the usual number. On the female side the whole of the infirmary accommodation is engaged, and an additional apartment has been used on the male side. There has been one case of death, and there are three or four other cases likely to terminate in death. Our prisoners are chiefly men of infirm and broken constitutions, and therefore predisposed to sickness; but the weather has afflicted the officers also, the loss of whose services has occasioned great distress and difficulty. Whenever there is great sickness amongst the officers, arising from the state of the atmosphere or otherwise, the difficulties increase a hundred fold. The prisoners are exposed to the weather during the hours of labour on the wheels. The labour on the wheels produces increased circulation, glow upon the skin, and perspiration; and, in the case of new-comers, it also produces great fatigue and exhaustion. In this state they go on relief, and then, from exposure to the cold, are liable to be chilled; and, although the chilling effect of the open air might be counteracted by their taking exercise in walking about upon the stage, yet, being at liberty to sit, they prefer to do so; and they sit on the outer edge of the stage, where they are most exposed to the weather."

"Whenever there is distress in the prison occasioned by sickness, the prisoners seize the opportunity, and overwhelm us with complaints. When there are cases of dysentery, they will dirt their beds, as well to give trouble as to make it appear that they are ill. The punishment is decidedly insufficient to keep up the discipline. It is almost impossible to make them work. I am convinced they could do more than they do. The punishment is not a preventive; it does not deter. I go as far as the law allows, and ultimately succeed with the individuals so punished; but new-comers occasion the difficulty—soldiers, and sailors, and bad characters, will not obey any rule until it is enforced by punishment."

"I think that reduction of food (as well, indeed, as tread-wheel labour) punishes not only the body, but the mind as well. I believe it punishes the mind, by producing dissatisfaction and irritation. Prisoners think all punishment unjust. Its effects are unequal; it is more felt by men than boys, and is dependent on health, and many other circumstances. If the reduction of food is not very considerable, prisoners rather court it as a means of escaping the tread-wheel. They will sometimes attempt to reduce their system with that view, provided they can do so without real injury to health. I punish in all cases except where the surgeon interposes on account of health; and then I always profess to the prisoners to make a great favour of remitting the punishment, that they may not wholly lose the salutary influence which the dread of it ought to inspire. In the year 1836 the number of punishments for talking and swearing was 5,138. This, of course, shows that some communication does take place among the prisoners. It occurs, I think, chiefly on the wheels, at chapel, and in the workrooms; but not to any extent at night in their sleeping-rooms. Reduction of food is, I think, very injurious to health, if not managed with great discretion: this is one of our difficulties. It is a mode of punishment which cannot be rendered perfectly effectual to deter, without being carried to an extent that would be injurious to the physical strength of prisoners. Some efficient punishment is sadly wanted. During the late epidemic the reduction of food as a punishment was not so great, for the reasons I have assigned, and which, of course, interfered with and lessened the punishments; and the prisoners, knowing that we are obliged to be cautious in reducing the food, take advantage of the circumstance. The punishments have certainly much increased since the Silent System was introduced, which may be accounted for, however, by the fact of the constant influx of strangers into the prison. Punishments are more frequent now than when we began the System. The matron hears complaints against the female prisoners, and awards the punishment, subject to my confirmation or reversal; this, I consider, strengthens her authority,—a point quite necessary, in order to uphold discipline amongst from 200 to 300 females (and sometimes upwards) of such various tempers and dispositions. I receive the report of what is done three times daily, (oftentimes more frequently,) viz., before breakfast, when I visit the female prison; next, when I make my general visit to every prisoner; and, thirdly, in the evening. Upon such occasions I hear the particulars, examine monitors, turnkeys, &c., and confirm or annul the matron's decision. It is quite necessary, in so numerous a body, that the matron should act promptly in cases of emergency, when (if in the interior of the males' prison, or urgently engaged) I might not be readily found, since the violent tempers of depraved women so frequently lead them to acts of open resistance, that riot and confusion might otherwise prevail to a great extent. If prisoners demand to see me on such occasions, I am, as soon as possible, informed of it, and go to them; I hear what they have to say, and examine others, to elicit the facts. There are various cases which admit of no doubt or hesitation; as, for instance, the refusal or neglect of work, the surgeon reporting them able; swearing, foul language, and threats to monitors or turnkeys; singing in the cells or rooms from wilful impudence; refusal to go to the wards assigned to them; wilfully breaking their utensils or destroying their clothes: these offences require instant check. In respect of female prisoners, it appears to me preferable to take the reports one by one as offences arise; for the irritability and violence of many are, from time to time, so great, that, if all were adjudged (as on the male side) to punishment at one particular hour, on some occasions riot and resistance would prevail, and the shouts and defiance of some would irritate others disposed to resist."

Reports, and Punishments not recorded.

"The recorded punishments were somewhat less than four per cent. daily during the last year—about 32 per diem. They were only recorded when certain punishments took place, but there were other reports, and also punishments, which were not recorded, viz. where the latter were within the scope of the prisoner's sentence; such as performing extra work on the wheel within the hours limited by law, stoppage of the plus, (to which the prisoner is not strictly entitled,) and confinement in cells for a day, or shorter period, without stopping food, the prisoner coming out to exercise with his class; and also making him ineligible for any indulgence or employment in the prison. I do not consider these as punishments which I am bound to record. I inquire into the reports, however, on which they are grounded, and require the same kind of evidence as in the cases of recorded punishments. I think six and a half per cent. daily will cover the whole, including the matron's reports; and that this admission is a liberal one, and the fact rather overstated than not. It requires about half an hour, and sometimes three-quarters of an hour, daily, to inquire into these reports. One report often embraces two or three individuals. The evidence required is that of a turnkey, yardsman, or monitor, and sometimes of prisoners. I am careful to get the best evidence. Occasionally there is a difficulty in proving their correctness; as, for instance, when the charge is for talking, turning the head, &c. I do not punish generally, that is, the class, or any number of prisoners, when the guilty individual cannot be discovered, lest I should inflict injustice upon an innocent party; but I frequently threaten such punishment, and sometimes I stop the plus. I have had instances of false accusations by prisoners against prisoners, and by common prisoners against monitors, yardsmen, &c., and also instances of exaggeration of the offences of prisoners by monitors. Such false reports, I suppose, must originate in dislike or caprice on the part of the monitors; and whenever prisoners report monitors, (which they will sometimes do falsely if they can,) it must be with a view to their own promotion. I seldom receive reports from reputed thieves, and utterers of base coin, against each other; unless I find, on inquiry, that the parties have not worked together before they came here, and that they then resided at a distance from each other; from an apprehension that such reports may be false, and have originated in feelings of dislike or revenge. There are fifteen different persons from whom I receive the reports every morning, exclusive of the matron, who receives and brings me her reports for the female prison, and which she collects from the eight turnkeys there. The reports of this day, which have issued in punishments not recorded, were altogether 27, which, with the average number of recorded punishments for the last year, viz. four per cent., or 32 per diem (taking last year's punishments as the supposed average number for the current year), will make altogether 59 punishments per diem. The time consumed in marching, countermarching, forming into file and sections, &c., as stated by the chief turnkey, is about 105 minutes daily, which is a great loss of time."

Comparative Merits of the Silent System.

"Before the introduction of the Silent System, silence was enjoined during work, and quietness at all times: the prisoners were scattered in small parties in the numerous day-rooms, and at night three slept in each cell. Loose conversation, in a subdued tone, was (particularly at night) inevitable, and robberies were plotted in prison, against which (as facts came to my knowledge) I have frequently sent to forewarn parties intended to be plundered; while resistance to our authority might be systematized. Owing to the numerous day-rooms in occupation, the turnkeys also were numerous; but since the introduction of the stricter system they have been less in number by three than formerly, though the monitors have been greatly increased. I fully acknowledge the superiority of a Separate over the Silent System; but, as the latter has been the only one hitherto practicable here, it has been adopted with a diminished Establishment, and has been most zealously worked. The benefits resulting from it, by preventing contamination alone, independently of some other considerations, have, I am convinced, been very great indeed. The manifest good resulting from it has been a principal stimulus to its rigid enforcement."

Communication in Prison.

"When a death takes place the prisoners cannot, in general, become aware of it, unless they see the corpse taken to be interred. Extensive communication is impossible here, but some communication may, and must take place."

Tread-wheel Labour as to Health.

"We had much sickness during the late epidemic, both amongst prisoners and officers, namely, the influenza, in its various stages. Where prisoners are exposed greatly to the atmosphere and draughts, as is the case here on the wheels and in the passages, it must be injurious to health. Their coming off the wheels warm, for relief, and sitting in that state on the stages, must be bad. I think tread-wheel labour injurious to the health of some of the prisoners—to corpulent, or infirm, and aged, or tall persons; but not to boys, lads, or men of light weight, if in good health. I take every possible means to prevent the bad effects of the tread-wheel by a judicious regulation of the labour, and by observing any ill effects it may produce on the constitution of the prisoners; and, if necessary, immediately calling the attention of the surgeon to any cases of the kind, or by relieving them myself according to circumstances, in various ways; either by diminishing the labour, increasing the diet (often including porter), placing them to work on the grounds, &c. I find that the men, in general, are greatly distressed after three months continuous labour, but tall and heavy men in a less time; they fall away in flesh, get into bad condition, and become generally depressed: the effect upon those who have been addicted to hard drinking, and who are sentenced to very long terms of imprisonment, is, in most cases, seriously injurious to the system. The stimulus produced by liquor being withdrawn, and the stomach losing its tone, the whole constitution fails, and it is with very great difficulty that they can be kept up by the means subsequently resorted to, and which I have just mentioned. With regard to women, I believe tread-wheel labour, if judiciously used, is highly beneficial to health; particularly in cases of disorderly women, prostitutes, &c., committed for periods not exceeding three months, and who generally come into prison in a deplorable condition from drink and intemperance, and quit it in good health. But these work less than the men, who labour in the proportion of twelve on the wheel to six at rest; the women in the proportion of twelve on the wheel to twelve off."

Tread-wheel Labour: Inequality of Punishment, and unfavourable to Reformation.

"I do not think that the state of the mind produced by tread-wheel labour is favourable to moral reformation. It is more severely felt by some prisoners than others. It decidedly gives rise to every deception and falsehood. The prisoners occasionally attempt to avoid taking their turn; they watch opportunities for this purpose; they deceive the doctor, they feign sickness of various kinds; seldom on meat days, however, unless after dinner. The following cases are instances: first, by raising "a fox" (their own term), that is, rubbing and excoriating the skin of the leg or foot, and applying to the wound any irritating matter, principally lime scraped from the walls; and by other such means causing an inflamed sore. This has also sometimes been done to the hands, in order to avoid picking oakum. Secondly, by causing swellings of the feet, legs, and other parts of the body, by tying a string (if procurable), or a garter, or brace, tightly round the part on going to bed at night. Thirdly, by derangement of the bowels by drinking large quantities of water (formerly by mixing and drinking salt and water), and by swallowing pills composed of soap and lime, and also soap-suds. Fourthly, by imitating itch by pricking their fingers with a sharp instrument, and by friction with string between the fingers, applying salt or lime. Fifthly, by rubbing chalk or lime upon the tongue, so as to make it appear furred. Sixthly, by putting their fingers into their throats, and causing forced vomiting. Seventhly, by pricking or cutting their fingers, and sucking and spitting the blood into their pots; and also sucking their gums till they bleed, and spitting out the blood; expedients to feign spitting of blood from the lungs. Eighthly, by coming into the prison with trusses on, that they may appear to have ruptures; also wearing their arms in slings, and pretending that they are dislocated. Ninthly, by feigning madness. Tenthly, by throwing themselves off the tread-wheels in pretended fits; which is a very common trick; but the imposture is easily discoverable. Such are the principal frauds resorted to. There is scarcely a man who comes here sentenced to hard labour, who, by his own account, has not had some most afflicting illness, or met with some serious accident, disabling him from hard work. This state of mind cannot be favourable to reformation; but, at the same time, I feel it right to express my own persuasion that many of these observations will apply to any species of labour imposed on prisoners as a task, and without offering some sufficient inducement to its performance."

Description.

WESTMINSTER BRIDEWELL.

1. Site, Construction, &c.

This prison, which is both a gaol and bridewell, or house of correction, stands in Tothill-fields, Westminster, and is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates for that city and liberty. It is a new building, having been first occupied in June 1834, and the cost of its erection is said to have exceeded £200,000. It consists of three principal divisions—the gaol for males before trial—the house of correction for male convicts—and the female prison—each on the radiating plan, and containing eight wards, with an airing-yard to each ward. In the centre of the prison is a large octangular court-yard, 250 feet across each way. It is unfortunate that this space is left in the centre of the building; as, in consequence of it, there is very little room for enlargement between the wards, and the boundary wall. The height of the boundary wall is 20 feet. The prison contains 42 day-rooms, and the following number of sleeping apartments:—

288 single sleeping-cells for one prisoner only.
  Dimensions, 8 feet long by 6 feet wide.
18 rooms, capable of sleeping ten or twelve prisoners.
  Dimensions, 20 feet 8 inches by 8 feet 4 inches.
18 rooms, capable of sleeping seven or eight prisoners.
  Dimensions, 20 feet 3 inches by 8 feet 4 inches.
18 rooms, capable of sleeping five or six prisoners.
  Dimensions, 13 feet 1 inch by 8 feet 4 inches.
2 rooms: dimensions, 20 feet by 16 feet 3 inches. } Capable of sleeping between 4 rooms: dimensions, 13 feet 3 inches by 9 feet 5 inches. } 50 and 60 prisoners.

348 Total number.

In addition to these, 120 cells were formed in the basement when the building was constructed, the dimensions of which are 7 feet 7 inches by 5 feet 8 inches; but they are necessarily very dark.

The cells used for punishment, termed "dark cells," are five in number (dimensions, 7 feet 6 inches by 5 feet 8 inches), on the basement story, and form part of the above 120. These cells were fitted, together with the approach to them, about two years since, at an expense of £60.

The ordinary thickness of the partition walls between the cells is 14 inches. The greatest number of prisoners in confinement at one time in the year ending Michaelmas 1835 was 464, and in that ending Michaelmas 1836, 468. The number of sleeping cells is, therefore, insufficient to secure constant separation by night, although enough for the average number. The total number in confinement was—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| On 6th February | 1835 | 325 |
| Ditto | 1836 | 298 |
| Ditto | 1837 | 236 |

The prison is in a good state of repair, and the greatest part of it is fire-proof. No escape has yet been made, or attempted.

Inspection.

The back windows of the keeper's house in the convict prison, as well as those of the male turnkey's house in the gaol, and of the matron's apartments in the female prison, overlook the several yards; and there are also sunk areas round these houses, respectively, in the walls of which there are apertures for the inspection of the yards, but there are no private means of inspecting the day-rooms and cells, and the prisoners in the day-rooms can watch the turnkeys' movements from their windows. The prison is not overlooked, but some parts of it command a view of other buildings. An instance will be hereafter mentioned in which a prisoner appointed his wife to be at Messrs. Elliot and Co.'s brewery at a certain time, in order that he might see her from the bridge leading into the chapel. The ventilation is tolerably good. The coldness of the sleeping-cells, particularly those in the female prison, on the east side, has been complained of during the past winter; but, having tried their temperature in the evening after locking up, we have no reason to think their coldness anything beyond what may be remedied by a little extra bed-covering during severe weather. The prison appeared dry and clean throughout. It is built on an artificial soil, viz. concrete over a marshy swamp. The drainage is good. There does not appear to be any reason for considering the locality of the prison unhealthy, although it lies so low.

2. Discipline, Management, &c.

Classification.

The system pursued is that of association, in the gaol, for the untried; and the Silent System, as it is termed, for the convicted in the house of correction. The prisoners occupy separate cells at night, except at times when the prison is unusually full. The present classification is as follows:—

In the Gaol for Males.

Ward No. 1. Infirmary. Not occupied.
No. 2. Crown witnesses and persons in close confinement.
No. 3. Indecent offenders.
No. 4. Boys for trial.
No. 5. Prisoners committed for felonies and frauds. N. B. This combination violates the regulations of the Act. We found two misdemeanants, viz., E. B. for fraud, and J. W. for uttering counterfeit coin, mixed with prisoners committed for felony.

In the House of Correction for Males.

No. 1. Soldiers and others for separation. The day-room now used as a school-room.
No. 2. Misdemeanants not sentenced to hard labour.
No. 3. Ditto sentenced to hard labour.
No. 4. Convicted felons. } Treadmills in these yards.
No. 5. Reputed thieves. }
No. 6. } Vagrants.
No. 7. }
No. 8. Infirmary.

Female Prison.

No. 3. Felons for trial or examination.
No. 4. } Convicted felons.
No. 5. }
No. 6. Convicted misdemeanants.
No. 7. Vagrants.
No. 8. Nursery and Work. Five infant children were here with their mothers.
Male reception ward } On each side of the entrance of the prison.
Female ditto }

Without affecting to set any value upon the principle of classification, it should be remarked that the classification enjoined by the Act is here disregarded in several respects. In the gaol No. 5, felons and misdemeanants have been unintentionally mixed. In the house of correction, felons, misdemeanants, and vagrants, work upon the same tread-mill, to make up the requisite number for the wheel. In the school-room, boys for various kinds of offences receive instruction together. The females from wards Nos. 4, 5, 6, and 7, being felons, misdemeanants, and vagrants, were employed together in one work-room; and in the infirmaries and reception-wards a departure from classification has been unavoidable.

Association of Untried.

The association of untried prisoners in the gaol leads to the usual results, viz. bad language, noise, quarreling, and idle games. The governor admits, without reserve, that in the gaol they are apt to throw about brooms; and that larking, such as whistling, singing, leap-frog, calling-out, &c., are common enough. The conduct of the females is, upon the whole, worse than that of the male prisoners. Women of tolerable decency often complain of the obscenities of the more abandoned. We may mention, as an instance, that, on our going with the governor up to the window of the day-room of the female yard No. 2, one of the women laughed, and made a motion of so indecent a kind, that the governor felt obliged to order her to be locked up.

Silent System.

The Silent System is the rule in the house of correction; that is to say, silence is required to be observed at all times, both by day and night. The day-rooms in this part of the prison are no longer used as such, but the prisoners take their meals under the sheds in the tread-wheel yards. So far as this System aims at preventing all communication between prisoners, it decidedly fails of that result in this house of correction. Although there is a turnkey stationed in each tread-wheel yard, and two monitors or wardsmen selected from the prisoners stand constantly by, the prisoners can and do speak to each other even on the wheel. They cannot resist their curiosity to ask each other for how long they are sentenced? when they are going out? and the like questions. These are answered by laying two or three fingers on the wheel, by turning the hand to express unlockings or days, and then putting out fingers, or by pointing to inscriptions made on the wheel by former prisoners. The wheels are covered with inscriptions thus pricked or cut upon them, as

|---|---|
| J. Bell . . . . | 2 Months. |
| Foley . . . . | 3 M. |
| Denison . . . . | 3 M. |
| Templar . . . | 3 M. |
| Vinycomb . . . | 6 Months. |

And by pointing to one of these a prisoner can inform another of the length of his sentence. They manage also to arrange to meet each other after their discharge, and they know when a prisoner employed in menial services is going out, and ask for his place accordingly. They contrive to meet in the water-closets, to talk in the passages leading to the chapel, and sometimes in the chapel itself. Occasionally, though not often, they speak from cell to cell at night; and when it happens, from the unusual fulness of the prison, that several sleep in one room, they have, of course, an opportunity of unrestricted intercourse. The chaplain informed us that, a few weeks before, E. T., a boy in the vagrant yard in the house of correction, told him that, whilst he was in a sleeping-room with several others, another boy asked him if he would go into the country and pass base coin with him after they got out, for he knew a man who would sell some at the rate of 2*d*. for a shilling; E. T., however, refused. The same boy also told the chaplain that the wardsman proposed to him to go and thieve with him, and asked if he could rob a till? Such instances may not be very common, and we would by no means be understood to believe that prisoners sleeping separately, and at work on the Silent System by day, can have frequent opportunities of corrupting each other; but the statements of prisoners and officers all coincide in the fact that communication constantly prevails, and so far, therefore, the System fails. We beg attention to the subjoined evidence, in proof of the fact. It is sought to enforce the system so rigidly, that a prisoner is not permitted even to look round, or turn his head, whilst on the wheel. But the great number of punishments inflicted proves the difficulty of carrying the system into effect. The number inflicted in the year ending Michaelmas 1836 appears to have been 2,205, (of which 88 were upon the untried,) being in the ratio of 37 per cent. upon the total number in confinement in that year; and a reference to the subjoined return of 774 punishments inflicted in the months of November, December, and January last (vide Appendix C.), will show the very trifling nature of the offences for which prisoners are daily punished by the governor, nearly the whole of them being for talking, laughing, or neglecting work. This System is disliked by prisoners, without doubt; but of what use is such dislike, if the same parties are continually returning to prison again? There are persons who may be said almost to live in this bridewell; their faces are perfectly well known to the officers; and some return even the next day after their discharge. It is quite delusive to suppose that the Silent System is an efficient corrective agent for the repression of crime; to which may be added, that it excludes the probability of moral reformation; and that, by the continual punishments which it requires to be inflicted by the keeper, the notion of an offence against the law is confounded with that of one against the discipline. There is something preposterous in erecting into offences such acts as turning the head, or even speaking to a person placed close to the speaker; and to punish for them is calculated to outrage natural feelings. These considerations would form, we submit, serious objections to the Silent System, if it could be effectually enforced; but where, as in this bridewell, this cannot be effected, it has the further demerit of attempting that which it fails to execute.

A number of male prisoners, who are unable to work at the wheel, or not sentenced to hard labour, are employed in picking oakum and coir, either in the oakum shed, or, for separation, in their sleeping-cells. These, however, form exceptions to the general discipline. Female convicts are also employed in their cells in the day-time; but, at the time of our inspection, the inmates of the house-of-correction wards were together in a work-room, picking oakum. They also manage to exchange words occasionally, although the turnkeys are in the room; and in other respects they have the same opportunities of conversing as the men. The evidence subjoined shows that they are in the habit of communication. At night the women are stated to be much more noisy than the men.

The convicted prisoners are confined to their sleeping-cells for a considerable part of every Sunday.

Separation of Sexes.

The position of the female prison is such as to prevent any communication in general between male and female prisoners. Male prisoners bring coals into the female prison, but are then attended by the female officers. Female prisoners are, however, sometimes employed in cleaning the governor's and magistrates' rooms, from which they can look into the male yards.

Labour.

The two tread-wheels will hold 42 prisoners at a time. The hours of employment, and the amount of labour performed, vary according to the season from five and a half to nine hours, and from 7,392 to 12,096 feet of ascent. The punishment is, therefore, more severe in summer than in winter. In the latter season, as in other prisons, the number of hours spent in bed is much too great. When sentenced to hard labour, prisoners pick 3 lbs. and more of oakum, or 2½ lbs. of coir (the substance on the outside of the cocoa-nut shell), which is found more profitable than oakum, as £6 per ton is obtained for picking coir, and only about £3. 15*s*. per ton for oakum. Prisoners have picked in summer as much as 5½ lbs. of oakum. Those not sentenced to labour are only required to pick small quantities. Females sentenced to hard labour are required to pick 2 lbs., and those not so sentenced 1½ lb. of oakum. The picking of oakum, or coir, is an occupation well adapted to separate confinement, and does not appear to be attended with those prejudicial effects to health which usually result from long periods of tread-wheel labour.

Employment as Wardsmen, &c.

From the Return, Appendix (D), it appears that, out of 236 prisoners in confinement on the 6th of February last, 43, or 18 per cent., were employed as wardsmen, and in menial services about the prison. The opinion of the governor and officers is, that the wardsmen and monitors are not to be depended on; but the great security for their reporting is, that the prisoners are very ready to report each other, and to get the wardsman into disgrace, in order that they may have a chance of obtaining his place. This kind of feeling is certainly not one which it is desirable to engender in prisoners, but it is inseparable from the System. We may here venture to express a doubt whether the system of wardsmen was contemplated by the Gaol Act, for that Act only authorizes the employment of prisoners "in menial services, or for the purpose of instructing others," and it may fairly be questioned whether the employment of a prisoner in duties which are, in fact, those of an officer, is within the meaning, if it be within the letter, of the law. It will also be observed, by the Return referred to, that six female prisoners were employed together in the wash-house, two of whom were felons, two pawners, and two disorderly cases. The felons were, we were informed, chosen for this service because they were strong women, and fit for the occupation, but there is nothing penal in the character of a wash-house, and, consequently, the grand object of imprisonment—the repression of crime—is made subservient to the economy of the prison.

Visits and Letters.

Visitors are received in spaces left for that purpose between the gates of the yards, in the presence of a turnkey. Untried persons are allowed to see visitors daily from twelve till two o'clock; but those in the house of correction are only permitted to see them after the expiration of six months, unless under peculiar circumstances, and always by a magistrate's order. Before this regulation, great abuses prevailed in regard to visiting, which have been considerably checked; but visits, under pretence of relationship, still sometimes occur. The baskets of provisions, &c., brought by visitors, are searched by the officers; but it appears that tobacco is thus introduced by being secreted in provisions in various ways.

Money. The money of prisoners is taken from them on their admittance, and accounted for on their discharge. Those, before trial, who supply themselves, have it given out to them in instalments of 2*s.* at a time. Prisoners, of the vagrant class, frequently bring in as much money as £1 or £2, and one was found with as much as £17 upon him. An exception to the rule in regard to money has been made by the visiting magistrates in favour of a prisoner in the gaol for want of bail (J. D. S.), for sending a threatening letter, who has been allowed to receive presents of sovereigns, and even of £5 and £10 at a time. The same prisoner, J. D. S., is allowed by the magistrates to take in newspapers.

Newspapers. Attempts have been made to wrap up provisions in newspapers, but the officers have prevented the introduction of them into the prison. Books are not used without the chaplain's sanction.

Tobacco. It appears nearly impossible to prevent the introduction of tobacco, although it is not allowed to any class of prisoners except debtors. Prisoners secrete it about all parts of their bodies, so as to evade the search which is made on admission, and visitors bring it secreted in loaves of bread, and all kinds of provisions.

Gaming. There is no reason to believe that any regular gambling prevails. The untried prisoners resort to idle games, such as leap-frog, tossing halfpence, &c., to pass away the time, which are, however, checked by the turnkeys as soon as observed.

Reception Wards. The accommodation in the reception-wards is insufficient. On the male side it consists of 1 room, 17 feet long by 8 feet wide.

1 ditto, 15 feet 5 inches long by 6 feet 7 inches wide.
1 ditto, 11 feet long by 6 feet wide.
2 cells, each 7 feet long by 5 feet wide.

The proper number of bedsteads for these rooms is six in the first, three in each of the next two cells, and one in each small cell; but the number of prisoners arriving in the course of one evening is sometimes as many as 25 or 30, and it is often necessary to place eight beds upon the six bedsteads in the first room, and four beds upon the three bedsteads in each of the other two rooms, and for the rest of the prisoners to sleep on the floor of the itch-room, a contiguous apartment, 23 feet 3 inches long by 15 feet wide. When the prisoners are thus crowded, they often put each other's bedding together; so as, in fact, to sleep in one bed. The reception-rooms are often scenes of disorder, the prisoners coming in drunk, and frequently swearing and using obscene language. The more respectable prisoners desire to sleep separately; but there is not always room for that. Debtors take their chance with the rest; but the debtors are said to be oftener drunk than any others. The evidence of the turnkey of this ward shows the necessity of providing more room in it; and we submit that there ought at least to be an adequate number of separate cells for the reception of prisoners on the first night of their admission. A filthy practice prevails of washing several dirty prisoners in the same bath: this ought to be discontinued; and we think that every prisoner should be bathed without exception, unless in case of sickness.

The accommodations in the female reception-ward are the same as those in the male reception-room, and are quite insufficient, since as many as twenty-six female prisoners have arrived in the course of one evening, when they have been obliged to sleep together in a crowded state, or go into the itch-room. Bad language and noise are common; and the women frequently come in so drunk as to be obliged to be led by men from the gate, to be sick over the beds. The women, although often in the most filthy state, are not regularly bathed. The evidence of the female turnkey shows the necessity of new arrangements in this ward.

3. Religious and other Instruction.

Chaplain. The Rev. G. H. Hine has been chaplain of this prison since its opening. He resides in the immediate neighbourhood. He reads prayers selected from the Liturgy, expounds the scriptures daily, and performs divine service twice on Sundays. The holy Communion is not administered. The chaplain is engaged daily in the prison from half-past nine till about two o'clock, visiting prisoners under punishment and otherwise in separate cells, and such others as he thinks advisable, and instructing the juvenile offenders himself, as well as superintending the schoolmaster. The chaplain is also in the habit of visiting the prisoners' friends with a view to reconciling them to each other, and inducing them to assist the prisoners on their discharge,—a practice which we cannot mention without suggesting that the chaplain deserves approbation for exerting himself thus voluntarily in so Christian a duty. The chaplain keeps a journal, but no character book. He is Sunday evening lecturer at St. Ann's, Soho. The behaviour of the prisoners in chapel is seldom disorderly; but they contrive occasionally to speak to each other, and have been detected in doing so during the responses, the noise of which affords an opportunity for two persons to speak unheard by others. Prisoners under punishment in separate cells do not attend chapel, nor those who are for the first morning in the reception-wards; and those employed in the wash-house are sometimes absent, for which no sufficient reason is assigned. One prisoner in the gaol for want of bail, J. D. S., is not required to attend chapel, the magistrates considering his case a peculiar one; but we cannot see any sufficient reason for such an exception. The prisoners are in the habit of communicating in

Chapel.

Home District.

Metropolitan Gaols.

Westminster Bridewell.

the passages leading to the chapel, although turnkeys are stationed so as to prevent it as much as possible. The keeper, matron, and all the turnkeys that can be spared, attend chapel. The time of morning prayers (half-past nine) seems inconveniently fixed with reference to the vans, which arrive at 10 minutes before 10 o'clock to convey remanded prisoners to the police-offices for examination, when the services of several officers are required. At this time, also, the prisoners, whose terms have expired, are discharged; and the parties who may have arrived the previous night are placed in the ward appropriated to them.

Classes of juvenile offenders assemble daily for about an hour each in the day-room of ward No. 1, in the House of Correction. They are taught reading by one of the turnkeys, assisted by a prisoner (a felon); but there is no systematic instruction of adult prisoners.

The books in use are Bibles, Prayer-Books, &c., and the publications of the Religious Tract Society.

Obstacles to Instruction.

The association of the untried, the continued labour of the convicted under the silent system, and the short terms for which prisoners remain in this bridewell, are all circumstances unfavourable to the operation of instruction. Of 5,866 prisoners in confinement during the year ending Michaelmas 1836, 166 were sentenced for three months and under six months, 23 for six months and under one year, four for one year and under two years, and one for two years and under three years. It could not, therefore, be expected that, even if the chaplain were to devote his whole time to the prison, or if there were several chaplains, any such result as personal reformation could ordinarily take place. The physical irritation of the tread-wheel is peculiarly unfavourable to that frame of mind best suited to receive religious impressions; nor does the silent system allow time enough for receiving instruction of any kind. The chaplain has known cases of very hardened characters who have been quite softened by separate confinement for a few days; and he concurs in the opinion that the labours of the most zealous minister of religion must remain comparatively powerless, so long as prisoners are not confined individually in separate cells. Nor can we entertain any doubt that the great majority of prisoners now working at the silent system would regard separate confinement with much greater dread. The evidence of prisoners generally agrees upon this point.

4. Health.

Surgeon.

The surgeon, who resides in the neighbourhood, attends himself twice a-week, when he goes round and sees every prisoner. His assistant attends every morning, and examines the prisoners before they are passed into their wards. The Gaol Act undoubtedly requires that the surgeon himself should perform this duty. Prisoners under punishment are visited by the surgeon when he goes round the prison. There is no reason to believe the locality of the prison unhealthy; and the circumstance of the terms of imprisonment being for the most part short prevents the ordinary ill effects of tread-wheel labour, combined with low diet, when continued for long periods.

Infirmaries.

Four males and five females were inmates of the infirmaries at one of our visits. The convicted and untried are usually separated in the infirmaries; but no particular means are taken to preserve silence beyond the attendance of turnkeys, and prisoners as nurses and monitors.

Sickness.

In the year ending Michaelmas 1836 the proportion of cases of slight indisposition to the whole number in confinement was 34 per cent., that of infirmary cases 3·42 per cent., and that of deaths ·06 per cent. During the late prevailing influenza the greatest number of infirmary cases, male and female, was 23.

Bathing.

It has been mentioned that all prisoners are not bathed on admission; some are only partially washed. We submit that the filthy state of the generality of prisoners on their admission renders it important that all should be bathed, and that every prisoner should be bathed in clean water.

Diet.

The House of Correction diet is divided into three scales.—The first scale for convicts above 16 years of age, whose periods exceed three months, consisting of 140 oz. of bread, 18 oz. of meat, 3 pints of soup, and 8 pints of gruel per week; the second for convicts above 16, whose periods are three months and less, consisting of 140 oz. of bread, 12 oz. of beef, 4 pints of soup, and 8 pints of gruel per week; and the third for all under 16 years of age, consisting of 112 oz. of bread, 6 oz. of beef, 1 pint of soup, and 8 pints of gruel per week. The cost of the diet, upon a strict individual calculation, is estimated at 4*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.* per head. The untried prisoners, however, supply themselves in addition to the gaol allowance. The diet table is not publicly affixed, except in the kitchen. For the daily dietary, see Appendix G, No. 18.

Prisoners supplying themselves.

The permission to supply themselves is limited to the untried, who are either furnished with eatables by their friends, or purchase from a man who is allowed to go round and sell them. To prevent excess, they only have their money in instalments of 2*s.* each.

Beer, &c.

Beer or wine is not allowed to be used by any class of prisoners except debtors, or by order of the surgeon.

Clothing.

There are two prison-dresses for the convicted, viz., a grey and yellow woollen dress for felons, a blue one for misdemeanants. It is not varied by seasons, except that the prisoners' stockings are disallowed in summer. The prisoners are apt to injure their clothes in order to make pockets, the absence of which prevents them from secreting articles; but such practices are always punished when detected.

Bedding.

The clothing and bedding are both purchased out of the prison. The cost of both together is estimated at 1*s.* 2¼*d.* per head per annum. The bedding is aired, according to the season, and is fumigated after having been used by very dirty prisoners.

Washing.

The prisoners wash in the morning, two at a time, in their respective yards, in the presence of a turnkey, going off the wheel in turns for that purpose. If detected in speaking they are punished. The whole of the prisoners' linen, &c., is washed in the prison by the female prisoners.

Cleanliness.

The prison is frequently whitewashed, and appeared clean at the time of inspection. The rooms and cells are more frequently dry-rubbed than washed, for fear of damp.

5. Prison Punishments.

Punishments.

The great number of punishments inflicted in consequence of the Silent System has been already adverted to. The proportion to the total number in the year ending Michaelmas 1836 was 37 per cent. We refer to the detailed Return of punishments for three months (Appendix C). The punishments are chiefly confinement in dark or solitary cells, stoppage of diet, and extra labour. A minor kind of punishment is also resorted to, by making prisoners stand separately in the yard, whilst the others are sitting at their meals. Fifteen prisoners appear to have been whipped in the last year; 13 in pursuance of the sentences of courts, and two for breach of prison discipline. Twenty-four lashes with the cat-o'-nine-tails is the usual number inflicted, in the presence of the keeper, surgeon, turnkeys, and juvenile prisoners.

6. Officers.

Officers.

A list of the officers, with their respective salaries and emoluments, will be found in the Appendix (G, No. 21). The governor, chief turnkey, storekeeper, matron, and superintendent of washing, reside in the prison. The other turnkeys, male and female, are required to reside in its immediate neighbourhood. The turnkeys perform the duties of night-watchmen by turns, so that there is only one watchman going his rounds at a time, which, in so large a prison, cannot be sufficient to secure silence at night, although it may be for the purpose of protection. We have not discovered any violations of the Gaol Act, so far as regards the duties of the officers; and our impressions of the character, vigilance, and general conduct of the governor, Lieut. Tracey, R.N., are highly favourable.

Books.

The several books and accounts kept in the prison are specified in the subjoined list (Appendix E).

7. Miscellaneous.

Recommittals.

Of the whole number committed to this prison in the year ending at Michaelmas 1836, the proportion ascertained to be recommittals was about 40 per cent., and the real proportion was probably much larger. A great number of offenders are perfectly well known to the officers, and may be said to live in prisons, for they often return the very next day after their discharge. A detachment of the police force visits this prison weekly, and looks at all the prisoners, with a view of recognising any offenders of whom they may be in search, and of pointing out habitual offenders.

Juvenile Offenders.

The proportion of offenders under 17 to the whole number committed in the year ending Michaelmas 1836 was about 8 per cent. Their offences are, for the most part, of a very trifling nature; but, after what has been said on this subject in our First Annual Report, we do not think it necessary to enter into particulars of cases. Boys, before trial, are kept in a separate ward; but the convicted are placed in their proper classes with the men.

Debtors.

There were 337 debtors confined in this prison in the course of the year ending Michaelmas 1836, principally for very small debts, by sentences of the Westminster Court of Requests. There are certain small donations, payable annually, which are supposed to encourage the incarceration of debtors at the particular periods at which they are bestowed; but the donations are so small in amount, that we cannot think they can have any great influence in this respect. We refer to the list of donations (Appendix F). The tally system has, without doubt, a most mischievous influence in filling this gaol, and other prisons, with debtors for trifling sums.

Passes.

It was formerly the practice to grant passes to parishes, with little discrimination, to prisoners on their discharge, for any place to which they stated they were going, paying them mileage according to the distance. The result was a regular system of fraud on the part of prisoners, almost all of whom used to obtain passes for the north, or distant places, and not more than one-fifth of the number granted were ever returned. Forged passes were also very common. Greater caution is now used, and the mileage is only paid as far as the first stage on the road: this checks imposition; and the number now granted is not a sixth of that granted formerly.

Military Prisoners.

The usual allowance of 6*d.* per diem is paid by the War Office. The number of military prisoners in this bridewell is seldom considerable.

Foreigners.

We found two Italian boys and two Lascars in custody for vagrancy, who were scarcely able to speak a word of English. They were employed in picking oakum.

Vans.

The observations made upon the police-vans under the head of Clerkenwell New Prison are also applicable here. It is stated in the subjoined evidence of the turnkey of the reception-ward that he has known as many as 27 or 28 come in one van; so that there was not sitting room, but the prisoners sat on each other's knees. We have ourselves been present on the arrival of the van, when, on alighting, several of the men and women have been in a very indecent state from the want of clothing. That a respectable person, who is unfortunate enough to be committed for want of bail or for debt, should be brought to prison in such a way, amongst prisoners in a filthy state, or drunk—in the dark—men and women all together—is highly improper. There ought to be individual compartments for the separation of each prisoner. There should be a light in the vans by night.

General Observations.

It is greatly to be regretted that the small dimensions of the sleeping cells in this new prison are such as to preclude the possibility of their being applicable to a regular system of separate confinement.

From what has been stated on the subject of the Silent System, as practised in this bridewell, our conviction is, that it fails as an instrument of correction, and is incompatible with the prisoner's reform.

We submit also that the association of the untried in this gaol contaminates and depraves the prisoners, and that the common gaol department of this bridewell calls loudly for amendment.

We beg to suggest the propriety of a survey being made, in order to ascertain to what extent a system of individual separation could be introduced, by altering the present cells and rooms for that purpose.

We refer to the subjoined extracts from the evidence of officers and prisoners taken by us; also to the Return No. 2, and the contents of the several Appendices to this Report, A to G.

Extracts from Evidence taken at Westminster Bridewell.

D. W., a Prisoner.

"I am a prisoner in the convicted felons' yard, No. 4. I am 14 years of age; my father is dead, my mother went to New York before my father died. She used to take my father's clothes. I served with a baker in Brewer's Green, at Pimlico, and have been on the parish. I have no relations that have been kind to me or cared for me. I robbed my master of money out of a box. I have been two months in this prison to-morrow, and was also sentenced to be whipped. I was a fortnight before trial in the gaol No. 4; I had 18 lashes with the cat; the governor, three turnkeys, and the doctor, were present; there were six boys and one man with me in the gaol-yard; we slept in separate cells; they used to talk all day in the day-room; they used to say bad language and to swear. One boy lost his Christmas plum-cake; the wardsman stole it; it was reported to the governor, and the wardsman was removed. The boys' friends used to bring them money and provisions; no one ever brought me anything: they did not mind the wardsmen much. In the yard where I now am we wash in the morning, two at a time, in the washhouse; we go off the wheel in turns to wash. The boys often laugh when at breakfast under the shed by the wheel, but they are reported: the lads sometimes ask each other on the wheel, 'how long have you got?' they can answer by pointing to places on the wheel where 'two months,' 'three months,' and so on, are marked; we are at school an hour a-day; the schoolmaster sometimes goes out: we have dinner at two o'clock in the shed, and then nothing till next morning. For some time after my trial I slept in a room with two others, and afterwards in a separate cell; there is a great sound in the cell: I often hear coughing. This morning a boy named Brown told another boy that he was going out this morning; and he did go out: the other boy told the turnkey. When I go out I shall try to find my uncle at Whitechapel, or else I must go to the parish. I can read a little; I have been taught chiefly here."

J. H., a Prisoner.

"I am yardsman in the convicted felons' yard, No. 4. I have been in prison about three months for stealing a handkerchief, and have been yardsman nearly the whole time. My duty is to keep order and silence, and I do not work at the wheel; wardsmen do not usually work at the wheel. There is scarcely a day but what I report for punishment; sometimes three or four a-day. I report for making signs, or looking about them, or talking on the wheel, or at meals. The governor punishes sometimes by taking away part of their meals, at others by an extra turn of the wheel, and by locking up of a Sunday, except during chapel. What they ask is generally, 'how long have you got?' and, 'when do you go out?' that they may meet each other on their discharge at the gate. There are some in this yard who knew each other before: I cannot always see them communicating; the prisoners have come down and reported others for talking to the turnkey, when I have not seen them. The turnkeys sometimes see them when I do not. They have had gruel for a month past on going to bed, to prevent their drinking cold water on coming off the wheel; they wash by turns as they come off the wheel: the other yardsman stands by when they wash. I think any communication at night is very uncommon; but a month ago a man was singing in his cell for joy the morning he was going out, and the prisoner in the next cell reported him. The prisoners are apt to report each other, for fear they should be blamed themselves. I think the Silent System is much dreaded, but yet they come back. I find that those who come from the gaol are disorderly at first, and have dirty habits. I have been once in prison before in Coldbath-fields."

W. C., a Prisoner.

"I am a prisoner in the reputed thieves' yard, Convict Prison, No. 5, aged 15; my father is not living, my mother is living in Duke's-court, Drury-lane. I have five sisters and two brothers. I was an errand-boy to a doctor. I was committed on suspicion of stealing on the 18th November, for three months; I am going out next week; was six weeks in this prison before, in March last, for vagrancy. I am employed as helper for an hour before breakfast to make up the beds; I wash after breakfast, about 9 o'clock. The boys at breakfast make signs. While I was on the wheel yesterday, a boy, named C——k, said to me, 'Will you go to my mother?' I nodded; I was punished, by being made to stand at dinner-time in the middle of the yard, the other boy the same. I was punished once before for talking, and had only half my loaf. Yesterday morning the clergyman in the chapel asked me when I was going out, and I told him, and C——k heard. The boys on the wheel often say to each other, 'When do you go out?' or, 'How long have you been in?' they answer either in words, or by putting up fingers, or by pointing to the names cut on the wheel, with 'one month,' or 'two months.' I have known boys often talk in the passages to chapel, such as 'This is my last time of chapel;' 'How long have you got?' &c. When I was there the first time a boy named Meadows said to me, during the responses in chapel, 'I shall come and meet you when I go out;' it is not done so much now that the cleaners and yardsmen sit mixed among us. I used to have an extra pint of gruel for cleaning, but in consequence of the boy talking yesterday to me it has been taken away. About five weeks ago I slept in a room with nine others, including the yardsman, on the second floor, for about a fortnight; I have seldom heard talking at night; now I sleep in a separate cell. A boy named J——, three cells off me, lately was singing all night this song—

I.

'I love to roam
'When the dark sea foams;'

when he heard the door creak for the turnkey coming, then he would leave off. I did not hear the yardsman call out, but he sometimes stamped with his foot; the boy was going out next day but one: he was punished. I have been shut up on a Sunday; and once, when so shut up, I heard a boy knocking to another. Four weeks ago a boy on the wheel made a wrong step, and I shoved him; he said, 'b——r your eyes, don't shove me;' and I reported him; he was locked up three days. One morning a piece of tobacco fell out of a man's jacket, but they could not find whose it was. I have learned to read a little since I have been here: I cannot write."

F. C., otherwise W. J., a Prisoner. "I am from reputed thieves' yard, No. 5—am 19 years of age—have been 11 weeks in prison, and yardsman seven weeks. I am sentenced to three months as a reputed thief. My duty is to keep order and silence: I have two pints a-day extra for being yardsman; three pints on soup days; and am excused from the wheel. I have reported close upon 100 times whilst yardsman, for talking or looking round, or going to the water-closet without the ring, so that two meet together there. The day before yesterday a prisoner was putting his foot sideways on the wheel; I took hold of his foot to put it straight; he swore at me, 'G—d d—n your eyes.' They sit an hour at and after dinner; when sometimes they make a motion to those they know by turning the hand, and put the fingers out to express so many lockings up. A month ago M—— B——, a little before he left, pricked his name on the wheel, 'M. B. 3 Months,' and rubbed it over with dirt, he did it on the stage while he was resting; and also in one of the prayer-books he pricked his name and the word 'p—k;' he was reported and punished by being locked up. They are apt to speak, when they sleep together, about going out, telling friends, &c., and what they are in for. I have caught out some making motions in chapel. Prisoners dread the silent system; but they dread solitary confinement, with less food, much more. I only know one instance of a prisoner having tobacco; he was a vagrant. I have known the cook and storekeeper bring in bread and give it to the other prisoners; the storekeeper lost his place. I mean the cook and storekeeper of No. 4, not of our yard."

J. R., a Prisoner. "I am a prisoner in the gaol-yard No. 6. I was committed for bail, as disorderly. I am a fruit-dealer, eight days in prison; I came from Queen-square in the van with 17 others, men and women. I slept first night in Reception Ward with seven others; some convicted felons slept in the same room; four of us slept upon three bedsteads; and there were only three sets of mattresses and blankets; there were only six beds in the room, and eight people; it was like two in a bed; some complained of lying on the edge of the bedstead; there was no wardsman that I know of in the room; next morning I washed my face and neck, but none of us for the gaol are put into the bath like those for the House of Correction. The doctor examined me when I was brought here; we sweep and clean a little, but have no other occupation; we talk quietly. I find myself with meat, &c., besides the gaol allowance; those who have provisions give to the others—but do not sell: no money of any kind is paid; we are all poor. No talking at night. No tobacco is used in our yard all day."

S. S., a Prisoner. "I am a prisoner in No. 7, Bail-yard, for an assault on a policeman. I am a plumber's labourer. I stopped on the convict side three months for two £5 fines, and have been in this yard six months and three weeks, and am likely to stop to make up a twelvemonth here for bail. When I was in the Fine-yard, No. 3, I worked at picking oakum; there were from 14 to 23 in the Fine-yard; I was then yardsman. I often caught them out talking; I suppose I reported above 20 times for talking, whistling, or going two into the water-closet; there was sometimes swearing. I had to shave in the yard and cut hair; then I have had men tell me not to cut too short, and I have had bad language, such as 'you are a b——y fine barber,' 'mind you don't cut my b——y chin off,' &c. They generally sleep separate, but sometimes in a double cell with others; no talking. In this ward I clean, and get two pints of gruel a-day for it. The prisoners make their own beds and sweep out their own room; that is all they do. I allow quiet talking in day-room; I report hallooing, swearing, &c. I have reported to turnkey nine or ten times; but as the turnkey is always by, there is seldom any noise. I have had several, when I have threatened them, say, 'Well, I'll pay you off,' 'I'll find you when you are out,' &c. There is a game with chalk, which they are apt to play in the yard, and I have stopped it. I once found a man with tobacco, it was hid in his stocking. Three men were caught with tobacco before I was yardsman; the prisoners are supplied by friends; little is given to others—none sold. A man named Flint comes round every morning for orders; he gives no tick; he is the only man who comes. When I was in the Reception Ward we put our blankets together, and slept, as it were, in one bed, though there were three bedsteads; we were close together."

E. M., a Female Prisoner. "I am a prisoner in ward No. 32, 17 years of age. I am in for bail till the sessions, with my mother and sister, for noise in the streets. I live in Leg-alley, Long-acre; my mother is a fruit-woman, and I help her; my father is a soldier abroad—13 years in Corfu. I cannot read or write. I used to go occasionally to Lincoln's-inn-fields chapel; I am a Roman Catholic. I was often engaged in selling fruit on Sunday. I have been three weeks and three days in prison: I came in the van with seven women and one man; I was never in prison before, nor my mother or sister. It was dark in the van. I slept on the first night in the slip, or receiving-ward; there were six of us in the room; only five beds. I slept with my mother, my sister with another young woman. Next morning I was washed, not bathed: I have been employed in mending stockings: my sister slept with me in a cell for a few nights, since that I have slept separate. Every day there is bad language in the day-room, such as swearing and nasty talk; it is very disagreeable to me, but I cannot help it. There are women of the town in the day-room; it is as much as the wardswoman can do to keep them quiet, they use such nasty discourse. My mother is bailed out, and has brought us things. I have heard talking at night when they sleep two in a cell; my sister and I would like to be from the other women; most of us are now locked up for making a noise in the day-room, but it was not me. I never saw any man in the prison, except the man who brings coals to the dispensary."

E. B., a Female Prisoner.

"I am wardswoman of No. 2; 40 years of age: was committed for two months hard labour, and twelve months bail for an assault; I have been five months in prison, and two months wardswoman here. I have reported three or four times for noise and other things against the discipline of the prison. I often threaten; obscene language is sometimes used by girls of the town. I have been in prison before at least 20 times, backwards and forwards, for seven years; the greatest punishment is to shut up prisoners separately; they would rather, in general, have work when they are shut up; at present in this ward there are 24 prisoners, and only 17 beds; consequently some sleep two in a bed. Some who are supplied by friends give to the others. When in the house of correction I picked 3½lbs. of oakum a-day; it was hard work. I think it impossible to prevent talking; when I was at Coldbath-fields we used to get a word in the yard at dinner."

C. T., a Female Prisoner.

"I am a prisoner belonging to No. 6, House of Correction, aged 19; sentenced to two months for breaking windows. I have been a prostitute. I pick 2 lbs. of oakum a-day. We find opportunities of speaking, although silence is required; several have attempted to speak to me. A girl, who is now gone, once said to me, 'I should like to get into the Refuge;' I told her 'she could get in;' we were not heard. I slept the first night in the slip; only two besides me. I have been several times here before; I do not mind being in a separate cell, provided I don't lose my victuals. I wish to go to the Magdalen. When I was here before, two months since, I heard one woman call out to another in the sleeping cell; she was locked up, but that does not often happen now."

M. A. S., a Female Prisoner.

"I am in House of Correction, No. 5; aged 25; sentenced for one month as disorderly. I have been here many times before; I have been here a fortnight this time; almost every day some one is punished for speaking; have known one or two punished for having tobacco. I knit a pair of stockings in three days; I have been upon the town; can't read or write. I am employed once a-week to clean the magistrates' room; I have seen the male prisoners on the wheel from a window of that room, but have never spoke to one."

T. C., Turnkey.

"I have been seven months turnkey. I am turnkey of the ward for reputed thieves, No. 5. I have observed prisoners talking on the wheel when the yardsman has not. I go to dinner for an hour; then the other turnkey parades the front of both the yards. Other prisoners are anxious to report the yardsman if he does not do his duty; that is the great check upon them. Prisoners manage to let each other know when they go out; there are marks on the wheel. There have been several instances of prisoners swearing at each other on the wheel, calling each other a b——y b——r, &c., if he shoves them. I have at times found tobacco secreted about prisoners, although they were searched in the Reception Court. I once found out two prisoners talking in chapel during the responses. During the first watch I go round two or three times to the sleeping rooms with list shoes; in the other watches we stay outside: the gates are left open, except one, that the prisoners may not hear us coming. I do not go round while prisoners sleep separately, because we hear as well outside. I have known other turnkeys catch them talking, but I have scarcely ever. The yardsman has several times reported them. What they said, when sleeping in the same cell, was, 'Well, you will call and let my friends know when I am going out.' I think it would be much better if we had the assistance of some others, not prisoners, instead of the yardsmen. The governor comes repeatedly into the yards and cells daily. At this time of the year the separate cells for punishments are much dreaded, especially in cold weather; they do not like being kept alone. I have repeatedly heard them in confinement ask the governor to allow them to go on the wheel. I find them come back repeatedly, although the silent system is dreaded."

W. J., Turnkey.

"I am turnkey of Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5, in the gaol; have been turnkey two years. I am always backwards and forwards during the day: I go for an hour to dinner. When the prisoners first come in they are apt to look about and be noisy; but after a few days they become more circumspect, as we are always by. I have little confidence in yardsmen; the poor men are most to be depended on for yardsmen; but those who have any pals or friends are not to be depended on. The thieves call their friends pals. I have occasionally heard calling and night talking, but not often. Tobacco is sometimes supplied by visitors in bread or other disguise; attempts have been made to wrap provisions in newspapers, but they are always taken away. Mr. Shelly is allowed every description of newspapers; he has had several sums of money sent him; sometimes a sovereign or two, and £5 and £10; he has all along had extra diet. I think it likely that in the Reception Ward, in cold weather, the prisoners put their blankets so as to get in together."

J. M., Turnkey.

"I have been three years turnkey, two years turnkey of the male reception-ward; there is one cell with six bedsteads, two cells with three each, and two with one each, and eight in the itch-room. I have had as many as 30 sleeping; I have had 25 lately; the usual number is about a dozen. I have had occasion to put eight beds into the room with six bedsteads, and four into the room with three bedsteads: it happens not uncommonly; we are often so full that we lay them on the floor in the itch-room. I often have men come in worse for liquor; then they are very apt to be noisy; I repeatedly call 'Silence.' I don't sleep in the reception-ward, but I watch with the other turnkeys in turn. Prisoners sometimes come in so drunk they can hardly stand. Debtors are worse than any for drinking; if debtors come early they are put in single cells; if not, they must go with the others. I have heard respectable people wish to sleep separate, but I can't always accommodate them. I have overheard swearing and obscene language in the bed-rooms. I have known 27 or 28 come in the van; there is not sitting room then, so they sit in each others' laps. Some come in horridly lousy: we fumigate the bedding when necessary. I have no doubt that they sometimes put their blankets together, and get together in bed: the next day the dirty prisoners are put into the bath, and the others washed; some one goes into the bath every morning, about four go into the same water one after another; they generally go two into the bath together, to wash each others' backs. I have never had any objection made to going into the same water; there is plenty of water. The surgeon's assistant examines them personally in the morning; about 11 o'clock they are passed into the wards. They bring in tobacco concealed in all parts of their body, particularly vagrants. I have known vagrants frequently have as much as £1 or £2, and once found a man with £17 upon him: they generally secrete it as well as tobacco: I have known instances of tobacco secreted about the body, which was not found until after the prisoners were placed in their wards. In the gaol the money is taken away, and they have it out 2*s*. at a time, and they buy chiefly of a man that is allowed to come in. The visitors bring in tobacco in bread, and fifty other ways. The first morning they don't go to chapel, unless it happens to be Sunday."

J. C., Turnkey. "I have been two years turnkey in the convicted felons' yard, No. 4: I am the whole day in the yard, except an hour for dinner, and am occasionally obliged to leave it to look after the cleaners, &c. I often catch them talking or looking off, with my eye, when the yardsman does not see. I never look over anything. When they talk, it is generally to ask when the others are going out; and they answer by putting up two or three fingers. The wheel is cut in several places with the names of former prisoners, and with words such as 'two months' or 'three months,' and by pointing to that they can answer; in order to tell how many days they have to stop they will put up one or two fingers, and turn their hands to express lockings. They meet each other on their discharge. I have known former prisoners frequently come to meet others; there are several in this yard who knew each other before: they sometimes make motions at meals. I have caught the prisoners making motions during washing; they have been caught talking in the passages to the chapel. I remember an instance of a prisoner talking during the responses at chapel, and another prisoner informed of it. The turnkey on the watch goes round in list shoes when there are prisoners sleeping in the same room, but not always to the separate cells. I have known several instances of prisoners in separate cells shouting and asking questions to each other; other prisoners have informed of them; I have heard them in going my rounds, but not lately. The wardsman could not be trusted if it were not for other prisoners, who would report for the sake of getting the wardsman's place; they report also to get into favour. The Silent System is dreaded, but yet they come back. Prisoners who have been three months on the wheel come back. Prisoners dread being shut up in a solitary cell, without work, more than anything. They will fall on their knees to the governor, to beg him to let them go on the wheel; work is never allowed to those under punishment. On this wheel there are now felons, misdemeanants, and vagrants, but there is no difference in character. I think classification is of no use at all."

J. H., a Female Turnkey. "I have been seven months turnkey of No. 4 and 5, House of Correction—'Felons and Disorderlies.' I do not sleep in the prison. I am in and about the work-room all day, except when I am at dinner. I am on duty every other night to take in prisoners. I always report for talking and laughing, or making signs. When they are either shut up in a separate cell, or kept from chapel and exercise (which is an hour a-day in single file in fine weather), we report several every day. They want to know how long each other has got to stop; they hold up two or three fingers to express the number of days they have to stay, and especially going to chapel, when waiting or meeting in the passages, or at exercise. They always sleep separate. We generally go round inside the yard, and listen at windows at night, and frequently hear talking, particularly in summer. I have heard a woman tell another she had three weeks to stop. They sometimes sing. I cannot trust the wardswoman. Female prisoners will not often report each other. If the reception-ward is very full, some sleep in the itch-ward. The women dread separation more than the Silent System."

S. C., a Female Turnkey. "I have been two years and a half turnkey, and seven months of that time in the reception-ward. I reside in the prison. There is one room with four bedsteads, two with two bedsteads, and two single cells; and nine bedsteads in the itch-ward. The most I have had is 26; upon an average about a dozen. We are sometimes obliged to put two together, to prevent going into the itch-ward. Many of the dirty women bring vermin into the beds; we disinfect the bedding in the oven next day. I have very often known women come in drunk, sometimes so tipsy as to be obliged to be led from the gate by men; I have known women sick over the beds from drunkenness. I always prevent noise as much as possible, but have no doubt there is bad language in the sleeping rooms. There is a wardswoman (a disorderly) sleeping either in the itch-ward or in a separate cell. I do the best to keep the more respectable separate. Two of the male prisoners bring in coals once a-week; I stand to receive them. We give the prisoners the option of being washed, or going to the bath, except when very dirty; then we make them go into the bath. The prisoners do not attend chapel the first morning, unless it is Sunday. About 11 o'clock they are passed into their wards. The surgeon's assistant examines them at 8 A. M."

Aug. Fred. Tracey, Keeper. "I have been keeper of this prison since it was first occupied in June 1834. I am a lieutenant in the Royal Navy. Although we have the silent system, I find it impossible to prevent all communication. Talking on the wheel is common; when charged with it the prisoners often say 'I am talking to myself;' although communication takes place, it is not of that mischievous tendency as under a system of association. There is great curiosity among thieves. 'How long have you got?' is a common question on the wheel. Another will lay two fingers on the wheel, as an answer, meaning two months. I have myself heard calling out at night: it is very common among the females, and occasionally in the male House of Correction. The females will not tell of each other, but the male wardsman will, for fear of being displaced; not that I have any confidence in wardsmen: the prisoners are very ready to report each other; I encourage them to do so, which, I admit, may be called espionage. We find that the oldest thief is the best monitor. I think one watchman at night sufficient for protection, but not for silence. I remember an instance of prisoners talking during the responses at chapel; one said to another 'Tell my sister to come to the gate the morning I go out;' and the sister came accordingly. It takes 20 minutes to get the prisoners into chapel. I know they communicate whilst going into chapel, for I have been asked by prisoners to be employed in the wash-house, saying, 'There is a vacancy, for so and so is going out.' I have asked how they knew that, and they confessed they were told so on the staircase going to chapel. There was an instance six months since of a prisoner, who was monitor in the reputed thieves' yard, writing a letter to his wife to be at Elliot's brewery at a certain time: he wrote upon the back of one of the tracts, and gave the letter to a boy who he knew was going out; it was found on the boy; the prisoner could have seen Elliot's brewery from the step of the bridge going into chapel, and therefore appointed his wife to be there. As to the gaol, I punish offences there by stopping the calls. In the gaol they are apt to throw about brooms; larking, such as whistling, singing, leap-frog, calling out, &c., are common enough. Some call out, 'the law does not compel silence here.' I think the system of bail horrible, it would be far better to send them for seven days to the House of Correction. In the infirmary it is impossible to prevent communication. D., who has been in every prison in London, a well-known thief, for assaulting a police-officer, is an inmate of the infirmary; he has been in the Penitentiary: about a month since, when he was in the infirmary, he was very abusive to me and the officers, but we cannot punish in the infirmary, and it is not the practice to punish when they get well; this D. has been very troublesome, and has asked to see the regulations of the prison. On Sundays we have chapel from 10 to half-past 11; then I muster the prisoners, which lasts till 1; dinner occupies till 2; the prisoners then exercise in file about 10 minutes; are then at chapel from half-past 2 till half-past 3; then, generally, bad characters are locked up for separation till 5 o'clock. Jews have occasionally objected to go to chapel. Catholics sometimes have their own priests. S. S., in the gaol, is a very bad fellow; his mother was caught pitching apples over into his yard; he was sentenced first to the House of Correction, and then to the gaol, which I think absurd. The conduct of J. D. S., who is confined separately in ward, No. 2, in the gaol, has been very bad; he is here for want of bail, himself in £200, and two sureties in £100 each, for sending a threatening letter; ordinarily he would be in No. 7; he refuses to go to chapel, and has never been punished for it as other prisoners would be, because his case is considered a peculiar one; he made application for various things to the visiting justices in December last, who informed him that his request to have his letters unopened would not be granted, that visitors might be allowed to see him at proper times, that he could not have wine or beer unless by order of the surgeon, that he might have a daily paper if he paid for it, and that there was no objection to another prisoner performing menial offices for him, if any prisoner consented, but that the justices had no power to compel it. This man has received money at various times; he has had a sovereign or two from Mr. G.; on the 15th February 1836 he wrote a very extraordinary letter to Lord S., but which nevertheless procured him £10; some solicitor gave him £5 on signing a paper five or six weeks since. The woman B. is a very bad character, she has been in a great many prisons; when she was here last I kept her in a separate cell, and employed her in oakum-picking; she said in going away, 'Governor, rather than come to your b——y prison again, I will commit a felony and go to Newgate.' She put her hand through a pane of glass, in a shop in the City, and stole a fowl; but after her trial she was sent to Coldbath-fields for 12 months; she is now here for want of bail. I think if the women's hair were to be cut off they would dread it as a punishment very much. A detachment of the police comes every week, and goes round to the various wards to look at the prisoners, to see if they know any of them. I have known offers of money being made by attorneys to the keeper of the gate; it has been attempted within a year by an attorney who is much employed by the prisoners; he offered £1. 1*s.* to T. B., the keeper of the gate, saying it was usual at Christmas time. It was refused; upon which the attorney said 'I am surprised the governor should object, for our firm gives away 30*l.* or 40*l.* a-year at different prisons and police-offices.' I enter my orders to the turnkeys, from time to time, in a book. We have no rules for the government of the prison beyond those contained in the paper marked A., which is affixed about the prison."

APPENDIX (A).

Rules relating to the Conduct and Treatment of the Prisoners.

I. All prisoners to pay strict obedience to the turnkeys, who are to enforce silence and good order.

II. Every prisoner sentenced to hard labour shall, unless prevented by sickness, be employed so many hours in every day, not exceeding 10, exclusive of the time allowed for meals, as shall be directed by the rules and regulations to be made under this Act, except on Sundays, Christmas-day, and Good Friday, and on any days appointed by public authority for fasting and thanksgiving.

III. Every prisoner not sentenced to hard labour, but ordered by the visiting Justices to be put to some work or labour not severe, to pick such quantity of oakum per day, or perform such other work, as the visiting Justices shall from time to time direct, unless they pay for their own maintenance.

IV. Prisoners under charge or conviction of any crime shall attend Divine service on Sundays, and on other days when such service is performed, unless prevented by illness or other reasonable cause, to be allowed by the governor, unless their attendance shall be dispensed with by one of the visiting Justices.

V. No prisoner shall be put in irons by the governor of any prison, except in case of urgent and absolute necessity, and the particulars of every such case shall be forthwith entered in the governor's journal, and notice forthwith given thereof to one of the Visiting Justices, and the governor shall not continue the use of irons on any prisoner longer than four days without an order in writing from a visiting Justice specifying the cause thereof.

VI. Every prisoner maintained at the expense of the county shall be allowed a sufficient quantity of plain and wholesome food, to be regulated by the Justices, regard being had (so far as may relate to convicted prisoners) to the nature of the labour required from or performed by such prisoners, so that the allowance of food may be duly apportioned thereto. Prisoners of every description, who are not able to work; or, being able, cannot procure employment sufficient to sustain themselves by their industry, or who may not be otherwise provided for, shall have such allowance of food as the said Justices shall from time to time think necessary for the support of health. Prisoners under the care of the surgeon shall be allowed such diet as he may direct; care shall be taken that all provisions supplied to the prisoners be of proper quality and weight. Scales and legal weights and measures shall be provided, open to the use of any prisoners, under such restrictions as shall be made by the regulations of each prison.

VII. No prisoner who is confined under sentence of any court, nor any prisoners confined in pursuance of any conviction before a Justice, shall receive any food, clothing, or necessaries, other than the gaol allowance, except under such regulations and restrictions as to the Justices in general or quarter sessions assembled may appear expedient with reference to the several classes of prisoners, or under special circumstances, to be judged of by one or more of the visiting Justices.

VIII. The surgeon shall examine every prisoner who shall be brought into the prison before he or she shall be passed into the proper ward. And no prisoner shall be discharged from prison if labouring under any acute or dangerous distemper, nor until, in the opinion of the surgeon, such discharge is safe, unless such prisoner shall require to be discharged. The wearing apparel of every prisoner shall be fumigated and purified if requisite, after which the same shall be returned to him or her, or in case of the insufficiency of such clothing, then other sufficient clothing shall be furnished according to the rules and regulations of the prison; but no prisoner before trial shall be compelled to wear a prison dress, unless his or her own clothes be deemed insufficient, or improper, or necessary to be preserved for the purpose of justice; and no prisoner who has not been convicted of felony shall be liable to be clothed in a party-coloured dress; but if it be deemed expedient to have a prison dress for prisoners not convicted of felony, the same shall be plain.

IX. Every prisoner shall be provided with suitable bedding, and every male prisoner with a separate bed, hammock, or cot, either in a separate cell, or in a cell with not less than two other male prisoners.

X. All prisoners shall be allowed as much air and exercise as may be deemed proper for the preservation of their health.

XI. No gaming shall be permitted in any prison, and the governor shall seize and destroy all dice, cards, and other instruments of gaming.

XII. No money under the name of "garnish" shall be taken from any prisoner on his or her entrance into the prison, under any pretence whatever.

XIII. Convenient places for the prisoners to wash themselves shall be provided, with an adequate allowance of soap, towels, and combs.

XIV. No money or other articles shall be taken from any prisoners by way of ward-fee, garnish, or under any other name or pretence whatever, while in the prison; nor can any prisoner receive or send letters, or any article whatever, without the full knowledge, inspection, and sanction of the governor.

XV. Prisoners shall not retain money in their possession; neither shall they gamble for, buy, sell, barter, exchange, injure, or destroy any part of their bedding, clothing, or provisions.

XVI. Prisoners shall not use blasphemous or obscene language, but shall be quiet, orderly, and obedient.

APPENDIX (C).

A RETURN of Punishments for Offences within the Prison during the Months of November and December 1836, and January 1837.

No punishments have been ordered by the Visiting Justices during the above period.

Forty Common Gaol prisoners have been punished in that period for various offences, by being continued separate for a given number of days, the visits of friends interdicted, and a portion of the county allowance of bread stopped.

NEW PRISON, CLERKENWELL.

New Prison, Clerkenwell.

1. Site, Construction, &c.

Description.

THIS is the general receiving-prison of the county of Middlesex, for offenders committed, either for examination before the police magistrates, for trial at the sessions, for want of bail, and occasionally on summary conviction. The Prison was first established by patent, granted to the liberty of Clerkenwell, in the reign of King James I.; but the greater part of the present building is of the date of 1816, when the prison was altered and enlarged at an expense, as it is said, of upwards of £40,000. Its central position in the metropolis, and its contiguity to the Sessions-House, render the site a convenient one, but it is surrounded by other buildings, and the windows of the houses on two sides overlook the yards of the prison. There has not been any attempt to escape during the last eight years. It appears to be in a fair state of repair: the prisoners were employed last year in repairing, painting, and pointing the wall, to an extent which saved £150 to the county. Its construction does not admit of inspection, except that the windows of the keeper's house and office overlook the adjoining yards, and there are apertures in the doors of the yards, day-rooms, and sleeping-rooms, through which they may be partially inspected. The area of the prison is sunk four feet below the level of the street. There is a deficiency of light in most of the rooms, the windows of which are covered with Louvre shutters. There have been complaints of damp in the bed-rooms and bedding during the past winter. The ventilation is indifferent. The locality is not considered unhealthy, except in so far as the salubrity of the air may be affected by the smoke of the distilleries, breweries, and other buildings, which are crowded round it.

Yards.
Sleeping Rooms.

The prison is divided into 12 yards, including the two infirmaries. There are nine day-rooms and 15 sleeping-rooms, fitted with barrack bedsteads, which, with the two infirmaries and 12 single cells, would enable about 350 to sleep, as the greatest number at one time in the prison, allowing 2½ feet of barrack bedstead to each prisoner. This number appears to have been nearly reached at one time in the last year, when there were 219 males, and 120 females in custody. The size of the sleeping-rooms, and the number sleeping in each, will be found stated in the annexed account, taken whilst going through the prison on the first day of our inspection. (See Account, Appendix C.)

Number of Prisoners.

We thus have as many as 15 males and 17 females, respectively, sleeping in one apartment. It sometimes, however, happens, that 25, 30, and even more sleep together in one room. The number of prisoners varies considerably between the gaol deliveries; at times, it does not exceed 100; at one time, in the year 1835, it reached 296; and once, in the year 1836, it was, as already stated, 339. Taking the periods immediately preceding the February sessions for the last three years, the numbers were,

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 3d February | 1835 | . . . . | 180 |
| 9th do. | 1836 | . . . . | 184 |
| 1st do. | 1837 | . . . . | 196 |

Supposing, however, the average not to exceed 160, it must be remembered that from 5,000 to 6,000 persons inhabit this prison in the course of the year, the number committed having been—

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Year ending Michaelmas | 1835 | . . . | 5,685 |
| do. do. | 1836 | . . . | 5,922; |

and, although prisoners remain here for very short periods, their treatment is a matter of concern to a very large portion of the community. In the following statement, it is proposed to notice the many defects of the prison under the respective heads in which they occur, and, finally, to consider whether any, and what, remedy is applicable to a system which, even if it were not erroneous in principle, would still be highly mischievous in practice.

2. Discipline, Management, &c.

Male Reception Yard.

On the arrival of a male prisoner from the police-office, he is placed in the reception-yard, No. 12, where he sleeps the first night, and is usually removed about the middle of the next day to the yard to which he may belong, after having been washed or bathed, and inspected by the surgeon. We found ten men in this yard: viz., five on charge of felony for examination; one misdemeanant for uttering base coin; two for bail, one of them as disorderly, and one for an assault; and two wardsmen, both for bail, on a charge of menacing. No classification is here attempted, the new-comers being placed together indiscriminately both by day and by night. Thirteen had slept in this ward the previous night, seven in one room, and six in another. Prisoners come in frequently in the most filthy condition, and covered with vermin: they are sometimes quite drunk, and generally in a disorderly and irritated state. They are sometimes brought in so late as eleven o'clock at night. They are allowed to talk in the bed-rooms, and the language is often very disgusting and indecent. The beds are dirty, and often full of vermin from the last occupant, so that prisoners who arrive in a cleanly state find themselves covered with vermin the next morning. Pains are taken to purify the bedding, but it seems impracticable to keep it clean. Prisoners sometimes steal from each other in the bed-rooms, although lights are kept in them during the night. In the morning the prisoners are bathed, or washed: but the bathing does not appear to be performed with regularity; for it is stated that prisoners sometimes pay money to the wardsman to avoid being bathed; which seems the more probable, since it is the practice to bathe several individuals one after another in the same dirty water, so that a decent man is likely to be put into a bath containing filth and vermin. The wardsman makes and sells coffee to the prisoners for their breakfast, at the price of 2*d*. per pint. Although the period of confinement in the reception-yard does not usually exceed 24 hours, it is uniformly complained of by persons of decent character, and it is assuredly an enormous evil, that a man in the most respectable station in society, who may not be able to find bail at the moment, is liable to be thrust for any period, however short, into such society as this. Respectable persons, who have accidentally been involved in charges of a light nature, have been placed in this ward by the side of felons and the filthiest vagrants: nor can any man, in whatever rank in society, be secure, that it may not be his lot, for want of immediate bail, to pass a night in the midst of pickpockets and drunkards in this reception-ward.

Female Reception Yards.

Female prisoners, on their admittance, which is often very late at night, are placed in the rooms of the yards No. 1 and 2, which are otherwise chiefly appropriated to females on charge of felony, but any regular classification is thus completely destroyed. In the yards No. 1 and 2 (which communicate, so as to form one) we found the following assemblage: six women charged with felonies, for examination; two misdemeanants, utterers of counterfeit coin; and four for want of bail for assaults, &c., three of whom were employed as wardswomen and helpers. Seventeen had slept in this ward the previous night, twelve in the larger, and five in the smaller room. Women, sometimes, are brought in so drunk as to be sick over the bedsteads: they are generally excited on first coming in; and some use the most disgusting language. The prisoners thus arriving at night are at once placed in the room where other women are sleeping, who, from having been longer in the prison, have acquired somewhat more orderly habits; but the language of the generality of prisoners at night is much complained of by the more decent. The female prisoners, although many of them are in a very filthy state, are not bathed on admittance, the bath not having been used for a considerable time. We found two very decent young women in the infirmary, who had been just removed there from No. 1 and 2, where they had passed several days. They were sisters; one, the wife of a coal-merchant, and the other had been in service as a housemaid, and was on a visit to her sister, when they were committed to this prison on charge of having stolen goods on the premises. Both were in tears, and appeared to feel deeply their situation, protesting their innocence. They complained of having been placed with "shocking characters," whose conduct and language were highly offensive to them. Not long ago, there were two respectable young women confined in this ward on a charge of stealing two bottles of wine, who made the same complaint, and who were afterwards discharged, the prosecution having been abandoned. Can there be many circumstances more painful to contemplate than that of a well-behaved young woman, suffering imprisonment in a place like this, surrounded day and night by some of the most profligate and abandoned of her sex?

Classification.

The classification required by the Gaol Act we found violated, not only in the male reception-yard, and the female yards No. 1 and 2, but in the boys' yard, No. 9, where there were four on charge of felony, for examination, one felon committed for trial, and five misdemeanants for want of bail for assaults; and especially in the infirmaries, both male and female.

Infirmaries.

The infirmaries are used not merely for the sick, but as places of separation for such prisoners as the keeper, in his discretion, thinks it desirable to keep apart from the miscellaneous assemblage of other classes. In the male infirmary, we found the following eight prisoners associating together: one, sick, for examination, on charge of felony; one, deserter, sick; one, for want of bail, sick; one, deranged in his mind; one, on charge of stabbing, with intent to murder, placed here for separation; one, a foreigner, for want of bail for menacing, also here for separation; and two, for want of bail, for menacing, employed as wardsmen and helpers. John Pegsworth, since executed at the Old Bailey, for murder, was confined for some time in this infirmary for separation, and had been removed to Newgate a few days before our visit. In the female infirmary, we found on the first day of inspection nine prisoners: viz., three sick, two of whom were on charge of felony, and one (a common utterer) of misdemeanour; two, for separation, as King's evidence; two girls, aged 14 and 15, on charge of felony, for separation and instruction; and two, for want of bail, as disorderly, and for menacing, employed as nurse and helper. In these infirmaries there is no restraint upon conversation, but every opportunity for indiscriminate intercourse. In placing certain prisoners in this way among the sick, in violation of the existing law, the keeper is, without doubt, actuated by humane motives; but the practice of thus abusing the infirmaries, is, we submit, quite contrary to all proper discipline, and inconsistent with the care which ought to be taken of the sick. A decent prisoner, who may be taken ill whilst detained here a few days for want of sureties, is thus liable to be placed in contact with a murderer! On the other hand, it is obvious, that the object of separation cannot possibly be attained in these infirmaries. Prisoners of the worst character, and charged with the worst crimes, are, of course, often infirmary patients, and have there the fullest opportunities of corrupting others. What separation, in truth, is that where penitential reflections are liable to be continually interrupted by the ravings of a lunatic and the oaths of a blasphemer?

Association.

In the several wards in which the classification of the Act is observed, the unrestricted association of the prisoners, by night and by day, is a great and crying evil. The technical rule of classification is constantly throwing prisoners of previously respectable character, who are committed for the first time, for want of sureties, or for trifling offences, into the society of hardened offenders who have been over and over again the inmates of prisons. We found in the bail-yard and misdemeanor-yard prisoners who had previously been convicted of felony, whilst there were several in the felons' yard who had never been known before to have violated the law, and whose conduct, and the circumstances attending the charges on which they were committed, gave by no means an unfavourable impression of their character. As a specimen of the absurdity of technical classification, the following were among those associating in the felons' yard:—

D. D., stealing 10 lbs. of potatoes, value 10*d.*
W. M., stealing a drinking-glass, value 6*d.*

New Prison, Clerkenwell.

C. B., stealing and leading away a horse.
R. B., charged with the wilful murder of Ann, his wife.

Such a mingling of characters as this, is, of itself, a sufficient outrage upon morality. But the evil becomes the more glaring when it is a matter of certainty that bad language, obscenity, swearing, quarrelling, fighting, and stealing, prevail to a considerable extent, both by day and by night. Instances are proved by the annexed evidence of prisoners, and the fact is admitted by the keeper and officers, who, of course, cannot prevent what they do not see. The turnkeys do not remain in the wards, but walk up and down the central passage, from whence they can look into one yard at a time, but cannot see the prisoners in the day-rooms; so that the preservation of order is left entirely to the wardsmen, who are never to be depended on,—who very rarely report,—and who are occasionally threatened, and even assaulted, by the other prisoners. It is possible that, by the constant presence of a turnkey in each yard, silence and order might be more effectually enforced by day; but then there would remain the difficulty of preventing disorders by night, for which purpose a turnkey would be required to remain all night in each sleeping-room. The language by night is described by decent prisoners as so disgusting that they complain of it in no measured terms. Prisoners sometimes have been pulled out of bed by others, and an instance is mentioned by a female turnkey, in which a young woman was afflicted with fits, in consequence of this treatment. The manner in which the male prisoners sleep along the barrack-bedstead, and are sometimes crowded together when the rooms are full, without any kind of separation, is highly indecent, and might, in some degree, have been remedied, by fitting the rooms with distinct sleeping-berths. The same remark applies also to the female sleeping-room. But no expedient of this description would destroy the grand evil of the association of the better prisoners with the worse; nor, we submit, can any schemes of improvement be regarded as valuable, unless they comprise the means of entirely stopping that association, both by day and by night,—an object only to be effected by the system of individual separation.

Silence.

A printed order is referred to in the extract from the evidence of the keeper, directing the observance of silence. (See Appendix A.) From what has been already stated, it follows, that this order is not, in fact, enforced. Conversation was going on in every day-room which we entered; and, in the course of the last three months, no punishment for mere breach of silence has been enforced. See Return of Punishments, Appendix F.

Separation of Sexes.

The female yard, No. 3, adjoins the male yard, No. 4, and the two female yards are only separated by the turnkeys' passage from the opposite male yards. This is a serious defect in the construction of the prison; and has not, unfrequently, led to improper communications. Indecent notes, attached to coals and stones, are thrown over from yard to yard. A man from the yard No. 4 has been known to mount the wall between that yard and No. 3, and a woman has been detected climbing up the same wall. (See the statement of Mrs. H., female turnkey.)

Employment.

There is no regular employment, and, as few prisoners read, the majority of them spend the day in perfect idleness. Twenty-one male prisoners were however employed in menial offices, viz., seven as wardsmen, and the rest in various services about the prison. Eleven women were also employed, six as wardswomen, and the others in domestic offices. The annexed Return (Appendix E.) describes the respective employments, and the extra allowances given.

The fifth Regulation of the Gaol Act, 4 Geo. 4, seems to have contemplated the employment of untried prisoners, although the 17th section of the Act 5 Geo. cap. 85, leaves it optional to the prisoner. Under a system of association, many would, in all probability, be induced by idleness to refuse to perform any work, and from the constant change of inmates it would be difficult to carry on work with regularity. But, in a separate cell, any light employment would be gladly received, with scarcely an exception: indeed, work forms almost a necessary part of a system of separation.

Wardsmen.

The wardsmen, here, as in other prisons, appear to be of but little service in keeping order or preventing misconduct. They do not prevent one prisoner from being ill-used by another; they sometimes take part in bad language, and are now and then themselves insulted, and even assaulted, by others. They make a profit by selling coffee, and paper, and by cooking for prisoners,—a practice, if not illegal, highly improper. It is stated also, that the wardsmen of the reception-ward have been in the habit of receiving small sums, as bribes, not to bathe prisoners; and, although the wardswomen denied it, the circumstances are such as to corroborate the evidence of the thing having been done. The employment of wardsmen seems an unavoidable concomitant of the system of association, unless a turnkey were to be provided for every day-room and sleeping-room, the expense of which would render it unlikely to be readily adopted.

Visits and Letters.

Visitors are admitted daily between 12 and 1 o'clock to see the prisoners, with little restriction, except under special circumstances. We saw a large concourse of people assembled in the turnkeys' passage for this purpose. The prisoner talks to them, either in the gateway of the yard, in presence of the turnkey, or sometimes the prisoner is allowed to talk aside with his visitor in the passage. The keeper's rules (annexed to his Evidence, Appendix B.) indicate an anxiety to keep away improper characters; but there can be no doubt that many such constantly gain admission. The professed thieves thus keep up a communication with their "pals," or associates, who bring them not only provisions and money, but very often tobacco, contrary to the rules. On one of the days of our inspection, a prostitute, in a state of intoxication, gained admission to a prisoner in yard No. 10, under pretence of being his wife; and pretended relationship is probably very common. There is no restriction upon correspondence by letter, except on particular occasions. Attorneys are allowed to speak with their clients in the passage, and occasionally in the office.

Money.

Prisoners are allowed to have money in their possession without restriction, unless they think proper to deposit it with the keeper.

I.

The keeper's orders seem quite ineffectual in preventing the introduction of tobacco. Such is the attachment to tobacco, that the prisoners secrete it about their persons in ways that evade the search which is made on their admittance. A man was lately searched without any tobacco being found upon him, but, being afterwards charged with it by the turnkey, he pulled some tobacco out of his trowsers, and confessed that he had tied it between his thighs. It is brought by visitors, concealed in eatables for prisoners, and has been detected in a loaf of bread, in butter, in moist sugar, and in a man's wig.

Newspapers and Books.

It does not appear that newspapers are introduced, or books other than those authorized by the chaplain.

Gaming.

We do not find that any gambling with cards or dice prevails; but the prisoners amuse themselves with such games as playing with bits of wood like dominoes, or bits of leather, chalking the table, and tossing halfpence.

3. Religious and other Instruction.

Chaplain.

The chaplain (Rev. David Ruell) has had the exclusive care of this prison for about 12 years, having previously held the chaplaincy of Coldbath-fields, together with this prison. He resides at Pentonville. Divine service is performed twice on Sundays, with two sermons. Prayers selected from the Liturgy are read daily, and the Scriptures expounded. The Communion is not administered. The chaplain is also Sunday-morning preacher at Pentonville. He is generally engaged in the prison about two hours a-day, visits prisoners in separate confinement, and converses separately with such others as he thinks may be benefited by his advice. He keeps a journal; but no character book.

Chapel.

The conduct of the prisoners in chapel is, upon the whole, orderly; but they can communicate without difficulty, even with those in different classes. The women and boys sit in the gallery. The chapel is not well adapted for seeing the whole of the prisoners. The keeper generally, though not always, attends, and the majority of the turnkeys. The wardsmen only attend by turns on alternate days,—a practice exceedingly irregular, as no prisoner ought to be employed for the convenience of the prison, so as to interfere with his religious duties.

Schoolmaster.

A schoolmaster, who is one of the turnkeys, is appointed for the especial care of the boys, and remains in their yard the greater part of the day, instructing them from 8 to 12 in the morning, and also for several hours in the afternoon. The Church Catechism, Scripture History, and spelling-cards are used in the school. A class of adults is also formed, from such prisoners as are willing to be instructed. We found it to consist of one from the reception-yard, one from the felons', one from the misdemeanants' yard, and one from the infirmary. The legal classification is thus broken; but, considering the absence of all employment, we should say, with sufficient reason. The female prisoners do not receive any instruction.

Effect of Instruction.

It cannot be supposed that, upon so transitory a population as that of this prison, the effect of any instruction, however excellent, could be sensibly felt. The majority of prisoners do not remain here a fortnight, and the chaplain candidly admits that any advantage arising from his admonitions is confined to a comparatively few cases. The system of association tends completely to counteract the exertions of the most zealous chaplain, and to discourage his labours. The chaplain has sometimes to encounter even insults in the discharge of his duty: the following entry in his journal is an instance:—"10th January 1837. In conversation with J. J. he conducted himself with so much insolence, that it became necessary to lock him up."

If a system of individual separation were adopted, and the chaplain were required to give (what appears to us to be quite indispensable) the whole of his time, instead of two hours daily, to the service of the prison, the influence of religion upon the prisoners might be hoped to be rendered as great as their short periods of confinement would admit of.

Surgeon.

The surgeon, who is the same as at the House of Correction, Coldbath-fields, attends daily, and looks at the prisoners in the male reception-yard before they are passed into their proper wards; but his examination does not seem to be always a very minute one, as several prisoners have stated, that he contents himself with inquiring whether anything is the matter with them. The female prisoners, on their admission, are taken at once into the wards, Nos. 1 and 2, among the other prisoners, without examination until afterwards. The surgeon does not visit prisoners under punishment, unless his attention is directed to them.

Sickness.

No disease has appeared which is attributable to local or other causes connected with the prison. At the time of inspection there were four males and three females sick in the infirmary. The proportion of infirmary cases to the whole number in confinement in the year ending Michaelmas 1836, was 2.12, and that of death .05 per cent., which is a small proportion compared with the infirmary cases in many other prisons.

Infirmaries.

The infirmaries are not under any particular regulations as to silence or otherwise, nor under any superintendence beyond that of the infirmary wardsmen, and the occasional visits of the turnkeys. We have already noticed the irregularity of the appropriation of the infirmaries to different purposes from those for which they were intended.

Bathing.

The bathing of the prisoners, on their admission, is not done regularly in regard to males, and not at all to females. The filthy state in which offenders constantly enter this prison, appears to render it very important that all should be thoroughly cleansed. No person can be hurt by being washed in a bath, tempered according to the season; and the neglect of regularity in the use of the baths, is, we submit, highly censurable, as well as the nasty practice of bathing several in the same water, already adverted to.

Diet.

The prison allowance consists of 20 ounces of bread per day, or 140 ounces per week; and 3 pints of meat soup, and 8 pints of gruel per week. This is given in addition to the supplies which most prisoners obtain on their own account. In addition to this dietary, the surgeon, from time to time, orders extra diet for the sick, and also for those prisoners, who, although not invalids, appear to require an addition to their diet, in consequence of not having the means of supplying themselves. About 12 lbs. of meat are thus ordered daily as extra diet for the sick and needy; the greater part of which is received by the needy as above mentioned. The cost of the prison diet is stated at £1. 10*s.* per head per annum; but, from the number of prisoners supplying themselves, and the short periods of imprisonment, this sum forms, of course, no criterion of comparison with other prisons. The diet table is not publicly affixed in any part of the prison. The daily dietary is stated in Appendix H, No. 18.

Prisoners supplying themselves.

All prisoners are allowed to be supplied with eatables from without the prison. They are brought by visitors, and two days' consumption, and sometimes more, is brought at a time. They are not confined to plain food, but have sausages, red-herrings, &c., as they please. It is stated to be not uncommon for prisoners to sell eatables to each other, by which means, one, whose friends supply him plentifully with eatables, may thus obtain money to buy beer or tobacco.

Beer and Liquors.

Wine, or spirits, are not permitted without the surgeon's order; but every prisoner is allowed to purchase a pint of beer daily. The average consumption of beer by the prisoners is about 25 pints a-day, besides the allowances to those employed by the keeper. It happens, not unfrequently, that a prisoner gets more beer than a pint, by employing another to buy it for him, and, in some instances, this has led to drunkenness. (See the evidence on this point.)

Clothing.

Articles of clothing are given out by the keeper to such prisoners as stand in need of them. No clothing is made in the prison; but one of the prisoners is employed as a tailor in repairing. It is common for prisoners to destroy their clothing, and particularly their shoes, for the purpose of getting new ones, and thus they often go out better clothed and shod than they come in.

Bedding.

Some prisoners have complained of their bedding being damp; but it is aired from time to time in the bakehouse in winter, and in the yards in summer. The filthiness of the beds in the reception-ward has already been noticed, and will be found complained of in the evidence of several prisoners.

Washing.

The female prisoners wash their own linen, and also for the infirmaries. The bedding is also washed in the prison. The linen of the male prisoners is washed by their wives or friends, out of the prison. When it is returned, the turnkey receives it at the gate, and brings it into the yards. The combs appeared in a bad state. The prisoners wash in their respective yards, but some of them are of such dirty habits, that it is difficult to make them wash themselves at all.

Cleanliness.

The prison is lime-washed from time to time, as it is required: it is done several times in the course of the year. The bed-rooms are washed twice a-week. They were not particularly clean, and all the day-rooms were dirty.

5. Prison Punishments.

Punishments.

The number of punishments inflicted during the year ending Michaelmas 1836, for offences within the prison, appears by the Return, Appendix H, No. 15, to have been 159; and by the annexed Return, Appendix F, for the three months of November, December, and January last, it was during those three months 45. It does not seem that any punishment was inflicted for mere breach of silence. The ordinary punishment is, confinement in solitary cells. There is a cat-o'-nine-tails, but it is stated that no prisoner has ever been whipped in this prison. The schoolmaster uses a cane for the correction of the boys, but it does not seem that he abuses this power of punishment. No unnatural offence has been detected, but the manner in which the men sleep renders such crimes by no means impracticable.

6. Officers.

Officers.

A list of the officers with their respective salaries and emoluments will be found in the Return, Appendix H, No. 21. The keeper is the only resident officer; but three male turnkeys, a watchman, and one female turnkey, are on duty at night. The matron does not reside within the prison: this is contrary to the Gaol Act. The two female turnkeys are not sufficient for the management of the female prisoners; but it is believed to be the intention of the magistrates to provide two others in addition. From the turnkeys not residing in the prison, they are obliged to leave it by turns for an hour in the day-time, in order to dine. One of the male turnkeys resides at Hoxton, and one of the female turnkeys at Knightsbridge; distances too great to admit of their being sent for, so as to be of use, in case of emergency.

Visiting Justices.

The attendance of the Visiting Justices at this prison is, we understand, not very frequent, their time being more particularly devoted to the House of Correction, Coldbath-fields.

Books.

The several books kept in the prison are specified in the list annexed. (See Appendix G.)

7. Miscellaneous.

Insane Prisoner.

We found a prisoner in the male infirmary in an evident state of derangement, but no steps for his removal had then been taken.

Recommittals.

The number of persons who were ascertained to have been in prison before, appears to have been about 12 per cent. upon the whole number committed in the year ending Michaelmas 1836. The real number of recommitted prisoners was probably much greater, as their own statements in this respect are not to be relied on.

Juvenile Offenders.

The average number of boys under 17 in custody is about 12. In the year 1835, the number of boys committed was 527, and in the year 1836, 585. Some of them make progress in learning to read, but probably not one in the course of a year is morally reformed.

Military Prisoners.

The usual allowance of 6*d.* per day is received for these from the War Office, and they are dieted upon the following scale per day:—

|---|---|
| Bread, 1¼ lb. | 2¼*d.* |
| Meat, ½ lb. | 2 |
| Gruel, 1 pint | 0 |
| Beer, ½ pint | 1 |
| | 6*d.* |

The keeper, in the course of his experience, remembers two or three instances in which persons obtained admission, under the false pretence of being deserters, knowing the good diet they would thus become entitled to. The following is a very recent case of this kind:

On 24th January 1837, John Byrnes was committed on the oath of James Darvill, constable, and on his own confession, with being a deserter from the 87th Royal Regiment of Irish Fusiliers. He was discharged 30th January, 1837, in consequence of the committing magistrate having ascertained, by a communication from the War-Office, that the prisoner had been discharged from that regiment in December 1834. The county was thus defrauded not only of the maintenance of the pretended deserter for six days, but of a pair of shoes which he received in lieu of his own worn-out ones, and in which he walked away.

Population of Prison.

It may be worth noticing, that this prison is stated to be usually fuller in the summer than in the winter months. The number of prisoners immediately previous to the Sessions in the following months, was,

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1836 | | October | 254 |
| May | 250 | Ditto adjourned Session | 180 |
| June | 324 | December | 205 |
| July | 238 | 1837 | |
| August | 252 | January | 183 |
| September | 199 | February | 204 |

The chaplain attributes the difference to the number of places open in the summer, in which beer and spirits are sold. More extended inquiries would be necessary, before any satisfactory conclusion on this head could be arrived at; but the effect of spirit-drinking upon the state of crime in the metropolis is too well known to require any comment.

Vans.

Although the vans in which prisoners are brought hither from the police-offices, and are removed backward and forward for examination, form no part of the establishment of the prison, it may be proper to remark, that the arrangements of these vans are by no means what they ought to be. They go round to several offices to collect prisoners, and sometimes bring as many as 25 and upwards at one time. Men and women are placed promiscuously in them without any sort of separation: they are occasionally so crowded that the women sometimes sit on the knees of men. No light is used in the vans, consequently it is quite dark in those which do not reach the prison until late; sometimes not until 10 or 11 o'clock at night. Instances have been stated to us of indecencies, and even of thefts, committed in the vans. Prisoners sometimes come out of the vans so drunk that they can scarcely stand. The evidence of the female turnkeys upon the subject of the vans deserves attention, and the practice of making prisoners, male and female, walk in a body, with a chain, to and from Hatton Garden police-office, is most objectionable, and must be highly repulsive to the feelings of all but the most abandoned characters. It is stated, that persons have even given drink to the prisoners in the chain as they have passed along! We beg to suggest, that the vans ought to be divided into individual compartments. There should also be lights in the night-vans.

Hatton Garden Chain.

Remedies.

In considering what practical remedy may be applied to the evils of this prison, we do not feel ourselves at liberty to enter into any inquiries into the primary causes which regularly contribute to fill it with offenders, nor into the results of what we believe to be an entirely erroneous system, viz., the requiring bail from a large class of petty offenders who are scarcely ever able to procure it, and, in default, committing them to prison until the sessions, or for long terms, without separation or employment; nor do we venture to inquire into the reasons why the number of persons committed for re-examination by the police-magistrates, or remanded for considerable periods, has of late so much increased. The central situation of this prison renders it locally a convenient receptacle for certain classes of prisoners, and, if its construction and management were on a right System, we should see no reason for entertaining any idea of its removal. But, independently of the abuses arising from the mistaken principle upon which many of the enactments of the Gaol Act are founded, and partly from lax and inefficient management, the present construction of the prison does not admit of any substantial remedy for the existing evils. Various schemes of improvement have been, from time to time, agitated; and recently, we understand, the magistrates have had it in contemplation to fit up the sleeping-rooms with wooden partitions, or berths, instead of the present barrack-bedstead. It has been supposed that the transfer of the prisoners confined here for long terms to the Westminster Bridewell would be a relief to this establishment. Such relief would, however, be very trifling, since it appears by the Return, Appendix H, that, of 5920 persons committed to this prison in the year ending at Michaelmas last, those whose terms were above two and under three months were only 35; above three and under six months, 46; above six months and under one year, only 14; and exceeding one year, none! And, in regard to the erection of new sleeping berths or cells, we fear that both the one scheme and the other would prove equally delusive, because the evil of association by day would in either case remain. No hope of permanent good can be indulged unless from the adoption of that system, which, in regard to untried prisoners, such as are the inmates of this prison, is loudly called for by the dictates of justice and humanity, namely, that of individual separation. The part of the prison appropriated to females is, moreover, much too small, and improperly situated. The prison ought, in our judgment, to be entirely reconstructed, so as to provide a sufficient number of cells of the requisite dimensions for the separate confinement, both by day and night, of all prisoners committed thereto: any measure short of this will prove in the end to be wholly fallacious and unsatisfactory.

We have annexed extracts from a mass of evidence of prisoners and officers taken by us: and we beg also to refer to the contents of the several Appendices A to H.

Examinations taken in the New Prison, Clerkenwell.

J. P.
a Prisoner.

"I am a prisoner in yard No. 10. I am 46 years of age. I was committed on the 12th December last, on a peace warrant, on the charge of the father of a young woman to whom I was much attached, for three months for want of bail. I am a silk-mercer by trade. After I had been confined a few days I found the language of the prisoners so gross and bad, and so different from what I had been accustomed to, that I wished to be removed to the infirmary. The governor said he could not do that, but offered me a separate sleeping-cell, which I gladly accepted. It was particularly at night that the conversation annoyed me, as in the day-time I could walk about the yard: they used to spit against the walls very much. I am now able to assist in preserving order, though not a wardsman. A man, however respectable, may be put into the reception-ward for want of bail, and he occupies a bed probably full of lice from the last occupant. There are several notorious thieves now in the ward. Thefts by prisoners sometimes occur: the other day a man was punished for stealing a loaf; he was removed to another ward. I attempted to read in the afternoon a chapter in the Bible to the rest, but it was so irksome that I was obliged to discontinue it. Not one in twenty ever takes up the Bible to look at, except to ridicule it. Yesterday a man took up the Bible, and was picking out and reading verses, to excite ridicule: there are not three in the ward who ever take up the Bible to read. Ordinary books, although of a moral kind, are not allowed, which I think is a pity. I have the prison allowance, and buy butter, beer, &c.: many of the prisoners buy beer—a pint a-day. I remember an instance of a sailor having an extra quantity through another prisoner, but it rarely occurs. The turnkey sometimes receives for the beer, and hands the money to the publican, who comes from the Crown public-house. I remember young Mr. B., a gentleman from Norwich, who was in the receiving-ward for bail one day, having 3*s.* extorted from him by the wardsman; 1*s.* of which was for not being bathed, and 2*s.* for eatables: he was a youth of 18, and was bailed out the next day. I was in the receiving-ward from the evening when I came in to about 2 o'clock the next day. The surgeon comes from 11 to 1 o'clock. Mr. W. C. and Mr. A. C., gentlemen of good family, and cousins of Lord D., were a week in this prison for want of bail, and left yesterday—common street-beggars associate with gentlemen, or whoever it may be. The prisoners seldom have tobacco, although there was an instance lately of a man getting some from his wife, when she visited him; and he was punished. The sleeping-rooms are very damp: the coverlets in wet weather are quite wet; the damp comes in during the night: several men have been ill in consequence: the day-rooms are warm, and the transition to the night-rooms gives cold: it might be remedied by portable stoves in the bed-rooms during the day. Prisoners are not allowed to be boisterous, but may talk in a quiet way. There are six or seven respectable men in my yard. Separation would have been very agreeable to me, with exercise in the open air."

G. H. C.
a Prisoner.

"I am aged 26, and am a prisoner from ward No 9. I was committed for an assault for want of bail in a quarrel. I am employed in a draper's shop. I was last with Mr. Brown, Ratcliffe Highway; I came in the day before yesterday. The morning after I came in I was put into the bath, and washed; the surgeon came in next morning, and asked us if anything was the matter with us, and we said, No; so he did not examine us. There was talking in the bed-room, and there might have been a few oaths: I do not recollect hearing. The wardsmen called out 'Silence.' I kept away from the others, walking about the yard: in order to separate myself from the others I was removed next day to ward No. 9 (Misdemeanors). I did not enter much into conversation; endeavoured to avoid doing so. I have been in two days. The prisoners are allowed to talk in a quiet way. I had some coffee this morning for breakfast, and paid the wardsman 2*d.* for it: several other prisoners had it; they pay the wardsman for it. I seldom see prisoners read. The blanket of my bed was ragged, and the drugget torn—not sufficient covering for me. There was a little quiet talking in the sleeping-room. We are locked in about a quarter past five, and get up a quarter past seven. Several prisoners are supplied with meat, &c., by their friends. I am likely to be here six months for want of bail. I belong to Devonport."

W. N.
a Prisoner.

"I am wardsman of the reception-ward, aged 24. I am in prison for six months for want of bail. I have been in 20 weeks. I was about seven weeks in No. 4 (Misdemeanors), and the rest of the time in the reception-ward. I was also wardsman in No. 4 for about seven days after I came in. I never had occasion to report any one in either ward, except one in the reception-ward for getting up in the night and picking a man's pocket: I awoke, and the man was locked up for the rest of the night. The turnkey came up immediately and confined him in a solitary cell, where he remained till he was taken before the magistrate for re-examination: he never came back again. I allow the prisoners to talk quietly, but endeavour to prevent noise and disturbance. They speak to one another when in bed now and then, but very seldom. The prisoners in the reception-yard almost all supply themselves, or have things from their friends, who come to the gates. Beer is allowed—a pint of it; it is paid for by prisoners; the change is given by the man who brings the beer; the beer is always brought from the 'Crown;' I don't know why. Coffee or tea is sometimes brought in by prisoners.

They cook for themselves generally; sometimes I do it for the gentlemen prisoners. I sometimes send out for a bit of steak, or something. I can't read, but go to the school every day. I am sometimes employed to clean in front of the governor's house, and so now and then see the women go out to the van, but not otherwise. I am employed whole days in cleaning the bedrooms and day-room, and airing the beds. I have as much as I can do. I never heard a prisoner complain of beds being damp. I go to chapel every other morning; the other wardsman going the other morning; it being necessary for one to stay with the prisoners: one yard goes by itself. Prisoners can see each other. The other wardsman is a blanket-washer, and only acts as a wardsman of a night. I have a bit of meat and a pint of beer allowed me as wardsman; that is the benefit of being one."

M. G.
a Prisoner.

"I am a prisoner, from ward No 11, for trial for felony, aged 45. I am a dealer in iron, and live in Princes' Court, Drury-lane. I have a warehouse in the City. I have been in prison five days. There is such a set of blackguards here that I hate being among them, but I should not like to be in a solitary cell, for I am a timid man. The prisoners have fun among themselves, but are pretty quiet day and night; they talk quietly among themselves. We go to bed very early: I can't sleep so long. My brother and I avoid the other prisoners; we find ourselves with meat, &c.; my wife brings it. We buy the beer; a man comes here with it. We have coffee for breakfast, which is made up by my brother. I gave the gaoler my money. I was put into the bath. I was one night in the reception-room. I can't read. Some mind the wardsman, others huff him; he endeavours to keep order. I don't recollect his reporting any one since I have been here. I should like to be with more decent persons."

J. B.
a Prisoner.

"I am a prisoner from ward No. 11 (felons' ward), aged 28. I am in gaol for re-examination, charged with embezzlement. I served with a grocer. I came into prison last Monday evening from Mary-le-bone police-office. I was brought here in the van; about six or seven came with me: the van brought one from Bow Street. I slept in reception ward the first night. I was washed in the bath. The surgeon saw me but did not examine me: one man had the itch, and he was ordered further down. Till yesterday I have had nothing but gaol-allowance. The wardsman in No 11 supplied me with a pint of coffee, and I paid him 2*d.* for it: it is not uncommon for prisoners to have coffee of the wardsmen. I heard the other prisoners joking a prisoner, called the pawnbroker, about his having had a drop too much, but did not see it myself: have not seen tobacco used, but saw where it was spit upon the ground: one of the visiters, a sort of fish-man, I think, must have brought it. A turnkey stands by the door the whole time the visiters stop. I have heard a good deal of swearing and bad language: it's very low language, not such as I have been used to; chiefly used in the other sleeping-room. I sleep in the lower room. I can hear what they say in the upper sleeping-room: have heard the words 'bloody,' 'b——r,' &c., from the other room, through the floor; they talk so loud, the wardsman must know it. If they talk very loud I have heard the wardsman call out 'silence.' I have seen prisoners sparring at each other for amusement, but not otherwise. Prisoners have attempted to play at 'shovepenny,' but the wardsman stopped it. There was a man for murder in my ward before I came in, but there is not any one in for any such bad offence now. I went in the van to the police-office to be examined; on coming back it was so full, several were obliged to stand up; there might be 25 or more; there were five women with us; two were left at the House of Correction: I was almost suffocated in the van, there were so many. Some of the prisoners were for Newgate. The chaplain has not come into our yard since I have been in it. Many of the prisoners worry a man named M. with a lame leg, who is a quiet man; they frighten him, and tell him he will be put in chains."

W. M.
a Prisoner.

"I am a prisoner from ward No. 11, aged 50; am in for trial for stealing an ale-glass. I was with Mr. C., a broker, as clerk. I have broken my thigh and kneejoint: never in prison before: have been in prison from the 12th January, and was one day in the reception-ward, No. 12: should be glad to get out of the felons' ward, the language is so bad, and the fellows so indecent; they make use of such bad language, 'bloody' this, and 'b——r the other.' I did not complain of it, for I was afraid they would do me some injury; they have pulled persons out of bed: one man was continually annoying me: last night they pulled one man out of bed; they were talking of it in the ward-room this morning; I could hear them very plainly doing it. I sleep in the lower room, and can hear the bad language through the floor. Some of them walk about the room an hour or so before they go to bed. There was a wardsman upstairs; the deputy-wardsman sleeps there; they don't mind him. I think the wardsmen no better than the other prisoners. I never knew of a wardsman reporting a prisoner for bad conduct. Last Sunday, after coming from chapel, they would not let me come near the fire; they shoved me about. It is no use to complain to the wardsman; he takes no notice of it. I never heard or saw such a set: they tell each other their secrets, how they did this man, and that; and make quite light of being transported. There was a man in for murder the night before last; he went away yesterday. I have seen the prisoners chalking upon the table; probably they play some game, but I am always kept away. I have had nothing but gaol allowance; none of my friends have come near me: many prisoners have meat, beer, &c.; those who have been in before are best off. The prisoners frequently get coffee from the head wardsman; they pay 2*d.* a pint. Some of the prisoners chew tobacco; I have seen some smoking; although they have been searched, they have afterwards brought it out of their shoes. I saw a man yesterday, who went out this morning, who had two or three pints; he would send one man after another for it; they sometimes take it up stairs to bed with them. I am in the habit of reading the Bible, but can scarcely do it; they all come round and annoy me, and with bad language. I should be glad to be kept separate. I was washed in the bath. I heard a young man who came into our present ward say, he gave the man sixpence, and was not washed. I have no doubt that is often done. The bath is warm. They joke and laugh at me for being a cripple, but I don't answer them, and keep quite apart. There's many brought in every day. The most desperate thieves are best off; their companions support them; there were some came in yesterday, who found their 'pals' here. There are some in my ward who have been in many times before; they say 'well, we are sure to be lagged this time,' &c., and other such talk."

"I am a prisoner from ward No. 10 (Misdemeanors), aged 41; am a copper-plate printer on my own account. I have three presses of my own; my wife swore the peace against me, but my sureties were not satisfactory, because they could not get their receipts for taxes. I have been in about a month, and am sentenced to be confined till the sessions, when I shall be discharged. I was put into the reception-ward after I had come here in the van: there were five or six in the van, and one woman with us. In the receiving-ward, though I have committed no crime, yet I was placed with felons, which for young persons would entirely spoil them. Then the beds are frequently dirty, and abominable, and full of vermin. I found vermin about me the next day: however respectable, you are obliged to sleep in these beds: some of the lowest persons from St. Giles's sleep there: the language was most obscene, nothing but bawdy talk, and swearing, and such as I had not been accustomed to: this was in the receiving-yard. The wardsman tried, but could not put a stop to it; it was out of his power. I was not bathed; only washed myself. I did not like to be bathed, as there were two or three dirty men before me, and I had to bathe in the same water. I saw the water was quite dirty; one of these men was in such a filthy state that the turnkey locked him up separately. The surgeon did not examine us, but merely asked us if anything was the matter with us; he stood so far off he could not possibly tell if they had any disorder: they might have had the itch, but he could not tell it from where he stood. In the morning I got a pint of coffee; it was vile stuff, but it was the only thing I could get; I gave the wardsman 2*d.* for it. I was then removed into ward No. 10. From the change of diet, many prisoners get into a bad state of health, and want physic, but can't get it: one young man named G. M. applied, through the turnkey, to the doctor for a dose of salts, and the doctor told him he did not want it, and would not give it. I should have applied myself, but thought it of no use: we are not allowed to have it sent us, or to buy medicine. I am supplied with meat, &c., by my friends. I buy beer of the publican; one pint a-day. I recollect a sailor getting two pints. If it was not for a gentleman, Mr. P., there would be no living in the ward on account of the bad language and conduct: there are several very bad characters there at present, but he has interfered a good deal and kept them down: there are several regular thieves; they are now in for bail for assaults; they have been in before for felony, and have got acquaintances now in the felons' yard; two have been in the felons' yard in this very prison. I think they communicate with each other in chapel. The men in my yard, No. 10, sit in chapel next to those in No. 9 and No. 4, which are placed together, and the felons No. 11 are next to them; so that the prisoners in my yard could communicate indirectly with the felons' yard. I have heard those in my ward talk to those in No. 9. In my present ward I believe there is a good deal of quarrelling in the upper room: they pick one another out: when a man wishes to sleep in a particular ward, if there's room, the wardsman does not object. There's an old man named R. B. in the upper room who told me the language was very bad, and asked to be removed, and was removed; and he said, the removal was like coming from Hell to Heaven. Sometimes they tell a story or sing a song, in my room, in bed, till nine o'clock. The room itself is very damp, but the bed is dry. I am very fond of reading; but there are none but religious books allowed. The wardsman provides coffee for those who require it; 2*d.* a-pint I paid for it; I have had it two or three times. I have not the slightest doubt that many bad characters frequently come as visiters, because the bad characters in gaol are the best supplied with provisions; there is nothing to prevent a thief or prostitute from coming to see a prisoner. There was a woman came yesterday who passed as the wife of a butcher, but the butcher said she was his kept-woman; she was drunk; he wanted her to bring him some things, and she came empty-handed; and he was greatly exasperated, and said, she had been drinking away the money. I would much rather be in solitary confinement than be obliged to mix with such characters. The wardsman has not reported any one since I have been here."

R. B. a Prisoner.

"I am a prisoner from ward No. 10, aged 60, for want of bail, for a dispute with my wife. I have been here about ten days. I was in reception-ward for a day, and then passed into the present. I do not buy coffee, but some of the others get coffee from the wardsman; they pay 2*d.* a-pint for it. I was placed first in the upper sleeping-room with about 12 or 13, and I requested to be removed on account of the disgusting language, which was quite dreadful: they talked about women, sodomy, and everything that was horrible and disgusting. One said, 'You come and do me," and so on. The under-wardsman must have heard it; it was repeatedly so; he used sometimes to call out 'silence,' but he was as bad as the rest. The under-wardsman, on my complaining, told the upper-wardsman that the language was horrible, and then told the men that I had said so, in order to bring me into disgrace with them: they were mostly men who knew all about prisons, and talked a good deal of the House of Correction. When I was removed to the lower room, it was much more comfortable: when I complained, the wardsman told me I might have been removed before, if I had spoken of it. There's laughing, joking, and swearing in the day-room. I read, but can't do so much on account of the noise. I should not like to be in a cell quite by myself, but should wish to be away from these bad characters. I can't afford to have beer, but many have it. I have bought half a sheet of writing paper of the wardsman; I am to pay a halfpenny for it. I have seen two or three prisoners have paper from him. My bed was damp in the upper room, but now it is dry. The two wardsmen do all the cleaning, &c., in the two wards. The prisoners now and then help to clean for amusement, but don't get anything for it."

J. M. a Prisoner.

"I am a prisoner from the boys' yard, No. 8, aged 14. My father is a sawyer; lives at No. 10, Wild Court, Drury-lane. My mother is alive. I have a brother and a sister. I can't read or write. I never used to go to church: have been to a Sunday-school, but they used not to learn me much. My father used to go to a house in Oxford-street; some gentleman's private chapel. I am in prison for receiving 1*s.* 6*d.* for my father, for some saw-dust, which I concealed from him. I was never in prison before, or taken before a magistrate. My father used not to punish me, but frequently turned me out of doors, and gave me no victuals: this was when he came home a little drunk and kicked up a row. I used to go and hold gentlemen's horses. I never begged. I came here on Monday evening, in the van, with several others. When I first came here I was put into the bath, and then taken to the boys' ward. We get up at a quarter past seven, wash ourselves and get breakfast, then go to chapel, and after that go to school. I have a card with four letters, but can't spell the word; can tell the letters, but can't tell the word; this takes about two hours: some of the boys swear; some of them say what they have done: the big ones are worse than the little ones. The boys sometimes lark, and pull the others about; and two of them pulled me out of bed three times in one night, down on to the stones; I never complained; I did not like to complain; if I did, they would probably lick me: they sometimes sing songs of a night. I cannot sleep from five in the evening till seven in the morning. Never play at anything: we sit round the fire and talk to each other; one boy has some money; I had no money. I do not know what I shall do when I go out of prison; some of the boys read; one of them has a Bible; I cannot read. I sometimes hear the men talk at chapel, but we don't talk ourselves; one boy has got some meat to-day for cleaning, but he does not do half the work; the other boys get nothing."

J. C. a Prisoner.

"I am a prisoner in the boys' yard, No. 8, aged 17. I came from Clerkenwell. Father a bricklayer; mother alive. I have four brothers: father used me well. I used to work for him. I can read, and also write a little; used to go to church. My father is ill with the rheumatics. I am here on a charge of an improper attempt between me and a gentleman: he found bail, and probably will never be tried. I have been three weeks in prison for want of bail. I have been wardsboy the greater part of the time; there have been two or three bad ones; one was here two days ago, who had been in the House of Correction. I had to report two for swearing a week ago, they were strapped by the schoolmaster: he gave them two straps on the hand, they were about 12 and 14 years old. I report to the schoolmaster. The turnkey was not by. I sleep in No. 9, separate from the boys, in a separate cell. My mother has called and brought me meat and potatoes. I have had no beer as wardsboy. P., the other boy, sometimes helps me: we cleaned the governor's windows the other day: we were outside: no one was in the room. Mr. D., the turnkey, was standing outside, but not the whole time. I think I could have jumped down and got away, by moving the ladder to the outer wall, and so climbing over it. The boys have coffee sent them by their friends. I go every other morning only to chapel, and the other boy goes the other. We have had a boy of 12, who had been in the House of Correction, and another of 11, who had pawned his grandmother's gown. I shall go back to my father: I don't know what the other boys intend doing: five are in now for want of bail, and one to be tried at the Sessions."

E. R. a Prisoner.

"I am a prisoner, from ward No. 4, aged 27, for want of bail. I am a boatman on the Paddington Canal, and was committed last Wednesday week. I was first put into the reception-ward, and slept there the first night; the next day, was put into the bath, and was then removed to the present ward No. 4; the prisoners in the ward jaw and haggle among themselves; the other day, one of the prisoners struck the wardsman, and gave him a black eye: the prisoner was removed to another ward. I do not know how it happened, the prisoners have been very riotous within these two or three days, falling out about water and boiling the kettle for tea, &c., but they cannot all have it at once: sometimes they use bad language; a day or two ago, one of the prisoners stole some bread from another, but they did not find out who took it; the wardsman has reported two since I have been in the ward, one for striking him, and the other for making a riot about a loaf which the prisoner said was too small; the barber who shaves the prisoners is allowed beer; the prisoners talk to each other in bed about several things, but don't make much noise; the noisiest room is down below, but three of the worst have been shifted from it. I can read printing, not writing. I would rather have been kept separate than mix with all the prisoners. I have not been used to be idle, and would be glad to get something to do."

G. C. a Prisoner.

"I am head wardsman of No. 11, felons' ward, 19 years of age. I have been in prison about ten months, for want of bail, for an assault. I was first in No. 10, and for about nine weeks have been wardsman of No. 11. My duty is to clean the day-rooms and bed-rooms, and keep the men in good order. I have not reported any one since I have been wardsman: some time ago the turnkey heard two prisoners using bad words, and reported them, and they were locked up in a dark cell. I deny that there is any bad language in the bed-room, or that I have sold coffee to any prisoner, or that any prisoner has had more than a pint of beer, or taken any beer to bed. [N. B. See evidence of prisoners M. G., J. B. and W. M., also of wardsman T. M.] I get a piece of meat three times a week, and a pint of beer every day, for being wardsman; my mother and sister bring me a pound of sugar, and a quarter of a pound of coffee, and a bit of butter every week. The prisoners talk of their past cases."

T. M. a Prisoner.

"I am wardsman of No. 10. I have been wardsman about two months. I have been three months in the prison. I am in for want of sureties for an assault. I was in No. 9 before I was made wardsman. It is my duty to keep the people quiet, and keep the ward clean, and to order what necessaries the prisoners want, which I send out for by any of the visiters, some of whom I know by sight; if I make up coffee myself for prisoners, I charge 2*d*. a pint, but if they like to make it themselves, they may; about a fortnight ago, a sailor managed to get three pints of beer through other prisoners. No tobacco. I am allowed a pint of beer a-day, and meat three times a-week. I often hear bad language, swearing, &c. in the day-room, and threaten to report; the only man I have ever reported, was one for stealing bread. I cannot prevent laughing and joking; that is impossible: some of the riff-raff are apt to joke about religion and the Bible; at night, I generally let the prisoners talk quietly, such as tell a story, or sing a little song till nine o'clock, and then tell them to go to sleep; there is a light all night. I generally put the bad ones together at night as much as I can, so that the quieter may not be annoyed. I remember R. B. applying to be moved on account of the bad language, and I changed his room. I sometimes hear the noise from above in my bed-room, a good many are in our yard that have been in prison before. Two gentlemen, named C., were lately in my ward nearly a week for want of bail for an assault. Our beds are clean, but in the receiving-ward they are lousy and dirty, but that cannot be helped. I air the beds as much as possible, but the weather has been much against them. Only three from our yard go to the schoolmaster: those who cannot read or write are sent. J. C. from my ward is employed in carrying coals about the prison, and another prisoner from No. 9: they get meat and beer extra. A prisoner, J. W., now in No. 9, is employed every day in cleaning the chapel; he gets a pint of beer and meat daily; he was wardsman where I am: but it is a better situation to clean the chapel, as it is less bother, and more meat; it takes at least a couple of hours to clean the chapel. I sometimes sell paper to the prisoners, and charge a penny a sheet; the two Mr. C.'s gave me 6*d*. for cooking for and attending upon them: what I do in that way is no more than is done by other wardsmen, and I make a trifle by it."

I.

W. M.
a Prisoner.

"I have been in this prison since the 3d October, for want of bail for an assault; am blanket-washer in the receiving-yard; fresh water is not put into the bath for each prisoner, the copper is not large enough for that; three or four are washed in the same water. I have often heard respectable people complain of being mixed up with so many thieves and pickpockets."

A. S.
Female Prisoner.

"I am wardswoman of No. 1 and 2, aged 40, a married woman, separated from my husband; for want of bail, for quarrelling with my father; have been three weeks in prison; a fortnight wardswoman; a week in bail-yard No. 3; my duty is to keep order, besides cleaning. I get meat three times a-week, and beer at dinner time: it is an amusement for me, better than being idle. I have heard bad language in the ward, and endeavoured to stop it; in the other yard (the bail-yard) they often quarrel, but not so much in my ward. I let them talk quietly; they have nothing else to amuse them. Two very decent women for stealing cutlery were two days in the ward, and are now removed to the infirmary; a great many common women of the town come into our ward; the female turnkeys being near makes them decent. I have not had occasion to report any for misconduct."

J. L.
Turnkey.

"I am turnkey of No. 11—the felons' yard. I reside and board at my own house out of the prison. I have been turnkey seven years. Last Monday week a prisoner reported two others for bad language; I reported to the governor, and he locked them up. Instances of stealing often occur. I am here every third night on duty. I do not know whether coffee is sold by the wardsmen. I think the beer referred to as taken up stairs to bed by prisoners must have been toast and water. I have no doubt that bad characters sometimes get admission as visiters. I think that any one else would be better than wardsmen if it could be arranged: I have often had complaints from more decent prisoners of the company they are in, and begging to be separated. The clothes of many prisoners who come in are very dirty and offensive. It is impossible to keep silence in any of the yards under present circumstances."

C. K.
Turnkey.

"I am turnkey of No. 10—the misdemeanants' yard. I have been seven or eight years turnkey. I live and board out of the prison. I come every third night. I have no doubt there is a great deal of bad language in my yard, both night and day. I have heard prisoners swear, and they have been punished for it: other very offensive low language is used besides swearing: there is occasional wrangling one with another. I believe that very bad language is used in the bed-rooms: there are inspection holes in the doors of the bed-rooms: the turnkeys go at night at uncertain times and inspect and look into the bed-rooms. Last night, after searching a suspected prisoner, we found tobacco concealed under his shirt: they easily find means of secreting tobacco in their present dresses. There was lately an instance of a prisoner getting two pints of beer by employing another prisoner; I charged the other prisoner and desired him to drink it, when he spat some tobacco out of his mouth. I think the wardsmen are not to be trusted. I have no doubt that the wardsmen make up coffee as stated. I have no doubt that the prisoners often sell their food to others. Several of those in my yard, although committed for misdemeanors, have formerly been committed for felony. I think the association in such numbers is very bad: some delight in disgusting others. If we were to confine all who swear, we should want extra cells in every yard. The wife, or kept-woman, who came this morning as a visiter to see the baker, used the most disgusting language."

W. C.
Turnkey.

"I am turnkey of the receiving yard. I have been five years turnkey. The prisoners as they come in are either put into the bath, or their faces and necks are washed if they appear clean: the governor wishes that all should be bathed: the copper is not large enough to give fresh water to each man; consequently we are obliged to bathe three or four in the same water, and then we run the water off. I am always present at the washing. I cannot say if the wardsman has received anything for not bathing prisoners. It would be impossible to stop the wardsmen supplying coffee, &c. There is no doubt that the prisoners sell provisions to each other. I have heard respectable prisoners committed for bail, &c., complain of being mixed with thieves and felons. I have had complaints of vermin in the beds, which are constantly removed to be cleaned, but then they get filled with vermin again. I can hardly keep myself free from vermin. The prisoners can scarcely refrain from bad language, such as swearing and bawdy talking, in my presence: I threaten, or report, them. There are many old hands to whom the place is like a home: they come so often: there is a man here now who has been twenty times at least in this prison; he was locked up for having tobacco concealed about him; they are always searched, but they manage to get it; it has been brought in a boiled potato by a visiter, and in butter, and in a half-quartern loaf; they are very fond of tobacco; they bring it in their shoes. No doubt there is bad language at night. Every night almost there is a different set. They sometimes come in in liquor. I think it a great pity to mix up the respectable people with the others."

A. W.
Female Prisoner.

"I was removed to-day into the infirmary from the yard No. 1 and 2, that I might be separated from the bad women: age 26. I have been a nurse-maid. I was charged with having stolen goods on the premises. I was staying with my sister in the City-road. My sister's husband is a coal-merchant. I am innocent. It was very disagreeable to me to be placed among such bad characters as I was. I heard very bad language; there were some shocking characters, and their talk was very offensive to me. The two wardswomen slept in the room with us. The women were singing in the room above: no wardswoman slept up there. A friend has supplied us with provisions. The women crowded round the fire, so that we could not get up to it: it was as disagreeable to my sister as to me. I am thankful to be in the infirmary. I am for re-examination on Tuesday."

M. G.
Female Prisoner.

"I am from yard No. 3, on charge of riot, aged 53. I have been here a fortnight last Tuesday: the language is very bad; it is not pleasant to hear what the bad girls say: I should not like to be long in such company."

M. R.
Female Prisoner.

"I am in the bail yard No. 3, for want of bail, aged 44. I am separated from my husband. I have been a month in prison: there is much low language and bad talking, particularly at night. The wardswoman is not regarded; they say to her, 'You are only a prisoner;' they do not mind her: they laugh at those who read the Bible: they are allowed to purchase a pint of beer each."

M. C.
Female Prisoner.

"I am wardswoman in No. 1 and 2. I have been 19 weeks here for want of bail, for an assault. I am employed in cooking nearly the whole day. I am allowed meat and a pint of beer every day. I have sometimes heard bad language and swearing. I have heard a girl swear even in the presence of the turnkeys. The prisoners stay twenty minutes or half an hour in the bed-room before they go to bed; from five to eleven there is no one in the next room: there is no wardswoman in the room up stairs; when first committed the prisoners are placed up there. I do not get up to receive them."

M. P.
Female Turnkey.

"I have been turnkey for 12 years; when the prisoners come in I search them, and put them into the room. I have many times seen women come in worse for liquor, but it is some time since: it is a month or six weeks since I took in seven at once, and one was drunk. I cannot say drunkenness is very common, neither is it very rare. I have once or twice known a woman sick over the bedstead, from drunkenness, but not lately. I have known an instance of a woman going down the room and pulling others out of bed. I have known instances of bad language and noise within a few months. I cannot detect ordinary conversation at night, but I can hear loud talking: I dare say there is much bad language which I do not hear: I have no doubt of it. Sometimes respectable prisoners say, 'Could I go anywhere else?' It is a motley group indeed. I feel for the more respectable: the matron never attends at night unless one of us is ill. I have known instances of notes attached to coals thrown over from the male yards. A. W. and her sister, now removed to the infirmary, slept in the small room with four others. Two decent young women, for stealing wine, about a month since, slept in the same room with the two wardswomen; they were acquitted: the two wardswomen both sleep in the small room, because they rise very early, and it would be too early to disturb the others, if either of them slept above. The bath has not been used for some time. The prisoners come in as late as 11 at night. I believe the prisoners from Hatton Garden walked handcuffed: the van is horrible; I hear many complaints of it; it is quite dark inside the van at night; the van is sometimes so crowded, they are obliged to stand, and the women sit in each other's laps, and that in the dark."

S. H.
Female Turnkey.

"I have been turnkey 14 years. About three weeks ago a very indecent note was thrown over from the male to the female yard with a coal; it was very indecent, and I burnt it, for I felt I could not show it to any gentleman: I have seen others of the same kind; I have shown them to the governor, and they have been punished. About two years ago a man from the adjoining yard got upon the wall of No. 3: at another time a girl, S. G., was getting up the wall, and I stopped her. Riots and disturbances have taken place in the upper room; there is a light till eight o'clock; when there is a terrible noise, we get up and go up. Persons have lately come in worse for liquor: seven came in once, and three or four of them were not sober. About two months ago a girl was pulled out of bed by another prisoner, and she had terrible fits in consequence of it. Women have been sick from drunkenness, but not often. It [illegible] a twelvemonth since any prisoner was put into the bath. Some very dirty women with vermin come in; it has been complained of by the next occupant of the bed. I have no doubt there is bad language in the day-rooms, and that those who have money can get more than a pint of beer. The women sit any how in the van; I have heard of the women sitting on the men's knees: there was a woman who said she got half-a-sovereign from a man in the van who took some liberties with her; the other woman complained of her indecencies. Four or five years ago a man was robbed of his watch in the van: it is very possible now. The chain in going to and from Hatton Garden is complained of: five or six men, and the same number of women, go with the chain. I have heard of persons giving the prisoners drink going along."

"I have been keeper of the New Prison eight years and a half. I am 54 years of age. The classification of the Act is observed as far as practicable; but I often, when there is a better sort of prisoner, place him in the infirmary for separation. I judge not by the offence, but by character, and by its hurting the prisoner's feelings. Prisoners sometimes apply to be separated, and sometimes I separate them of my own accord. The putting up the printed order, enjoining silence, has had some effect; but, of course, there is talking. (See copies of this order, and also of keeper's orders to turnkeys, annexed, Appendix A. and B.) These orders are made by me as keeper. We have no authorized rules beyond the Gaol Act. I have no confidence in the wardsmen: it would be much better to have a paid man from out of doors: a decent man might be had for 12*s*. to 15*s*. a-week, who would be there day and night. I do not take the money away from prisoners but when they like to give it up. I have a very difficult set to manage: there are so many that know that they will be discharged by no one appearing against them. I admit the existence of most of the abuses now stated to me from the evidence of prisoners. I have proposed for the sleeping-rooms separate wooden partitions. I sometimes find the prisoners too close together at night, and part them. The prisoners are crowded together not only in the reception-room, but in the station-house and van. I have detected tobacco in all sorts of ways; in butter, in moist sugar, in a man's wig. A man has been punished for sending a letter to a female desiring her to send him tobacco; and a discharged prisoner was carrying out the letter. I am the only resident officer in the prison; but three male turnkeys and one female turnkey are in the prison at night, and two watchmen patrol. I doubt the expediency of the turnkeys residing in the prison. I constantly inspect the bedding, locks, &c., myself. I am always ready to hear complaints from prisoners. In regard to briefs, there have been instances of prisoners, such as lawyers' clerks, drawing briefs for others; but whether they may have received anything for it I cannot tell. Attorneys are admitted to converse freely with prisoners: they stand in the passage between the yards. The vans are complained of, no doubt: they do not come directly here from the police-office, but go round from one office to another: the vans will hold 25. The prisoners, male and female, go handcuffed to the offices, at the discretion of the turnkeys; about 15 may go handcuffed; they are handcuffed two, three, or four together: 15 men and seven women went out to the police-offices to-day. The officers sign the attendance-book daily, at eight o'clock, but it does not specify the hour. The three turnkeys, who are the night officers, unlock: the governor, and matron, and a female turnkey, also attend at unlocking. The chaplain is in the prison about two hours a-day. Formerly money has been left by attorneys at the gate. About four or five years ago a sovereign was left by Mr. H., an attorney, which was immediately returned to him. No such thing has occurred lately."

APPENDIX (A).

Order affixed in the several Yards.

1. The use of Tobacco by Prisoners is strictly prohibited.
2. All Prisoners are required to be silent, and submissive to the directions of the Keeper and the Officers.
3. Prisoners offending against the Rules, or acting in any manner contrary to good order and discipline by day or by night, will be punished by Solitary Confinement, and not permitted to be visited by his or her Friends. If guilty of a repeated Offence, they will be reported to the Visiting Justices for an extended punishment.
4. The Wardsmen are required to preserve Order and report Offenders. If they neglect their duty they will be displaced.

APPENDIX (B).

Orders given to the Turnkeys.

New Prison, Clerkenwell, December 5, 1835.

1. That the use of Tobacco by Prisoners be strictly prohibited.
2. That Provisions may be taken in for Prisoners before 12 o'Clock if properly directed, and conveyed to them, but the bringers thereof are not generally to be admitted to see Prisoners, except it shall appear to be necessary.
3. That as far as possible the Visiters to be admitted, be the Relations only of the Prisoners as far as the same can be ascertained, and those only at one time.
4. That the stay of each Visiter be limited, as far as possible, to five minutes only.
5. No Persons of bad or suspicious character to be permitted to visit Prisoners. If any such should be discovered, they are to be reported to the Keeper, and ejected.

HORSEMONGER LANE.

Site, Construction, Classification.

Horsemonger Lane.

This prison is situated in the parish of St. Mary, Newington, and is under the jurisdiction of the Sheriff, Court of Quarter Sessions, and twelve Visiting Magistrates of the county of Surrey. It is of a quadrangular form, the airing-yards of the criminal division being enclosed within the building, which consists of three stories above the basement. One side of the building is appropriated to the debtors; the other three sides are appropriated to the criminal prisoners. It is surrounded, or nearly so, by the prison garden. It was completed and opened for the reception of prisoners in 1798.

The Criminal Prison.

That part of the prison which is assigned to the criminal population is subdivided into ten wards, called classes.

The following table contains a description of the prisoners of which these classes consist, and of the day-rooms, airing-rooms, airing-yards, and cells assigned to them respectively.

| | | | 15 sleeping-cells | 8 | 4 | 6 | 4 | 9 | 0 | |

The day-rooms and airing-rooms are on the basement or ground floor. The two floors above are called the upper and lower galleries; and in each there is a double row of sleeping-cells, divided from one end to the other in each of the three sides of the square by a passage. Each class has its sleeping-cells (in which the prisoners sleep separately) immediately above its own day-room, accessible from the latter by a separate staircase. The several apartments of each class are separated from those of the other classes by partition walls, in some of which there are wooden doors of communication for the passage of the officers. By means of these doors, conversation may be carried on between persons in the staircases of one class and persons in the staircases of the adjoining class. The upper and lower galleries of each class are separated by open grated doors in the several staircases. Each cell has a ventilator or open grated window (called a bull-hole) opening upon the passage; the ventilators of the cells on one side being immediately opposite to the ventilators respectively of the cells on the other side of the passage.

Conversation can be carried on with perfect freedom from discovery, in a moderate tone of voice, among the prisoners from cell to cell in each gallery: they may indeed distinctly see each other from the opposite ventilators. It can be carried on, also, between different prisoners in the upper and lower galleries, although not so easily, nor without greater risk of discovery. The prisoners of class No. 3 (transports) having no sleeping-cells, are brought at night to sleep in the upper gallery of class No. 2 (misdemeanants), and through whose day-room that gallery is alone accessible. The prisoners of class No. 4 (male transports), when over-crowded in their own galleries, are sometimes taken to one of the galleries of the misdemeanants. The boys' class No. 10, when over-crowded, are taken to sleep in one of the galleries of class No. 9 (untried felons). Prisoners from the respective classes have access to the gallery-staircases for the purpose of cleaning them almost daily, and in summer for about three hours at a time; and the male transports, class No. 4, can then communicate with the male misdemeanants, class No. 5; and the untried male felons, class No. 9, with the boys, class No. 10, through the wooden doors which separate the cells of these respective classes. In the several gallery staircases there are also open iron grated windows overlooking the garden, into which all classes of male prisoners are occasionally brought to work, and are there mixed together, whether felons, misdemeanants, untried or convicted, and with whom the different classes of prisoners who clean in the staircases can converse through these windows. All descriptions of delinquents are mixed in the boys' class, and there is no class for female children; and it seems that class No. 4 (transports) and class No. 5 (misdemeanants), being the only male classes which perform labour, assemble and mix together for that purpose in the day-room of class No. 4.

Infirmaries.—There are two infirmaries, one for the males, the other for females, in each of which all classes are mixed, felons, misdemeanants, untried and convicted, children and adults, and in the female infirmary also debtors.

Matron's House, Washhouse, &c.—At this time there are only two female transports. Both of these have been in the prison a considerable time. By day they are almost constantly employed in the washhouse and laundry, which are in the matron's house. Besides these transports, there were six female felons similarly employed when we inspected the prison. The matron's house fronts, and has a door (before which door there is some pavement) opening into the garden. The transports frequently go into the garden to wash that pavement. In the matron's house also there is a kitchen, and a large coal-cellar, both on the ground floor; in the former are two, and in the latter there is one open grated window, looking into the garden. In the former the transports are frequently employed in repairing the prison bedding and articles for the sick in the infirmaries, and the latter is accessible almost at all times to the whole of these female prisoners; and by means at least of the window in the coal-cellar, almost any kind of intercourse by words, letters, or otherwise, might take place between persons in the cellar and others in the garden. The matron necessarily spends much of her time in the female infirmary. When there are many patients, she spends half of her time there, and she has various other duties which withdraw her from her own house. There is but one female turnkey, and she generally attends the three female classes within the prison. The consequence is, that the female prisoners in the matron's house are frequently left by themselves. It has already been stated, that occasionally all classes of male prisoners work in the garden. There are also three male nurses, selected from various classes of prisoners, who attend the sick in the infirmaries. These nurses go to the door of the matron's house, at all hours of the day, for various articles for the patients.

Chapel.—In the chapel the women are screened from the men; but with this exception the prisoners of all classes can see each other. The debtors sit alone.

Such, in the criminal prison, are some of the defects of construction, which open a variety of channels for the spread of that moral contamination which the Gaol Act was intended to prevent.

Debtors' Prison.

The debtors' side comprises three divisions, viz., the master debtors' division, for the more respectable class of male debtors; the common debtors' division, for persons of an inferior grade, or who cannot afford to pay for the somewhat superior accommodation provided in the former; and the female debtors' division. All the three stories are called galleries, the different rooms of which are both day-rooms and sleeping-rooms. So numerous are the prisoners, especially in the common debtors' side, that many of them are generally crowded together in one apartment. The general rule seems to be, that in the upper and middle galleries on the master debtors' side one room is appropriated to two prisoners, but in each of four or five of the largest rooms three or four are placed together; and in the lower gallery each prisoner providing his own bedding may have a single room. On the common debtors' side about five prisoners live together in one room, throughout the upper and middle galleries; in the lower gallery each prisoner has a separate apartment.

The following table shows the number and dimensions of these several apartments:—

The prisoners are not locked up at night in their respective rooms. They are allowed candle-light, and may sit up as late as they please, and can go from room to room in each gallery at all hours.

Master Debtors' side.—On the master debtors' side the prisoners complain that there is no common kitchen, and that after locking up there is no urinal to which they can resort, and that the common washing-place or sink must be and is therefore used as such.

Common Debtors' side.—The common debtors' side is generally so crowded, that a large number of the most recent prisoners are almost continually obliged to sleep together in a room in the female infirmary. The common debtors also complain that, for the want of a urinal in their respective galleries, they are obliged to resort to the sink or washing-place, which is used for the purpose of washing both their persons and their earthenware; that there are sometimes 80 or 90 prisoners at one time in their division, when they are so thronged, that owing to the want of ventilation and the filthy state of their apartments (see heads "Health," and "Evidence of J. M. W. and others"), the stench is insufferable; and that their airing-court is far too small for such numbers.

Female Debtors' side.—On the female debtors' side the airing-yard is separated only by an open iron fence from a yard or passage leading to a room which is occupied by some of the male turnkeys, who can through that fence converse with these female debtors; and some of the criminal prisoners can also see the female debtors through it whilst the latter take air and exercise.

Repairs, Security, Adaptation for Inspection, „ Employment, „ Separation. Temperature, Ventilation, Drainage, &c.

The whole prison is solidly built, and is in substantial repair. The number of prisoners confined in it in the course of a year is in general very considerable. During the year ending 1836 it was 3895. The daily influx and discharge of prisoners is therefore very great. But although the greatest number which it will contain, where more than one prisoner sleeps in one cell, is stated to be only 364, yet as the prisoners on the criminal side are continually being drained by the frequent Sessions at the Central Criminal Court, the General Quarter Sessions, the Adjourned Sessions (of which there are eleven in every year), and the Assizes, it is apprehended that the gaol is sufficiently capacious, on the present plan of associating the prisoners, for the criminal population, whose average terms of imprisonment do not exceed fourteen days; but for debtors it is decidedly not so, as will be seen in subsequent parts of this Report.

Under a strict discipline it is tolerably well adapted for the security of the prisoners' persons; but the immense number of visitors who are allowed access to the debtors must be attended with great risk to the sheriff, or his sureties.

In regard to security against fire, there is no fire-engine on the establishment. Its proximity to the Metropolis is its best protection.

There are scarcely any means of inspection. By day, the male criminal prisoners associate in their day-rooms, under the charge of one wardsman in each class (himself a prisoner). The female criminal classes are under the occasional supervision of the female turnkey, who, however, has various other duties to perform in different parts of the prison. The male turnkeys go only occasionally into the day-rooms; but they have no means of inspecting them, without being in the midst of the prisoners. By night, the wardsmen sleep in the galleries, but there is not a single officer to watch the interior of the building between the periods of locking and unlocking. There are indeed two night-watchmen, who perambulate the garden on the outside of the prison; but they have no other means of overhearing what passes in the galleries than are afforded by the windows in one of the ranges of cells, and in the staircases. These windows look into the garden, but they are so high that it would be impossible for the watchman to overhear conversation amongst the prisoners, carried on in a moderate tone, or in any tone, we conceive, so as to distinguish the speakers; whilst, on the other hand, the latter might by the same windows become aware of his approach. The chief duty of these watchmen, too, is to protect the sheriff, and their supervision of the criminal prison is merely incidental to that office. The only point of inspection is from the committee-room, the window of which commands a good view over the airing-yards.

I.

Metropolitan Gaols.
Horsemonger Lane.

The criminal prison, in the more extended sense of the term, is not well adapted for employment; although, perhaps, it may do very well for the employment of the classes of prisoners who under existing arrangements are confined in it, so long as they continue to work in bodies. The airing-rooms belonging to some of the classes are commodious, and easily convertible into separate cells.

This prison is not well calculated for the separation of prisoners, even so far as that object has already been attempted by the erection of separate cells, owing to the defects of construction which have been mentioned.

We do not believe that, without a total re-construction, it can be made either sufficiently commodious for its entire population, or well adapted either for separation, for employment, or for inspection.

Fires are used in the several day-rooms and infirmaries in winter. The criminal side is cleanly. The debtors' side is disgustingly filthy.

Several of the criminal prisoners complained that the former was damp and badly ventilated, but we are not satisfied that there was good ground for such complaint. The debtors' side is badly ventilated. The whole prison is, we believe, well drained.

System—Discipline.

Association.

Labour.

This gaol is conducted on the plan of association by day, and separation (if such it can be termed) at night. On the criminal side it is principally used for the reception of untried prisoners. Prisoners sentenced to hard labour are not sent here, and there are only three classes engaged at labour not severe; viz., the convicted classes, Nos. 3, 4, and 5. Class No. 3 (female transports) are generally employed in the wash-house and laundry, in doing the washing of the prison. Classes Nos. 4 and 5 pick oakum, under the charge of a wardsman, and the occasional supervision of a turnkey, in the day-room of class No. 4. There are no regular hours of labour, but each individual of these two classes is expected to pick three pounds per diem. If a prisoner find it difficult, or if he fail to do so much, it appears that compulsion is seldom resorted to, unless he positively "strikes" or refuses to work. The earnings are placed to the credit of the county fund. The profits on picking oakum for the year ending Michaelmas, 1836, amounted to 16*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*, and for the preceding year (in which labour was first introduced) to about 15*l.* Labour here is regarded as a punishment, as undoubtedly it will be wherever prisoners associate. The seven classes of untried prisoners associate in their respective day-rooms; each class is under the charge of a wardsman (himself a prisoner). By these the entire day is spent in idleness.

All the prisoners take their meals together in their day-rooms. They may at all times by day converse freely, provided they are not boisterous or noisy, and do not use improper language. It is the duty of the wardsmen to preserve good order. Besides the many inducements which wardsmen have in all cases to relax the discipline, they have in this prison, we think almost without exception, admitted their inability, under various circumstances (viz., when the classes are very full, or they have some very depraved individuals under their charge, &c.) to enforce their authority. In each class, the prisoners fluctuate continually between 5 and 20. The governor states that the wardsmen make few rep three stories are call

It is scarcely necessary to deduce any inferer ng-rooms. So nume s, to show how extensively the evils of contamination must be generated ny of them are where the means of intercourse between prisoners of every variety and degree that in th pravity are such as have been described. Some idea of the fact may be formed from a perusal of the examinations of the wardsmen, but it will readily be conceived how partially and faintly the truth is there delineated.

Visitors.

Prisoners convicted of felony are permitted to see visitors under a written order of a visiting magistrate, between the hours of twelve and two; males on Wednesdays, females on Tuesdays. Prisoners committed for trial or re-examination, or for want of sureties, and convicted misdemeanants, are permitted to see their friends between twelve and two every day (Sundays excepted). And all persons "demeaning themselves properly" have free access to the debtors from 9 until 6 between Lady-day and 15th May, from 9 until 7 between 15th May and 15th August, from 9 until 6 between 15th August and Michaelmas-day, and from 9 until 3 between Michaelmas-day and Lady-day.

Visitors to the criminal prisoners are admitted at a double iron grating at the extremities of the several airing-yards. Between the gratings there is a passage, in which an officer always stands between the visitors and the prisoners. Nevertheless prohibited articles are often attempted to be thrown over, and no doubt these attempts sometimes succeed. We found some tobacco in a hat belonging to a prisoner in one of the day-rooms. Visitors to the debtors are admitted into their rooms, and these are not unfrequently of a very improper character.

The keeper complains of the inconvenience and moral evil resulting from the immense number of visitors to the debtors. In summer, they are often as many as 1000 in a day. Search is made whenever they are suspected of introducing prohibited articles; but no sufficient scrutiny can possibly be maintained over such vast numbers. With so few officers, in nine cases out of ten, the utmost vigilance can be of little use. The consequence is, that the regulations of the Gaol Act are almost nugatory; and spirits, wine, beer, and other prohibited articles are constantly conveyed into the prison. Females bring these under their petticoats, and in various other ways. Female visitors, if suspected, are searched by the matron or female turnkey; but the multifarious occupations of these officers will admit of but very little time for this very necessary part of their duty.

Bad characters are not (knowingly) admitted, unless related to the prisoners. But what means can there be of ascertaining relationship amongst so many?

Criminal prisoners are here for so short a time, that the effect of imprisonment on them cannot be properly estimated.

Money.

All prisoners are allowed the possession of money without restriction.

Letters.

All written intercourse between prisoners (debtors excepted) and their friends is subjected to the inspection of the governor, who communicates to or withholds from the prisoners all or any parts of the same, at his discretion. This is the only restriction on writing and receiving letters.

Books and Newspapers.

On the criminal side, the rule is that books are inadmissible without being first subjected to the approval of the chaplain. The matron, however, states that she occasionally gives books to the female prisoners. On the debtors' side, books and newspapers, as well on Sundays as other days, are admissible without restriction or examination.

Spirituous Liquors, Beer, Meat, Tobacco.

Spirituous liquors are inadmissible to all classes. Beer is not allowed to any of the criminal classes. One quart per man per diem is allowed to debtors who do not receive the county allowance. It is brought into the gaol by the servants of the publicans who supply it. It is delivered to the prisoners by these servants, over the railing of the airing-yards, in the presence of a turnkey, who keeps a daily written check of the quantity supplied to each individual, which check he afterwards destroys. These measures are wholly inadequate for the prevention of abuses, which are practised to a considerable extent between the debtors and their friends. Beer is sold on the debtors' side by prisoners, under circumstances which are by no means creditable to the government of the prison. It is a practice wholly subversive of the salutary requirements of the Gaol Act.—Vide examination of J. M. W. and others.

Untried criminal prisoners may receive food from their friends, in reasonable quantities, in the presence of an officer. Convicted prisoners are not allowed the same indulgence. Debtors may have it in any quantities, without restriction.

Tobacco in every shape, and in any quantity, is allowed to debtors, but not to criminal prisoners. The use of it by the latter is prevented by their being thoroughly searched on their admission, and by watching the visitors in the manner already mentioned, vide "Visitors." Visitors are frequently detected in their attempts to throw it over the fence, and the governor states that they may occasionally elude the vigilance of the officers. When detected, they are punished immediately by being sent away, and are debarred admission again, either for a given time, or during the whole term of imprisonment, according to circumstances. Tobacco is sold on the debtors' side by prisoners.—Vide examination of J. M. W. and others.

Gaming.

The debtors, after the hour of locking up, have occasionally been detected playing at cards and dominos. These articles, upon such occasions, have always been immediately seized and destroyed. On the criminal side, gaming has never been known to have taken place.

Improper Indulgences to Debtors.

This may be the proper place to mention, that the great indulgences allowed to debtors are productive of every species of disorder, intemperance, and debauchery.—Vide the governor's evidence, and the following extracts from his journal:—

Extracts from the Governor's Journal.

1836, March 3.—A man who visits Tomlinson, a master debtor, goes in and out very frequently in the course of the day, and I suspected him of bringing in spirits. To-day, by my directions he was searched, and in his great-coat pocket was found a bladder containing two or three quarts of ale. I have in consequence given directions to the turnkeys not to admit him in to the debtors again, but to allow him to see them at the lodge.

—— 26.—Mrs. Cooper, the wife of Frederick Fox Cooper (a master debtor), complained to me that an abandoned female was in the habit of visiting her husband in the gaol. I have therefore directed that the female be refused admittance.

—— 27.—Removed Frederick Fox Cooper (a master debtor) to the common debtors' side, for an assault upon William Clark, a fellow-prisoner.

April 8.—Removed William Parsons (a master debtor) to the common debtors' side, for quarrelsome behaviour and obscene language.

—— 19.—This afternoon I was called to the room of J. W. Morris (a master debtor), to quell a disturbance between Morris and his wife. I ascertained the quarrel to have originated in Morris receiving visits from a female servant whom Mrs. Morris had recently discharged, and who was at this time in the gaol. I immediately ordered her out, and directed that she should not again be admitted.

May 1.—Confined John Bradley (a debtor) in solitary confinement, for noisy and insolent behaviour.

—— 2.—Confined John Sanderson and John Wallington (two debtors) solitary, for noisy behaviour and drunkenness.

—— 4.—Confined Joseph Taylor (a debtor) solitary, for bad language.

—— 12.—A man detected in endeavouring to convey a quantity of ale in a bladder to the master debtors.

—— 25.—This evening, about nine o'clock, Moorton the turnkey discovered a female secreted in the room of Major Corbyn (a master debtor). I immediately ordered her out of the prison, and have given directions that she should not be again admitted.

June 27.—A female who visits Joseph Hart (a master debtor) was suspected of bringing spirits into the gaol, and by my directions the matron was sent for, and searched her. No spirits were found upon her, but secreted about her person was found a bottle of ale. I have therefore directed that in future she be not admitted beyond the iron railing in front of the debtors' yard.

—— 28.—The wife of Hanscombe Layton (a master debtor) was searched by the matron, and two bottles of ale found secreted about her person.

July 3.—Confined John Mortished (a debtor) solitary, for drunkenness and noisy behaviour.

August 8.—This evening, at ¼ past eight o'clock, I visited the master debtors' side of the gaol, and found George Hart, who had recently been confined there for debt, in a state of intoxication in one of the rooms. He was by my direction immediately taken out of the prison, and I have desired the turnkeys not to allow him to visit the gaol again.

—— 9.—I searched the person of James Truman, a boy aged 11 years, and found upon him a bottle containing spirits, which he stated he was conveying from his mother to Major Corbyn (a master debtor).

September 18.—Confined William Adams (a debtor) solitary, for drunkenness and bad language.

—— 23.—Confined Richard Brown (a debtor) solitary, for noisy behaviour and drunkenness.

September 24.—Confined George Brown (a debtor) solitary, for noisy and quarrelsome behaviour and bad language.

November 27.—This morning, between 3 and 4 o'clock, I was awoke by very noisy and riotous behaviour on the master debtors' side of the prison, and immediately visited the gallery from whence the noise proceeded. The debtors, on hearing my approach, retired hastily to their rooms, and locked the doors; and I was only in time to prevent Charles Jones from doing so; but upon search found John Scully and James Wigley secreted in the privy: all of whom I have confined apart from the other debtors, to be kept on bread and water only. After attending the morning service in the chapel, I sent for John Marsh and Henry Wilfoid (two master debtors), and from inquiries I made of them, I ascertained that John Miles Wannington was the principal person engaged in the disturbance. I have therefore confined him apart from the other debtors, to be kept on bread and water only.

December 20.—Walter Moorton, one of the turnkeys, detected a little boy about 8 years of age, son of Matthew Martin Brunatte, a master debtor, endeavouring to convey about a quart of gin into the prison. He was taken to Union Hall, and by the magistrates adjudged to pay a penalty of 10*l*., or be imprisoned seven days. As it was the second time to-day that the boy had been into the prison, I had no doubt but that Brunatte sent him for the spirits, and I have therefore removed him to the common side. On searching Brunatte's room, I found several bottles of beer, which he stated he had purchased from his fellow-prisoners.

1837, January 7.—Having received private information that some women who visit the common debtors were in the habit of secretly conveying a quantity of beer into the prison, I directed that the matron should be sent for, to search a female who visits Richard Burgess (a common debtor). This woman, previous to being searched, delivered up two bottles of beer; one of these she had secreted about her own person, the other under the clothes of a child which she carried in her arms. I have therefore refused her admittance.

Religious and Moral Instruction.

Chaplain's Duties.

Vide chaplain's examination.

Chapel.

The officers (except those on necessary duty) and all the criminal prisoners regularly attend Divine service. Few of the debtors do attend, it being left to their option. The cleaning of the prison in summer is done before, and in winter after chapel hours.

School.

Boys only receive instruction. All youths under the age of 15 are placed in a class by themselves, and all descriptions of delinquents are there mixed. They are taught to read by a wardsman (a prisoner) for about one hour every day. If sufficiently advanced, they read the Scriptures. The wardsman complains of the depravity of this class, and is of opinion that many of them commit petty thefts purposely to obtain admission into the prison, for the advantages it affords; their allowance of diet being equal to that of the men.—See examination of H. M.

Visitors affording Instruction.

There are none.

Moral Improvement.

The chaplain in his evidence says, "I am not aware that any advantage has resulted from the instruction given." . . . "I believe the prisoners generally in a moral point of view have not improved." The governor says, "I believe the prisoners become more depraved from being associated. I think that classification is of no use."

Health.

Surgeon, Examining, Cleansing, Fumigating, &c.

Vide surgeon's examination.

Infirmaries, Prevalent Diseases, &c.

Vide surgeon's examination. From the medical journal, it appears that 81 patients were admitted into the infirmaries during the year ending Michaelmas, 1836. This number comprised 16 cases of itch, 8 of ulcer, 7 of rheumatism, 5 of fever, 4 of consumption, 4 of gout, 4 of epilepsy, 3 of insanity, 3 of wounds, 3 of debility and age, 3 of catarrh, and 21 other cases. With respect to the latter, there was no instance of more than 2 cases of the same disease, and that number was chiefly made up of isolated cases. Of the cases of itch and ulcer, the two most numerous classes, not one originated within the gaol. The very short terms during which the prisoners generally are confined in this prison may, in a great measure, account for the few cases of sickness originating within it. The whole number of prisoners admitted to the gaol during the last year was 3895; and the sick being 81, the per centage was about 2½. The average number of days during which each individual remained on the sick-list was 6½.

Daily Washing of Prisoners.

The prisoners generally were cleanly in their persons. Both males and females wash at the open sinks in their respective yards. There is no stated allowance of soap, towels, or combs. Towels are supplied twice every week, according to the number of prisoners in each class, and soap and combs as often as they are required.

Prisoners' Linen and Bedding.

The prisoners' linen is washed in the gaol by the transports and other female prisoners on the criminal side. It is sent to the matron every Monday; and if the prisoners have no changes, they are supplied at the expense of the county. The bedding is also washed in the prison.—Vide "Diet, clothing, bedding."

Cleansing the Prison.

The walls, cells, rooms, and passages throughout are limewashed twice a-year, viz. in spring and autumn. The day-rooms, &c., on the criminal side are washed with water about twice every week. This division of the gaol was in a cleanly state. On the debtors' side a criminal prisoner, called the swabman, is sent to clean the passages in the master debtors' division about once a-week, for which he receives a wardsman's allowance; but no provision is made for washing or cleansing their rooms, or for cleansing any portion of the common debtors' side. Sometimes one or two of the common debtors will take upon themselves the office of swabs for the benefit of the extra allowance, but it is at their own option. The whole of the debtors' prison, except the females' apartments, is in a filthy state; the common debtors' side is disgustingly so. It appears that the walls, floors, beds, and bedding are swarming with lice, &c., in every part.—Vide examination of J. M. and others.

Air and Exercise.

All prisoners, from the time of unlocking to the period of locking up, are allowed free access to their airing-yards. Convicted prisoners, of course, have their labour to perform.

Diet, Clothing, Bedding.

Diet.

The allowance of diet is as follows:—Men, women, and boys, each, bread, 24 ounces daily; meat, 5¼ ounces, with 1 pint of soup 3 times a-week; gruel, 1 pint, with 1 pint of soup 3 times a-week.

The bread is good wheaten household bread, of a former day's baking. The soup is made from the clods and stickings of good ox beef without bone, thickened with Scotch barley, and vegetables from the prison garden. The meat is that from which the soup is prepared.—Vide Dietary Appendix, Return II., No. 18.

No distinction is observed in respect of sex or age, or tried or convicted criminal prisoners, or debtors. The majority of debtors, and many untried criminal prisoners support themselves. —Vide "System — Discipline," "Meat," &c. The amount paid to the county by their respective regiments for the subsistence of military prisoners, being deserters awaiting a route, is the usual allowance of 6*d.* per man per diem, which in the aggregate amounted last year to 4*l.* 8*s.*

The sick in the infirmaries of course receive such extra allowance as the surgeon in his discretion orders. The total cost of prison diet for the year ending September, 1836, was 658*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*

Clothing.

The great mass of the prisoners being confined for very short terms, it seems that they generally wear their own clothes; but when in need, they are supplied by the county, at such periods and with such articles as the keeper in his discretion sees fit. There is no periodical inspection. A regular account is kept of the supply and expenditure. No portion of the clothing is made in the prison. The average yearly cost is about 100*l.* The cost for the last year was 108*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.*

Bedding.

On the criminal side each prisoner has a separate bed. On the debtors' side each has a separate bed or hammock; but debtors may supply themselves with bed and bedding, or be accommodated with these articles, and with an apartment on the master debtors' side by paying 3*s.* 6*d.* a-week to the governor. The prison allowance is, to male debtors, 1 blanket and 1 rug; to female debtors, 2 blankets and 1 rug; to criminal prisoners, 2 blankets and 1 rug. The rugs and blankets are said to be washed at stated periods twice in every year, and more frequently if required, and to be shaken and aired in the yards twice a-week in summer. The bedding on the criminal side appears to be tolerably clean; on the debtors' side it is filthy, and swarms with lice.—Vide examination of J. M. W. and others. The cost of prison bedding for the last year was 29*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*

Offences in Prison, and their Punishments.

The usual prison offences are quarrelsome and noisy behaviour in the day-rooms, wilfully damaging the various articles supplied to the prisoners, insolence to the officers, misbehaviour at chapel, and, in the case of convicted prisoners, idleness and wilful mismanagement of their work. The wardsmen seldom report.

The punishments are, confinement in solitary or dark cells, on bread and water only, not exceeding three days (and see "Visitors.") Punishment by whipping is not inflicted. Irons have not been used during the time of the present keeper.

The punishments during the year ending Michaelmas, 1836, were altogether 221.—See Appendix, Return II., No. 15.

No female turnkey is appointed to the female debtors, who are attended by male officers.

The governor's emoluments received from the county, in addition to his salary, during the year ending Michaelmas, 1836, were £26. 1*s.* 8½*d.*, being an allowance for 23 days' attendance at assizes and sessions in the country, and the cost of 1½lb. of bread daily. He has also a residence in the gaol, and is allowed coals, candles, and washing. He further receives emoluments from individuals for copies of warrants, causes, &c., and for removing debtors under writs of habeas, and commissioners' orders, to the Judge's chambers, bankruptcy and insolvent courts, &c.; and he lets bedding to such of the master debtors as do not provide their own, at 3*s*. 6*d*. per week each. The governor's clerk, principal turnkey, matron, male and female turnkeys, and day and night watchmen, are allowed 1½lb. of bread daily, in addition to their salary and wages, the value of which, to each person, is £1. 18*s*. 8½*d*. per year. The principal turnkey, matron, and female turnkey, are allowed a residence within the gaol, with coals and candles. The male turnkeys and day watchmen also lodge within the gaol.

* The salary of this officer was increased from 63*l.* to 80*l.* per annum at the Michaelmas Sessions 1836.

Duties of Turnkeys.

The duties of the principal turnkey are, to superintend the delivery of food to the prisoners, to attend to the admission of prisoners' friends, and the general duties of the gaol during the necessary absence of the governor. One male turnkey is employed at the debtors' gate; another male turnkey at the entrance lodge: the two other male turnkeys are employed on the criminals' side. The two latter are frequently absent from the gaol on duty, in removing prisoners for trial to the assizes and sessions, Central Criminal Court, Insolvent Debtors' Court, and upon other duties. There are two day-watchmen, one of whom superintends the labour of the prisoners employed in picking oakum; the other is usually engaged in watching the airing-yards in the front of the criminals' side of the gaol. The other two watchmen perambulate the garden and grounds at night. The matron and female turnkey superintend the cooking and washing for the prison, and attend to the female criminal prisoners.

The matron and female turnkey sleep in the matron's house; there is, consequently, no internal supervision of the female criminal classes at night.

The only officers who reside out of the prison are, the chaplain, surgeon, clerk, and night-watchmen.

The officers appear too few for the heavy duties of the prison.

Having mentioned various acts of misgovernment, which are neither few nor unimportant, we are bound, in fairness to the keeper, to add that he did everything in his power to facilitate our inquiries; he did not deny the existence of these acts of misgovernment, or attempt, in any unfair or equivocal mode, to palliate them. He stated that (which, in point of fact, we believe to have been the truth) he had immense difficulties to contend with; owing chiefly to the inadequacy of the accommodation on the debtors' side; the great numbers of prisoners always confined there (a large majority of whom are of the commonest order, being committed under process from the Court of Requests); the prodigious influx of visitors to those prisoners; and the few officers allowed for discharging the multifarious duties of the prison.

Wardsmen.

There is a wardsman to each class. These are generally selected from class No. 5. One of the present wardsmen, however, is a transport. These clean the criminal side of the prison, as well as maintain order in their respective classes. A prisoner from the same class (a swab), is also selected to clean the lodge and receiving-rooms, and the passages in the common debtors' division of the debtors' side. Nurses for the infirmaries are also selected from the same class. All of them receive extra allowance of food.

In the day-room of class 5 we found, in the wardsman's box, six large pieces of white bread and a piece of bacon, which the wardsman said belonged to him. In the day-room of class 6 we found six earthenware jugs, four plates, twelve basins, one white loaf, four large pieces of bread, two tin coffee-pots, and one tin saucepan. The wardsman stated that the bread belonged to the prisoners; but that all the other articles belonged to himself, having been left there by former prisoners who had been discharged; and that they then became his, as a matter of privilege attaching to his office.

Miscellaneous.

Books, Registers, &c.

The following are the books, journals, &c., kept in this prison:—No. 1. Criminal commitment book; 2, Sheriff's debtors' book; 3, Courts of Requests' debtors' book; 4, Daily register of prisoners in custody; 5, Day-book, (in which is entered the removal of prisoners to the Insolvent Debtors' Court, and under writs of habeas corpus, orders of court, &c.); 6, Clothing-book; 7, Order-book for bread; 8, Distribution of bread book; 9, Order-book for meat; 10, A book in which is entered an account of fines paid by prisoners on discharge, and an account of cash received for maintenance of deserters awaiting a route; 11, A book containing an account of prisoners' earnings for picking of oakum; 12, Wages' book, magistrates' book, governor's journal, chaplain's journal, surgeon's journal, non-resident officers' book.

Prisoners committed under the Revenue Laws.

No difference is made in respect of prisoners committed under the revenue laws: they are confined on the criminal side, on the county allowance.

Recommendation for Pardon.

One prisoner only, in the course of last year, was recommended for pardon, on the ground of good behaviour.

Insane Prisoners.

There is no insane prisoner here.

Forwarding destitute Prisoners to their Parishes.

No means are taken to forward destitute prisoners on their discharge to their parishes, nor is any kind of relief afforded them.

Recommittals.

The number of prisoners confined in this prison, during the year ending Michaelmas, 1836, was 3895. Of these, 135 were in custody at the commencement of the year, and 1195 were debtors; so that 2565 prisoners were actually committed to the criminal side within the year—of which number, 215 had been committed before to this prison.

Effect of Imprisonment.

Owing to the very short terms during which the criminal prisoners are in custody, it is difficult to form any fair estimate of the effect of the imprisonment, either on the criminal population of the neighbourhood or on the minds of the prisoners. The chaplain is of opinion that the latter have not become better—the governor is of opinion that they have become worse by contamination.

Expenses of Prison.

The total expenses of the prison, for the year ending Michaelmas, 1836, were £3012. 7*s*. 10*d*.—See Appendix, Return 2, No. 23.

Examinations.

C. R., Prisoner, Criminal Side.

"I am in the 8th class. I was committed for trial 5th August last for housebreaking. The prisoners are allowed to talk: they talk freely. Those amongst us who get their living by plunder relate what they did out of prison, and use very bad language; but the fear of being locked up in dark cells prevents much quarrelling; but sometimes the prisoners do quarrel; they sometimes also steal from each other. During the first three months of my imprisonment I was not on the county allowance, but provided my own victuals, and was frequently robbed of them. I would prefer to be a wardsman, for the sake of the extra allowance: wardsmen have no other privilege that I am aware of. The cells smell close in the mornings. I have heard that Harley committed the Chipsted robbery, and was afterwards hanged for it; and that before the robbery he was in the 8th class, in which I now am."

C. G., Prisoner, Criminal Side.

"I am in the 8th class. I was committed for trial about a fortnight ago for buying stolen property. Talking is allowed amongst the prisoners, and they can converse in the galleries without difficulty. I should like to be a wardsman, because of the authority, and in order to prevent bad language."

J. J., Prisoner, Criminal Side.

"I am in the 8th class. I was committed for trial about six weeks ago for an assault with a stick on a female with whom I lived. I was first placed in class 8—afterwards in class 6—then removed back to class 8. The turnkeys visit the classes when they lock and unlock, and when they hear a noise. We are not allowed to talk after being locked up. We can plainly hear when the watchmen go their rounds at night. I should like to be a wardsman, for the sake of the extra allowance."

E. H., Prisoner, Criminal Side.

"I am in class 8. I was committed for trial about three weeks ago for stealing. The prisoners talk about what they have done out of prison, and how they did it. I think they learn in prison to be more clever, and become worse. They are not allowed to talk at night; but talking can be heard from cell to cell in the galleries. We can hear the watchman walking in the garden, and are aware of his approach. I should like to be a wardsman, for the sake of the extra food. We may have money, and some have it. The chaplain stays about five minutes in the morning when he visits our class."

J. T., Prisoner, Criminal Side.

"I am in class 8. I was committed on suspicion of sheep-stealing. I was here before, about four years ago. I was then in the 10th (boys') class. . We are allowed to converse, but not at night. I should like to be a wardsman, for the sake of the extra allowance."

P. R., Prisoner, Criminal Side.

"I am in class 6. I was committed for an assault about twelve weeks ago. I was first placed in the 5th class, and am now in the 6th. We are allowed to converse freely, if we don't make a noise. There is no talking at night: we could talk at night if we liked, but we don't. I would prefer being a wardsman."

W. L., Prisoner, Criminal Side.

"I am in class 6. I was committed about two months ago for an assault. We are allowed to converse; but there is very little conversation: the prisoners talk about their doings out of prison, and some boast of their adventures, and become more clever after a while. There is no stealing amongst ourselves in our class. I have no particular wish to be a wardsman, but would like the extra allowance. Serious prisoners cannot separate themselves from others."

J. L., Prisoner, Wardsman of Class 4.

"I was sentenced to two years' imprisonment for conspiracy, after I had been in prison for some months. I have been here two years and two months. I have been a wardsman twelve months. There are now four prisoners in my class—one for housebreaking, three for robbery; one of them, a boy, thirteen years of age, who has before been convicted, and imprisoned in different prisons twelve times by his own confession, and who, for that reason (he being so bad a boy), was placed here, and not with the other boys. Conversation is allowed by day, but not at night. When prisoners have an opportunity, they talk very improperly—use obscene and blasphemous language; they scoff at religion; they relate their bad deeds; become much worse: they hear of things they never dreamt of before; the boys especially become much more corrupt; they are insolent to the wardsmen and the older prisoners. If I were to complain of them, I should make myself disliked: the punishment is not a sufficient check on them. I must allow a good deal of what is said and done, or my life would be miserable. I am not afraid of personal violence; although the prisoners have often threatened me with it, if they should catch me out of the prison. Prisoners talk from cell to cell at night, although it is not allowed; but the watchman outside cannot hear them, but they can hear his approach very plainly. If there are not enough sleeping cells, the prisoners of my class are taken to other classes (whether felons or misdemeanants, tried or untried), and the different classes do then see each other. If ever money is introduced, it is put in tobacco; but I think it would be discovered. Each prisoner is obliged to pick 7½ bundles of junk; but if they do not pick so much there is no punishment for them. Low attorneys, or men practising as attorneys, greatly impose on the prisoners, and rob them by obtaining their money, pretending to defend them, and then never assist them. The water-closet often smells very bad. The prisoners in my class don't like the clergyman; but the strictness of the discipline prevents their treating him with disrespect. I think there is no punishment which is so much dreaded as solitary confinement. I prefer being a wardsman, on account of the privileges. If a prisoner is inclined to be serious he cannot separate himself from the others, nor read the Scriptures, without being jeered and scoffed at. Serious prisoners are called 'soap-board crawlers,' and other names. Stealing amongst the prisoners themselves is an every-day act."

J. H., Prisoner, Wardsman of Class 5.

"I have been here about seven weeks. My offence was an assault on a policeman. I have been here before for about a month. The prisoners talk about what they did out of prison, curse, swear, and use blasphemous language. There was once a fight (but it was imme diately checked by me). Prisoners in the fourth class, and in my class, pick oakum; three pounds per day is the quantity each man must do. The punishment for neglect or failure is solitary confinement; but I have not witnessed any punishments in such cases, unless a man "strikes" and altogether refuses work, which has sometimes happened, and then he has been punished. New comers find a difficulty at first in getting through the quantity, and then the governor does not punish. I prefer being a wardsman, for the extra allowance."

G. C., Prisoner, Wardsman of Class 6.

"I was sentenced to seven years' transportation for stealing pigs, and have been here three years and two months. There are 17 prisoners in my class; one for breaking the rules of the King's Bench; seven for assault; eight for riot; and one deserter waiting a route. There is much talking in my class, but not by night; very seldom any fighting; the strictness of the rules prevents it. I have known instances of stealing amongst the prisoners."

J. C., Prisoner, Wardsman of Class 7.

"I was sentenced to two years' imprisonment for conspiracy. I have been here two years and a half. I was in prison eight months before sentence. There are four prisoners in my class; two for stealing; one for burglary; one for highway robbery. I have had as many as 34 prisoners at one time; and when that has been the case, those who could not be provided with separate cells were placed together in a strong room. The prisoners talk over their adventures, boast about them, and become worse. They use obscene and blasphemous language; and if I turn my back, or am absent for a short time, they gamble at toss penny, and often steal from each other: it is impossible, when the class is full, to prevent it. Those who support themselves may have any articles they wish, subject to the gaol rules. If any provisions or other things, such as jugs, &c., are left here by prisoners after their discharge, it is considered my privilege to have them; at least that is the case in my class. Sometimes I lend the articles so left to other prisoners; but it is rarely they are left. Some of the prisoners have threatened that if ever they found me outside they would pay me off: no personal attack has ever been made on me. The want of employment is felt by the prisoners. Any attempt to instruct them would be laughed at. It would be impossible for a prisoner inclined to be serious to separate himself from the others; he would be scoffed at, and laughed at, and otherwise annoyed. The restriction upon seeing friends and receiving letters without their being first seen by the governor, is felt as a severe punishment. At night the prisoners can hear the watchman going round the garden very plainly. The cells smell heavy at the time of unlocking."

G. G., Prisoner, Wardsman of Class 8.

"I was sentenced to two years' imprisonment for conspiracy, and have been here 21 months. There are two prisoners in my class; one for housebreaking, and one for stealing. The prisoners greatly vary in number; I sometimes have 25 at one time. Every description of bad language is used; I cannot always prevent it, especially when the class is full. I have heard that the robbery of a house at Chipstead was planned (which in the cant language of prisoners, is termed 'putting up') in this class, by two men (Harley and Betser) who had been here together; that the robbery was afterwards effected (viz., on the 1st September, 1835). Harley was convicted and hanged for it on 9th March, 1836; Betser was acquitted. I was informed of this by a man named Hill, who was tried and sentenced to death for being concerned in the robbery, and who came here under a commuted sentence. Tobacco is sometimes thrown over the double grating where prisoners see visitors; it is almost always detected. The prisoners don't complain of the want of employment. The cells are close in the morning: a better ventilation is wanted. The restriction upon the receiving of letters is felt as a punishment."

M. H., Prisoner, Wardsman of Class 9.

"I was sentenced to six months' imprisonment for bigamy. In my class there are three prisoners; one for breach of trust; one for buying stolen property; one (a boy of 15) for stealing. They use every sort of bad language. A prisoner once threatened to ill-use me if he should meet me out of prison. That was for reporting, and punishment which followed. The language is horrible. I was once a prisoner in class 5, where it was so bad that I requested the governor to remove me to this class, which he did. I have been in classes 4, 5, and 8; 5 is the worst class—8 is the best. I prefer being a wardsman. I do not frequently report; it would subject me to great inconvenience and annoyance. Prisoners seriously disposed cannot well separate themselves from other prisoners; but in class 9, some of the sleeping cells are on the basement adjoining the day-room, and to which such persons in that class might perhaps go. In class 5 it would be quite impossible for a well-disposed person to retire and be by himself. Talking is not allowed at night; but the prisoners do talk in each gallery among themselves, and from gallery to gallery; and they can and do talk from class to class, through the doors which separate the galleries of the different classes. I observed this in classes 4, 5, 9, and 10. This talking takes place when they clean the stair-cases. There are key-holes in the doors. More Testaments and Prayer Books, if not Bibles, are required. The prisoners may have whatever money they can be supplied with, but cannot spend it."

H. M., Prisoner, Wardsman of Class 10 (Boys).

"I am 57 years of age, and was sentenced to two years' imprisonment for conspiracy. I have been here 20 months. In my class there are now very few prisoners. My class is intended for prisoners of about the age of 15 and under. The largest number I have had at one time has been 16. This is the only class to which instruction is given. I teach the boys reading for about one hour every day. I make them read the Scriptures. They talk over the bad deeds they did out of prison. If they can catch an opportunity, they learn of each other, and become worse; and I am often obliged to get them locked up for it. They use very gross and blasphemous language; the older boys greatly corrupt the younger. Four were locked up last night for making a disturbance. It would be much better if they could be kept separate. They have the same allowance of food as men; and I believe many of them try to get here by committing petty thefts, because they live better than when out of prisons

When the class is full, those who cannot have sleeping-cells in this class sleep in one of the galleries of Class 9. The cells are sometimes damp in damp weather."

J. M. W., G. B., J. O., J. P., J. B., T. R., T. A., H. T., M. M. B., T. W., B. P., J. D., Debtors' Common Side.

The evidence of J. M. W. and others, whose names are in the margin, had been given by the greater number of them individually, in substance to the following effect; but from the contradictory statement of James Larter, the debtors' turnkey, in reference to the filthy condition of the debtors' prison, it was considered prudent to meet that statement with as complete a denial as could be given; therefore the examination of these prisoners was subsequently taken in the presence of each other. Larter's evidence having been first read over to them, they stated as follows:—

"We are allowed books, and newspapers, and tobacco, in every shape. Tobacco is sold in the prison by prisoners. There is much smoking, and it is a wholesome practice in our case on account of the filth of the prison. All books are admitted without examination. There is no interdiction upon newspapers on Sundays. We have candle-light at night, and sit up as late as we like. Prisoners sell beer to each other. Those who support themselves are allowed each to purchase a quart per day. Those who receive the gaol allowance are not allowed to have beer brought into the prison. Some of the prisoners who support themselves get their allowance brought in, and if they cannot drink it, or prefer not to do so, or if they cannot pay for it when brought in, they bottle it up and afterwards sell it, or part with it to some friend, who bottles it up and sells it to the other prisoners at an advanced price of sixpence per bottle. Prisoners on the county allowance, who are not allowed to have beer brought into the prison, may buy it from other prisoners who sell it in this way. This is attended with great injustice to prisoners who are on the county allowance, and who are least able to bear it. They might purchase it at the gates for 4*d.* per quart, but they pay nearly treble that price for it in the prison, inasmuch as two quarts will fill about three bottles. Another disadvantage to them is that less than an entire bottle cannot be procured, whereas many might be satisfied with a pint or half a pint, which would cost a penny or twopence. It also enables prisoners who are not on the county allowance to procure a greater quantity within the prison than they are allowed by the regulations of the magistrates to procure at the prison gates, and it tends therefore to promote drinking and other bad habits."

"Our division of the prison is extremely filthy: no sufficient means are used for washing and cleansing it; it is whitewashed once in every six months. Two prisoners (called swabs) are appointed to cleanse the passages, privies, and sinks, and receive an extra allowance of provisions for it; but it is a voluntary office, and there are no means of enforcing the performance of it. It is their duty to do it twice every week. They have not done it for the last six weeks; and they complain that they have no brooms, mops, or flannels, and therefore we are obliged to do it ourselves as well as we can. No means are employed for cleansing our rooms, except the periodical lime-washing. Whenever new prisoners are brought in, they are supplied with blankets and rugs which have been used by prisoners who have been discharged. These articles are so served to many prisoners in succession, not only on their admission, but frequently afterwards when they require a change of bedding. We are afraid of changing, for we should probably be worse off. The blankets and rugs, as well as the sacking, are foul, and swarming with lice, which may often be seen running over the walls and floors and about the persons of many of us. The greater part of the prison is in so horrible a condition that it is impossible for us either to keep ourselves or our apartments decent. When the prison is more than full, many common debtors sleep together in a room in the female infirmary, and in the morning return to the common debtors' side. In the infirmary the lice are generated more than in the prison. We have made complaints, but they are not attended to. If a man complains, he is considered litigious; he becomes a marked man; and too often, for a very trifling offence, is exposed to the risk of being placed in solitary confinement on bread and water. The governor does not properly visit our part of the prison."

"There is no dust-hole or other place to receive the ashes and other filth of various kinds, which are piled up in heaps on one day, and carried away on the following day; but some of it is left for want of proper sweeping and washing, and it spreads over the whole prison."

"There is no urinal in the galleries, and the sinks are used in common as urinals, and for cleaning and washing our persons and our earthenware."

"The covered walk and airing-court are much too small for the number of prisoners."

"The clergyman never visits us, and the surgeon comes only when sent for."

"We think it also a ground of complaint that such of the prisoners as are on the county allowance, and cannot afford wholly to maintain themselves, are not permitted to have any extra allowance of food of any kind supplied by their friends."

John Bradley, one of the last Examinants.

"In reference to his individual case John Bradley further stated:—I am the oldest prisoner on the common debtors' side, having been here two years and eleven months. In May 1834 there was a general change of rugs. There has been no general change since then. Clean blankets, however, are supplied to all the prisoners on every 1st of October. The prisoners do not use blankets during the summer months. I have retained my rug ever since I was admitted. I have not been offered, nor have I requested, to have another; for my case is a miserable exception to the instances mentioned by the other examinants. When I came here there were no lice, or very few, in my bedding, and I have contrived, by much care, to keep my room and bedding tolerably free of them; and if I were to exchange my rug, dirty as it is, it would certainly be the means of bringing them into my apartment. There are sometimes 80 or 90 prisoners, and when we require air and exercise we are thronged together, and the stench throughout the prison in warm or close weather is almost intolerable. During the two years and eleven months of my imprisonment I have never seen the clergyman; and I do not believe he ever comes into the debtors' prison."

R. R., R. C., Swabs.

"We are debtors on the common side, and have been appointed to cleanse this division of the prison, for which we receive an extra allowance of food. It is our duty to clean the passages, yard, sink, and privies, twice a-week. We have not done it for the last six weeks. The debtors have greatly complained; but we cannot procure any mops, brooms, or flannels from the governor. We have asked Larter, the turnkey, almost daily during the last three weeks for these articles. He has always said that there were none made. We have asked the governor himself once (about a week ago), and he said he would give out some; and we received them a day or two afterwards."

J. F., J. H., J. C., J. H., Debtors, Masters' Side.

"Beer is sold in the same manner as on the common debtors' side. Many are glad to sell their beer, and make a profit in this way. There is no restriction on tobacco, books, or newspapers. The same practice prevails, in reference to these articles, as on the common debtors' side."

"Our side of the prison generally is very dirty. A criminal prisoner (a felon) is employed by the governor to clean the passages twice a week; he is sometimes (though rarely) assisted by another man, who is also a prisoner. It is no part of their duty to clean the rooms. Upon an average they do not clean the passages more than once a week. Complaints have been made to the governor. He has promised to attend to these complaints, but has not yet done so."

"After locking up there is no urinal which can be resorted to, and then the sink must be used both as a urinal and a washing-place. There is no kitchen, and we are put to great inconvenience in consequence."

"The beds are generally clean, and on that account it is an advantage to be on this side of the prison upon any terms. But we complain of the high price which we pay, viz., 3*s*. 6*d*. per week. A man must pay a week in advance immediately on entering the prison; and, if he has not the money in his pocket, he is forthwith turned over to the common side, however respectable he may be."

R. B., the only female Turnkey.

"I am the female turnkey, and, under the matron, have charge of all the female classes, (viz., Classes 1, 2, and 3.) In Class 1 there are three prisoners remanded for re-examination: two for stealing, one on a charge of felony; one of them is a girl of eleven years old. There is no check upon conversation, if carried on quietly and decently. In the absence of the matron and myself, which frequently happens, the prisoners are under no sufficient restraint. At night they sleep in separate cells in their galleries. Conversation is not then allowed; but there is nothing whatever to prevent it. I sleep in the matron's house. The matron and myself are absent from all the female prisoners at night, but within call. In Class 2 there are five prisoners for trifling offences. In this class the largest number I have had at one time has been 30. The prisoners who support themselves may have what money they can obtain from their friends, but they cannot spend it. Those who receive the gaol allowance perform the county washing in the house of the matron, but receive no remuneration for it. In Class 3 there are two prisoners (transports); one for illegal pledging, the other for robbery. There being no galleries or sleeping-rooms belonging to this Class, they sleep in the upper gallery of Class 2 (misdemeanants), and in going to and from their own day-room and sleeping-cells of Class 2 they are obliged to pass through the day-room of Class 2; and, as often as this occurs, the prisoners of those different classes can, and do, see each other; but I always conduct the transports through, and strictly prohibit intercourse; and the one class is invariably locked up before the prisoners of the other class pass into the gallery. The day-room of Class 3 (transports) is the smallest and most inconvenient in the prison. Two prisoners were punished last week for talking from one of the upper galleries with prisoners in one of the lower galleries. The two transports are constantly engaged, from locking until unlocking, in the matron's house, one as a cook, the other in the wash-house or laundry. One of them has been so employed nearly two years, and is very valuable for her services."

Mrs. J. D., Matron.

"I am the matron. The female turnkey sleeps in my house. At night we are both away from all supervision of the prisoners. In addition to the two transports employed in my house, I occasionally employ other criminal prisoners in washing. I have at this time six felons engaged in the wash-house, besides the two transports. In the garden prisoners are sent to work from all classes, whether felons or misdemeanants, tried or untried. The two transports are often employed in washing the pavement in front of my door, and must go into the garden for that purpose; but I always make them do that work before the hour when the men go into the garden. In the kitchen, the windows of which look into the garden, I repair the bedding, and prepare articles for the infirmaries. The three nurses of the infirmaries (male prisoners, either felons or misdemeanants) come to that kitchen at all hours of the day between unlocking and locking up, for these articles for the infirmaries. I keep the key of the fore door, and it is never out of my hands. I never allow the transports, or other prisoners, to go to the windows, except when absolutely necessary; but they repair the bedding in the kitchen. I watch them as much as I can, and always personally deliver the articles to the nurses. I admit that I am necessarily much in the female infirmary; and sometimes, when the patients are numerous, half my time is spent there. The receiving-room of the female infirmary is occasionally occupied as a sleeping-room by debtors from the common side. It has been so occupied of late for several months together. It is always so used when the common debtors' prison is very full; and this is frequently the case. In the female infirmary all classes are mixed, felons, tried and convicted, misdemeanants, debtors, and children. The result is that very bad language is used, and the prisoners no doubt become more corrupted; the misdemeanants are generally the most abandoned class."

"The turnkey, Larter, supplies bedding to the new-comers without applying to me; and he does, I believe, give them such as has been before used by other prisoners. Whenever it is foul, he comes to me for clean bedding; and I admit that the bedding which he brings me to be changed is always very filthy: in fact, it is always filled with lice. He has never brought me any which was not in that condition. It is not my duty to inspect the bedding; it is the duty of Larter to examine it, and to make complaints when necessary. I have seen lice crawling in the infirmary. Prisoners go from the infirmary to the common debtors' side, and carry the lice in their clothes. The rugs are changed when there is any complaint. When Larter considers them dirty, he brings them to me. I am not aware whether there has been any general supply of rugs since May 1834. There are no stated periods for changing them. I generally find lice in the rugs when they are sent to me. If it were my duty to look after the men they should have a more frequent supply. There are means for cleansing all prisoners on their admission. It is the duty of the turnkey to see all prisoners cleansed on their admission, whether debtors or others; but it is never done with debtors."

George Stevens, Watchman.

"I am one of the day watchmen. There is an immense number of visiters daily to the debtors' prison. These visiters are not searched unless suspected; when searched they are frequently detected bringing into the prison beer, wine, and spirits. Of the different classes of prisoners the boys are much the most noisy and quarrelsome: they are in all respects by far the worst class. Prisoners steal from each other money and bread. A sovereign and a half were stolen a short time since in Class 8."

Henry Taverner, Watchman.

"I am one of the watchmen. I also look after the oakum-pickers; and I watch the visiters to the criminal prisoners at the iron railing during visiting hours. Sometimes loose characters are admitted. Visiters are allowed to see only one prisoner at a time. I have, in the course of my time, taken up a good deal of tobacco, which has been thrown over the fence; it is impossible to prevent its being thrown over. If the prisoners are not constantly overlooked, they quarrel. The boys are worse than the men; they are punished frequently. They swear: and use very bad language."

Benjamin Elmes, Turnkey.

"I am a turnkey, and am also clerk of the chapel. I have been here sixteen years. I unlock the male criminal prisoners in the morning, and see that they wash, and that the cells and airing-yards are properly cleaned. I receive any complaints which are made from the wardsmen in the course of the day, and I lock up the male prisoners at night. Bad characters are unavoidably admitted sometimes; but when known, unless related to the prisoners, they are excluded. We have not the means of knowing them in all cases. If the visiters have been prisoners here they are not admitted within twelve months after their discharge: but all visiters are so closely watched that no bad conduct or improper conversation can pass unnoticed; and when visiters offend in these respects they are turned out of the prison. A visiter cannot go to more than one class at each visit. Talking at night is not allowed; complaints of it, however, are made by the watchmen perhaps once or twice a-week; it generally occurs before nine o'clock at night; the governor remonstrates the first time, and for a repetition he punishes. I think the prisoners can hear the watchman's approach. Talking is allowed by day. The prisoners use bad language, and it is impossible to restrain them. The placing of prisoners together leads to corruption, especially of the young: I know it to be the case. Prisoners steal amongst themselves. In hot weather, and when the prison is full, the galleries smell very bad for want of more air. Punishments frequently take place amongst the boys; their class is the worst. The bedding is washed whenever it is found to be dirty; and there is a general change twice every year."

James Larter, Turnkey.

"I am turnkey on the debtors' side; I have been here seven years; I also assist in unlocking the felons. I admit visiters at the outer gate; there are 600 visiters, and sometimes many more, daily to the debtors. All persons are admitted who do not demean themselves badly. As a general rule, bad characters are not admitted to the debtors, unless known to be related to the prisoners; and then they are permitted to see them at the bars or iron grating of their airing-yard. So many visiters come here that it is impossible to prevent their introducing forbidden articles, although we do all we can to prevent it. If we were to examine everybody the place would be blocked up. They often bring in wine, beer, spirits, and other things. The matron and female turnkey, who examine the females, are fully occupied in their classes and in the female infirmary. The debtors are not locked into their rooms at night, but can go from room to room in each gallery. Books, papers, tobacco, and smoking, are allowed as much as they like: there is no examination about these things. Debtors who support themselves may sell beer; we cannot prevent that: they sell tobacco also."

"The bedding is used without being washed for different persons, one after another, and it is in a fit state. It is my duty to examine the bedding of the debtors: when foul, and not fit to be used again, I take it to the matron, and it is exchanged for clean bedding. I am not aware that any complaints of uncleanliness have ever been made: the bedding is perfectly clean at this time. The prisoners (debtors) do complain of its being lousy sometimes, and it is then exchanged for clean bedding. There are two swabs for cleaning the upper and lower galleries (passages, &c.,) of the common debtors' side, and they do it every day: I see it done—it is part of my duty; sometimes they may neglect it. The rooms, passages, and bedding are all clean at this time, and there is no cause whatever for complaint: the swabs are very regular in doing their duty."

"A short time ago there was a great disturbance on the master-debtors' side. They had been drinking, and the governor was called up in the middle of the night. He found some of the prisoners running about and disturbing the others. He brought them away, and had them locked up; and the following day they were removed to the common debtors' side. The debtors have lights at night, and may sit up as long as they like. They play at dominoes and cards: those articles are not allowed, and are seized when discovered; but no regular search is ever made for them; they are smuggled into the prison.

Mr. Robt. Malcolm, Surgeon.

"I am surgeon of the prison, and am also engaged in private practice. I have no stated times for visiting the prison; I attend generally once a-day, in winter, at noon—in summer, earlier. I have no stated periods for visiting the prisoners who are well; but I see them all (except debtors) about once a-week. In fact, I see them whenever I visit the prison: I cause it to be made known throughout that I am in attendance. My duties in the prison occupy me, on an average, from half an hour to an hour daily. I never visit the debtors, unless they are sick or require to see me. I examine all criminal prisoners on their admission, and, if necessary, cause them to be cleansed in a bath and their apparel to be fumigated before they are passed to their wards. The process of cleansing and fumigating is not observed with all criminal prisoners: it is not in all cases necessary. Our mode of fumigating is, to immerse the apparel in boiling water and salt. As a general rule, I neither examine the debtors nor cause them to be cleansed, or their apparel to be fumigated: perhaps I am required by the Act to do so, and also to visit them as well as criminal prisoners. I do require that their persons shall be cleansed, if it is reported to me to be necessary; but, as a general rule, I do not examine myself to see that it is necessary. The magistrates are aware that I do not visit them when well. They have hinted that they do not wish me to force myself upon them. I always visit the prisoners on the criminal side when under punishment."

"I think the prison is generally healthy, judging from the results; although the locality does not appear favourable for health. The prisoners are healthy now. The influenza prevails only to a slight extent; but it is certainly not attributable to any circumstances immediately connected with the prison. I can scarcely say what disease is the most prevalent here—perhaps itch may be said to be so; but no particular disease has prevailed to any extent. I have invariably observed that long imprisonment has produced scurvy; during the two years that I have been here I have had four cases of scurvy. In each case it appeared after eight months' imprisonment, without reference to the seasons. I think the clothing is sufficient; when not, I direct more. The diet is wholesome and sufficient. Circumstances may arise to render necessary an increase; it is my duty to attend, and I do attend, to such circumstances. I think the bedding is sufficient."

"I keep a regular journal, which is always laid before the magistrates at their Quarter Sessions, and signed by the chairman. I write in it all orders for spirits, &c., for the sick."

"All classes associate in the infirmaries on the criminal side. This must necessarily lead to contamination. It would no doubt be desirable to separate the classes. The nurses are taken from the prisoners, and selected on account of character."

Rev. Wm. Mann, Chaplain.

"I am about 77 years of age. I was appointed chaplain to this prison in 1804. I read prayers daily. I expound the Scriptures on Wednesdays; on Sundays I read prayers twice, and preach once. All the officers, except those engaged at the gates, very regularly attend the chapel both on Sundays and week-days. The chapel hours commence at nine in the morning and at two in the afternoon on Sundays, and at nine in the morning on week days. On Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays, and Saturdays, I visit all the classes, infirmaries, and every part of the prison. I never visit the debtors unless sent for by them: it is no part of my duty to visit them. It never has been done, and I am under no obligation to do it. I should be insulted. They are the worst class in the prison—the most immoral; and they become more depraved by their associating together whilst here. I do not think their being the most depraved class is any reason why I should give them my assistance; in fact, it ~~would be~~ impossible to visit them. I don't see how the chaplain could do so and also discharge his duty to the criminal prisoners. It would be better to have a distinct establishment altogether for debtors—a separate chapel, and a distinct set of officers—a distinct prison altogether. I believe no arrangement short of that will ever do. I am at all times accessible to the prisoners. I always feel happy to give them my assistance. I visit prisoners under sentence of death never less than twice, and, as the time of execution approaches, generally three times daily. I scarcely leave the prisoner after the warrant for execution arrives, or, if I do, my curate attends for me. I visit the prisoners whilst assembled together in bodies in their classes; but I always inquire if there are any new prisoners, and, if there are, I never fail to address such individually at least once in the presence of the whole class. I visit prisoners in solitary confinement; I cannot say whether such visits are beneficial. I think bad characters plan mischief whilst separated. My duties in the prison occupy about an hour daily. No books are introduced to criminal prisoners unless first subjected to my approval."

"In addition to the prison duties, I am one of the chaplains of St. Saviour's, Southwark, where I preach once on Sunday; and am chaplain to the Fishmongers Almshouses, where I read prayers twice on week days, but do no Sunday duty."

"I think the associating of prisoners leads to contamination and moral depravity; but I think employment would remedy the evil in some measure at least. I believe the best thing which can be done would be to give prisoners employment. I do not see any necessity for separation and labour too. Upon consideration, I think labour in separate cells would be preferable."

"I keep a journal, and I make daily entries therein. I keep no character book. There is an order of sessions that my curate shall be allowed to read that portion of the service which my sight will not allow me to read. The prisoners are supplied with Bibles and other religious and moral books; each class has two, and sometimes a larger number of Bibles, two Testaments, two Prayer Books, and a number of tracts. I do not give tracts to the classes committed for re-examination; those prisoners remain but a very short time; they are here to-day, and gone to-morrow."

"We have no school in the prison."

"The boys (Class 10) alone receive any instruction; they are taught to read after chapel for about an hour. The women, if they wish it, may have cards given them, from which they may learn letters and syllables; but they are not obliged to use them, nor are they superintended for the purpose of being instructed. I advise them to read to each other. I am not aware that any advantage has resulted from the instruction given either to the boys or women. The prisoners behave well at chapel."

"The prisoners on their first admission are very depraved; the misdemeanants (I mean the bail and fine classes) are by far worse than the felons. I often find them swearing and using bad language when they think they are unobserved. The felons may be very bad—perhaps they plot and contrive plans for future depredations; it is beyond my power to say—but if they do it, they do it quietly and in secret; whereas I find the misdemeanants noisy, quarrelsome, riotous, &c. I believe the prisoners generally, in a moral point of view, have not improved. I have sometimes entertained hopes that they have improved, but I almost fear I may have deceived myself."

Mr. John Keene,
Governor.

"The criminal prisoners in their respective classes do freely associate and converse by day; in each gallery they can converse from cell to cell; they can see each other from the opposite bull-holes; and they can converse from the upper to the lower galleries. From the galleries of Class 4 (transports) the prisoners can converse with other prisoners in the galleries of Class 5 (misdemeanants), and from the galleries of Class 9 (untried felons) prisoners can converse with other prisoners in the galleries of Class 10 (boys), through the wooden doors which separate these several galleries, whilst prisoners of the different classes are engaged in cleaning the staircases, to which they have access for about three hours each day. But Classes 4 and 5, being engaged in picking oakum in their day-rooms, have not the same opportunities for conversation, &c. as Classes 9 and 10. The wardsmen clean the staircases of Classes 4 and 5. Class 3 (female transports) sometimes sleep in the gallery of Class 2 (female misdemeanants). All classes are occasionally mixed together in the garden; in the matron's house; in the infirmaries; and female children, for whom there is no separate class, are mixed with all classes of female delinquents. The matron necessarily spends much of her time in the female infirmary; and the female turnkey is much engaged with the three female classes; and frequently when the matron and female turnkey are so engaged, the prisoners in the matron's house must necessarily be left by themselves; but they are always locked in, and I believe all other possible precautions are taken to prevent improper communications from without; but the female prisoners in the matron's house might, through the windows, see, and also receive letters and communications from persons in the garden. The male nurses of the three infirmaries go through the garden to the front door of the matron's house at all hours of the day for various things for the infirmary. I am no advocate for classification; but if it does possess any advantages, I must admit that, from the opportunities which prisoners have here, owing to the construction of the prison, for carrying on communication, it would be impossible to prevent all the evils which usually result from an indiscriminate association of prisoners, without having officers in every passage."

"The visiters to the debtors are very numerous, and it is not too much to say that in summer they amount to between 600 and 1000 per day. It is impossible to maintain a proper scrutiny over such vast numbers with so few officers. I have only two female officers, and they have enough to do elsewhere. One woman would be required during all her time at the gate alone, and would scarcely be sufficient. Wine, beer, spirits, cards, and other prohibited articles are doubtless admitted frequently to the debtors. We search whenever we suspect, and frequently detect offenders. The debtor prisoners, who are not on the gaol allowance, are permitted to buy beer and other provisions, subject to certain restrictions. It is a common practice with them to save beer so bought, and afterwards to sell it to other prisoners at a profit. I have not tried to check the practice; I have not the means, on account of the difficulties I should have to contend with. Prisoners who do receive the gaol allowance are not permitted to have beer and provisions brought into the prison; but still they may, and no doubt do, purchase these things in the prison, and thereby violate the gaol regulations, not only by procuring what they are not entitled to have at all, but by obtaining larger quantities than such regulations admit of. No doubt it is a practice which leads to dissolute habits and great depravity. There are frequent disturbances and broils among the debtors, occasioned by their getting drunk in this way, and smuggling prohibited articles into the prison. I visit the common debtors' side whenever complaints are made—perhaps, on an average, once a month; but I never go merely for the purpose of inspecting the prison or prisoners. I believe that, by the Gaol Act, I am required daily to see all my prisoners, whether debtors or criminals. I admit that I have committed a breach of the third regulation in not having daily visited the debtors."

"I believe that the 17th regulation of the Act, as to examining, cleaning, and fumigating, applies to debtors; but I do not examine debtors with a view to cleansing their persons or fumigating their apparel. If a debtor is represented to be dirty, or to require clean clothing, he is washed and the clothing supplied him. Generally, prisoners who go to the common debtors' side are of a low description and in a dirty state. Visiters to such persons are chiefly of the same description; filth is thus brought into the prison. A prisoner contracted the venereal disease a few days ago from a female visiter. The magistrates rarely visit the debtors' prison unless complaints are made. The turnkey (Larter) ought to see that the swabs do their duty. I admit that I do not sufficiently visit the common debtors' prison to be able to say with certainty how often their prison is washed. Larter has never complained to me. Complaints are never made to me without being at once redressed. But I am thoroughly discouraged in consequence of the state of the common debtors' prison. I have no wish to misrepresent the truth. It is beyond my power to do my duty properly with so few officers, and the miserable want of accommodation on the debtors' side; the large number of debtor prisoners to be provided for, averaging upwards of 1000 yearly, and the multitudes who daily visit the debtors. I am thoroughly discouraged, at least so far as respects the common debtors' side."

At this part of Mr. Keene's examination we thought it right to read to him the examination of the twelve common debtors, which we accordingly did; and his examination then proceeded as follows:—

"I admit that the statement which you have read is substantially correct, although I think the examinants, W., and others, have somewhat overstated the facts about the state of the bedding. If they mean to say that their complaints have been made to me personally, and that I have ever neglected to redress those complaints, I deny the truth of that part of their statement. The debtors are discharged so soon after imprisonment that it is not necessary in all cases to give fresh or clean bedding: the same bedding which such prisoners have used will often do for others. Whenever a prisoner quits, he brings his bedding to the lodge; and if it be sufficiently clean, it is afterwards given to some other prisoner; if it is not clean, it is handed over to Larter, and by him taken to the matron to be washed. I have not heard complaints from any quarter of the bedding so supplied. No provision is made for cleansing the rooms of the debtors on either side, which must be done by themselves, if at all."

"I receive 3*s.* 6*d.* per week for every bed of mine which is occupied on the master-debtors' side. The practice was long established before I came here. Perhaps it is contrary to the regulations of the Gaol Act. But every master-debtor may provide his own bed. I never deprive a prisoner of his bed until he becomes some weeks in arrear with his pay."

BRIDEWELL HOSPITAL, BRIDGE-STREET, BLACKFRIARS.

Bridewell Hospital. THIS prison is under the jurisdiction of the governors of Bridewell and Bethlem Hospitals, but supported out of the funds of the Bridewell Hospital only.

Apartments and cells. The old part of the prison is divided into two departments, for males and females. That for the men consists of a building 74 feet in length, on each side of which are apartments for the prisoners, and a passage running down the centre. On the ground-floor are three compartments, in which are tread-wheels; opposite, are two day-rooms and apartments for the turnkeys.

On the first floor are 3 mill-compartments, 4 sleeping-cells, and turnkeys' apartments. On the second floor is a room used, when necessary, as a sleeping-apartment for several prisoners, a dark cell, and 5 sleeping-cells.

On the third floor is an infirmary, a room for infectious cases, 2 dark cells, and 14 sleeping-cells.

The female department consists, on the ground-floor, of 3 mill-rooms, a day-room, and 3 cells. On the first floor is another mill-room, 2 day-rooms, a reading-room, and 4 cells. On the third floor is a day-room and sleeping-room having 5 bedsteads, and 7 cells. On the third floor is an infirmary, an apartment for infectious cases, and 9 sleeping-cells.

The new prison consists, on the ground-floor, of a store-room, turnkeys' apartments, 2 day-rooms, 2 dark cells, and 2 sleeping-cells.

On the first floor are 17 sleeping-cells. On the second floor are 16 sleeping-cells, and a turnkey's apartment. On the third floor is an infirmary, 3 apartments for turnkeys, and 4 sleeping-cells. For the dimensions of these several wards and cells we refer to the Return No. 3.

Description of prisoners committed. The prisoners in this Bridewell are persons summarily convicted by the Lord Mayor, or sitting Aldermen, and are for the most part petty pilferers, misdemeanants, and vagrants. In addition to offenders of this description there is another class, viz., refractory apprentices brought before the aldermen or chamberlain, and sentenced to "solitary confinement" (so called) for periods ranging from three days to three months. Sentences for the longer periods are, however, rare.

At the date of our inspection there were 95 prisoners in confinement. Of 78 males 61 were pilferers, 7 misdemeanants, 5 vagrants, and 5 apprentices. Of the 17 females in custody, 8 were pilferers, 5 misdemeanants, and 4 vagrants.

Employment. The male prisoners are employed on the tread-wheel. The wheel, as we have already described, is divided into six rooms, each of which is capable of holding about a dozen prisoners. To maintain silence and order, a prisoner is employed as a wardsman in each of the compartments. The rooms are, however, so dark, that it is quite impossible to detect the prisoners when talking, even when the wardsman is close to the wheel. At the periods of rest the prisoners remain in their respective compartments.

Classification. The male prisoners are classed by placing together all first committals apart from other prisoners. Youths are also separated from adults; and a class is formed of the better character, whom it is desirable to keep from hardened offenders. The apprentices are kept individually separate in cells, and are allowed to leave them only to attend chapel and for a short time in the morning to wash. They have no employment.

Letters, &c. The prisoners are not allowed to send or receive letters, except under special circumstances. Visitors are excluded except in peculiar cases. No articles of food or clothing are permitted to be sent in to the prisoners by their friends.

Religious Instruction. The chaplain of the prison is also the minister of the Bridewell precinct. He reads prayers every morning, and performs full service on Sunday afternoon. There is also an abridged service on Wednesday and Friday, and the chaplain attends at the prison for an hour three days in the week for the purpose of affording religious instruction. He resides on the spot, and is generally in the prison twice in the course of every day. He keeps a journal of the dates of his attendance, but no public record of the character and conduct of any of the prisoners. No provision is made for the instruction of the prisoners in reading.

Surgeon's duties.

The surgeon visits the prison daily, and at other times when required. The prisoners are generally healthy. There have not been above three instances in the last year in which it has been considered necessary to remove a sick prisoner from his cell. When serious cases occur, the patient is sent, by the authority of the committing magistrate, to Bartholomew's Hospital. This is doubtless dictated by kind feelings; but such a step ought not to be necessary in a prison where there is already an infirmary, and where there appears to be no want either of inclination or means to render proper attention to the sick.

Of 1054 committals in the last year there were but 24 persons requiring medical treatment, with the exception of cases of venereal and itch.

Tread-wheel.

During the months of January, February, November, and December, the prisoners work at the tread-wheel 7½ hours, in March and October 9 hours, and in the remaining months 10 hours per diem. The wheels on the male side will hold 60, and on the female side 20 persons. The ordinary velocity of the wheel is 45 steps per minute. The men are on the wheel 20 minutes at a time, and rest 10 minutes; the women are on the wheel for a quarter of an hour and rest also a quarter of an hour. The number of feet in ascent per day is 9000 during the winter, and 12,000 in the summer months. The revolutions of the wheels per day are 757 in winter, and 947 in summer. The prescribed rate is regulated by the miller. The power is applied to the grinding of corn for the supply of the several establishments of which the institution consists, viz., Bridewell, Bethlem Hospital, and the House of Occupations.

Offences, &c.

The prevalent offences committed in the Bridewell consist of talking, damaging the prison clothing, and insolence to the officers. The punishments are stoppage of food and confinement in a cell, and sometimes in a dark cell.

Cleanliness.

The person of every prisoner is cleansed on admission. He is also required to bathe once a week.

Ration.

The daily ration is as follow:—

| | | Bread: Ounces. | Cooked Meat: Ounces. | Soup: Pints. | Gruel: Pints. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Sunday | Men | 32 | .... | 1 | |
| | Women | 24 | .... | 1 | |
| | Boys | 32 | .... | 1 | |
| Monday | Men | 16 | 8 | 1 | |
| | Women | 12 | 8 | 1 | |

| Tuesday | Men | 24 | .... | 1 | 1 |
| | Women | 20 | .... | 1 | 1 |
| | Boys | 24 | .... | 1 | 1 |
| Wednesday | Men | 16 | 8 | 1 | |
| | Women | 12 | 8 | 1 | |
| | Boys | 16 | 8 | 1 | |
| Thursday | Men | 24 | .... | 1 | 1 |
| | Women | 20 | .... | 1 | 1 |
| | Boys | 24 | .... | 1 | 1 |
| Friday | Men | 16 | 8 | 1 | |
| | Women | 12 | 8 | 1 | |

| Saturday | Men | 24 | .... | 1 | 1 |
| | Women | 20 | .... | 1 | 1 |
| | Boys | 24 | .... | 1 | 1 |

Cost of ration.

The cost of the prison diet per head per annum is estimated at 5*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.*

Clothing.

The prisoners are clothed in a prison-dress; consisting, for the men, of jackets, trousers, shirts, stockings, handkerchiefs, shoes, and caps; and for the females, of gowns, shifts, petticoats, stockings, shoes, and caps.

Bedding.

The cells are provided with iron-bedsteads, beds, rugs, and blankets.

Soap and towels.

Soap and towels are allowed.

Expenses.

The total expenses of the prison, in the year ending Michaelmas 1836, was 1838*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.*; but it should be observed that the Bridewell is but one of three establishments under the same management; and that this amount involves a variety of expenses common to all. By a minute calculation, however, which has been lately made with reference to the year before, taking the average at 77 prisoners, the daily cost per head was found to amount to about 1*s.* 2¼*d.* per diem; and as the number received in that year amounted to 813, the average expense of each individual received was 2*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*

Officers.

The officers consist of the keeper, the matron, the miller, four male turnkeys, and two female turnkeys.

Relief to the destitute.

Every prisoner who, on his discharge, appears to be destitute, and whose conduct has been satisfactory, receives assistance sufficient to keep him, for at least one day, from the commission of crime.

Superintendence.

The governors at large appoint a committee of superintendence consisting of 5, who meet weekly to attend to the duties usually performed by visiting justices. They do not keep any journal.

Books and accounts.

The following is a list of the books kept in the prison:—

1.—Cash Book.
2.—Wages Book.
3.—Mill Book.
4.—Daily Journal.
5.—Weekly State of the Prison as to Numbers and Occupation.
6.—Commitment and Description Book.
7.—Account of Goods received and delivered.
8.—Surgeon's }
9.—Chaplain's } Books, containing merely the Dates of their Attendance.

Committals.

It will be seen by the annexed table that in the year ending Michaelmas 1836, 723 males and 331 females passed through the prison. Of this number 833 were committed under the Vagrant Act. The average period of confinement is about 32 days. 252 prisoners were 17 and under. Of the whole number (1054) 167 had been once before in confinement; 94 twice; 74 three times; 132 four times or more.

Effects of the confinement.

The governor says that the Silent System, as practised in the Bridewell, has had the effect of making the prison more orderly; but that it has not tended to diminish either the gross number of commitments or the number of re-committals. It certainly is not calculated either to deter or reclaim. If the discipline were better than it is, no beneficial effects could be expected from the short periods for which the prisoners are ordinarily in custody. But the discipline is in no way calculated to excite dread. The darkness of the compartments in which the men labour is such as to render it quite impossible to detect the constant communications which are going on among them, and the governor states that he has been close to the wheel and heard the whispering, without being able to discover the offender. The short periods of committal materially increase the difficulty, which is at all times great, of procuring from among prisoners faithful and vigilant wardsmen. Notwithstanding, however, the admitted laxity of discipline on the wheel, the number of punishments will appear to be by no means trifling when we state that, in the last year, there were not less than 1098. Of this number 889 consisted of stoppage of diet, and 192 of confinement in dark cells; and yet with this amount of punishment, and all the bad feelings to which it is certain to give rise, the governor complains that he cannot get a wardsman on whom he can rely. The governor says that the wardsmen are deterred, notwithstanding that they are rewarded by extra diet, from performing their duty faithfully, from the fear of personal violence on their discharge from those of whom they complain.

If even the prisoners were prevented from talking with each other during the day, they would still have ample opportunities of doing so when they retire to their cells. The partition walls and windows of the cells, the position of the doors and the apertures over them, present the ready means of conversation. To term the imprisonment to which the apprentices are subject "solitary confinement" is ludicrous, for although their persons are separated, they can talk to each other with ease, from morning to night. Considering, however, the many years since which the cells in the old part of the prison were built, their size and construction reflect credit on those under whose direction they were erected; we wish that we could say as much of the cells recently built, and which have been scarcely two years completed. These cells are 8 feet 6 inches by 6 feet 2 inches; and therefore too small for the observance of the Separate System. If used as dormitories, conversation can be freely maintained with prisoners in adjoining cells, and also with the prisoner in the opposite cell. It is really lamentable to see money expended in building cells which are quite inapplicable to any good system of prison discipline.

RETURN from the City Bridewell at Bridge Street, Blackfriars, for the Year ending Michaelmas, 1836.

| Total Expenses of Prison for the YearTotal Receipts of ditto . . . . | 1838 11 2 |
| Actual Cost to the County, City or Borough, not including alterations and additions . . | . . |

Note.—Divide this Sum by the aggregate number of Days for which the whole of the Prisoners have been in Custody during the Year, and insert the Quotient, which will be the Cost of each Prisoner per Day.

Bridewell Hospital is but one of three Establishments under the same management, involving a variety of expenses, common to all, without the possibility of making any distinct charge to either; but by a minute calculation lately made, taking the average at 77 Prisoners, the daily cost per head, was found to amount to about 1*s.* 2½*d.* per day. And as the numbers received during the year amounted to 813, the average expense of each individual received was £2 1*s.* 8*d.* The number of Prisoners during the past year amounts to 1054, so that the average expense will be found to be considerably less, when the calculation is made on the Accounts being closed for the Year.

THE BOROUGH COMPTER.

Borough Compter.

This prison is situated in Mill Lane, Tooley Street. It is under the jurisdiction of the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen of the city of London, and also the High Bailiff of the borough of Southwark.

Description of Prisoners.

The prisoners committed to this gaol are debtors, persons committed for trial for felonies and misdemeanors, and others sentenced to imprisonment but not to hard labour. Prisoners sentenced to hard labour are usually sent to the House of Correction at Brixton. As the inhabitants of Southwark contribute to the county-rate, they have the right of committing to this prison.

Besides the ordinary purposes of a gaol, this compter is made use of as a watchhouse, for the confinement of night charges brought in by the watch and policemen of the neighbourhood.

Apartments and Cells.

The prison consists of the following apartments:—

For Male Debtors:—A day-room on the ground-floor, originally 2 rooms, 38 feet by 10.
2 sleeping rooms above—No. 1. of the same size; No. 2, 27 feet by 10.
2 yards—No. 1, about 44 feet square; No. 2, 19 feet square.

For Male Prisoners charged with Felony:—A day-room on the ground-floor, 17 feet by 10.
2 cells above—9 feet by 6; 10 feet by 7.
A yard, about 15 feet square.

For Male Misdemeanants, tried and untried:—A day-room on the ground-floor, 27 feet by 10.
A yard, 65 feet by 40.
2 cells, about 8 feet by 6, and 10 feet by 6.
At the end of the day-room is a recess, divided from the room by a wooden railing, in which some of the prisoners sleep at night.

For Night Charges, males and females:—2 cells, 8 feet by 7, and 10 feet by 7.

For Female Felons and Misdemeanants, untried and convicted:—A day-room, 16 feet by 12.
A sleeping room above, about 17 ft. sq.

For Female Debtors:—A day-room, about 16 feet by 13.
A yard, 50 feet by 35, to which females of all classes have access.

At the period of our visit we found 40 prisoners in custody, who were associated in the following manner:—

16 Male Debtors.
12 Misdemeanants, tried and untried.
6 charged with Felony.
4 Females convicted for trial, or imprisoned for want of bail.
2 Debtors.

Male Debtors. Visitors.

The male debtors are allowed to receive visitors from 8 in the morning until 7 in the evening, except on Sundays, when they are excluded from 9 to 1 and from a quarter to 2 to half-past 2. These visitors may stay in the prison as long as they desire within the hours prescribed for their admission; and many families, consequently, pass the day there with their relatives. We counted nine women and eleven children who appeared to be thus domiciliated; and learnt on inquiry, that this was about the average number always to be found during the day in the debtors' ward. When the number of the debtors and the contracted space of the ward are considered, some idea may be formed of the confusion that consequently prevails. This disorder is greatly aggravated by the quantity of porter which is permitted to be drunk. The senior debtor, called, "the captain," is allowed to keep a tap, and to supply any prisoner, whether debtors, felons, or misdemeanants, with whatever quantity may be called for. The tap is kept openly in the day-room. The "captain" receives a profit of a halfpenny on every quart he sells. We could get no accurate statement of the quantity of beer consumed; but there can be no doubt that it is considerable. Occasionally, when a journeyman belonging to any of the manufactories in the neighbourhood is in confinement, five or six members of the club to which he belongs visit the prison, and treat him with beer. Intoxication is not unfrequently the result; and these scenes occur in the presence of the wives and children of other debtors. More beer is generally drunk on Sundays than on any other days, as the number of visitors is usually very great. The keeper says that it is "quite sickening" to see the large number of visitors on Sundays. All visitors, as well as prisoners, have the opportunity of having as much beer as they choose to call and can pay for. It was understood that, upon one occasion some time back, when there were but forty-four prisoners in custody, so large was the number of visitors, that not less a quantity than 35 gallons of beer were consumed on one Sunday! Visitors sometimes stand in lines four deep at the gate of the misdemeanants' ward, and crowds are admitted into the debtors' wards and yards, where, by means which we shall presently describe, they also have free access to the misdemeanants. The keeper says that he cannot say but that he has seen the debtors the worse for drinking on Sunday evenings.

Beer.

Intoxication.

Visitors on Sundays.

Chummage.

Captain's Fund.

Every debtor, on his admittance, is expected to pay to the senior debtor, or "captain," the sum of 2*s.* 1*d.* as "chummage." With the money thus collected the "captain" provides various articles for common use, such as soap, towels, mustard, salt, and pepper. His accounts are examined by a certain number of the prisoners every Monday evening, when the balance that remains in hand above a half-a-crown is spent in beer, and a general carousing takes place. If a prisoner, on his admittance, refuses to contribute to the "captain's fund," there are many ways of seriously annoying him; and in a late instance the keeper was obliged to interfere for the protection of a prisoner who had not the means of subscribing. If no debtor be committed soon afterwards, and the "captain's fund" requires to be replenished, a general subscription is raised among them for that purpose. Monday evening, therefore, is always distinguished by noise and drinking. The debtors have their by-laws, and are, in fact, left very much to their own system of government. The "captain" occupies the smaller and more private of the sleeping apartments, and for a "consideration" lets out his beds to those who choose to pay for superior accommodation.

Male Misdemeanants.

Beer.

Adjoining the debtors' day-room is a yard into which the windows of the misdemeanants' ward communicate. This class of criminals, therefore, have whatever beer they can pay for handed to them through the window. The same remark applies to the felons, who are separated from the debtors only by a wall ten feet high. When either a felon or misdemeanant orders beer, he has only to call out (as we have ourselves heard a prisoner do) "Captain, a pot of porter," and the beer is immediately served. And this is done, not surreptitiously, but with the full knowledge of the prison-officers, who are not authorized to stop the practice by any orders or regulations from their superiors.

Idleness.

Gambling.

Communication of Misdemeanants with Debtors and their Visitors.

Communication between Female Prisoners and Misdemeanants and their Visitors.

In the male misdemeanants' ward we found 14 men and boys; some lads, committed for assaults, confined with known and hardened offenders, all idle, and spending their hours of imprisonment by means which could not fail to lead to mutual degradation. That, under such circumstances, the prisoners should have recourse to gambling, is not surprising, and the scored tables and benches throughout the wards denote the prevalence of the practice. We have stated that the windows of the untried and convicted misdemeanants afford the means of ready communication with the debtors and the crowds of friends who visit them; but this is not the only pleasurable resource which the misdemeanants enjoy: they are allowed to have access to their visitors at the gate of their airing yard. This yard adjoins that of the women, and there is an iron grating in the men's door, which opens close to the wooden paling of the women's yard: in this paling is an aperture through which the men and women may, with ease, see and converse with each other: but this is not all. The visitors to the misdemeanants, the number of whom we have stated to be occasionally so large, must pass along the paling of the women's yard to arrive at the men's gate; and having reached it they also can talk with any of the female prisoners who may be near the aperture which we have described. In fact, part of the women's yard is only separated from the yard through which the visitors to the men pass by an open wooden railing; and when it is considered that these visitors are allowed to enter and remain in the prison from 9 till 5, the prevalence of communication must be obvious. There is, in fact, no part of the day in which a female can take exercise in the yard without being subject to be seen by visitors to the men.

Felons.

In the ward for felons before trial we found 6 lads; 2 of whom were 12, and the youngest 9 years of age. They were crowded round the fire, and complained of having nothing to do. These prisoners, as we have observed, are allowed to procure as much porter as they can afford to drink.

Female Criminals.

In the female criminal ward we found 5 women; three being charged with felony, one convicted of disorderly conduct in the streets, and the other sentenced for 6 months for an assault. A tobacco pipe lay openly in the ward; and, on our removing it, the matron said that she was astonished that any one should disapprove of smoking in a prison!

Female Debtors.

In the upper room we found two female debtors, and a third woman, a criminal, taking tea together. It is evident that the female prisoners, of all descriptions, have intercourse with each other, tried and untried, debtors, felons, and misdemeanants.

In one of the attics of the female part of the prison, the sack-bedding is usually filled with straw, and two male prisoners are generally taken from their ward and employed in the attic for the purpose. Although a turnkey is stated to be always with them, the introduction of any male prisoner into the female department, and especially in such a prison as the Borough Compter, is unsafe and improper.

Smoking.

Smoking is allowed in every part of the prison.

Visitors not searched.

The visitors to prisoners are not searched, nor is the admission of any article prohibited, except spirits; common food, of various kinds, is brought in. The visitors to the debtors have, as we have shown, unrestrained access to every part of their wards and yards, and can throw objectionable articles, such as might afford the means of escape, over the walls of the felons' and misdemeanants' yards. Among the visitors are many prostitutes. As the friends of the debtors are allowed to remain longer in the prison than the visitors to the misdemeanants, it is not uncommon for the latter to leave the gaol at the appointed hour, and then return afterwards to the debtors' yard; on being admitted to which the visitor can then communicate with the misdemeanants through the windows of their ward.

Prisoners afraid of complaining.

The keeper says that he seldom receives any complaint from an individual of the ill-treatment of other prisoners, owing to the certainty of his being seriously annoyed by the others should the circumstance become known throughout the prison.

Prisoners not cleansed on admission.

The prisoners, on their admittance, are not cleansed, nor are their clothes fumigated. The surgeon does not individually inspect them, when they are brought in.

Surgeon.
No Infirmary.

The surgeon attends the prison twice a week, and always when any case of sickness requires his attention. There is no infirmary, nor apartment of any kind, appropriated to the sick, nor are there any means of effectually separating a sick male prisoner from others. Serious cases do at times occur; when a part of one of the debtors' sleeping-rooms is divided off by a curtain; debtors also sleeping at night in the room. The inconvenience of there being no proper apartment for the sick may be conceived from the fact of there being in 1835 not less than 47, of what the surgeon designates "infirmary cases." Seven persons have been ill at one time.

No Chapel.

There is no chapel. The chaplain attends on Sundays in the morning at 9 o'clock, when he reads prayers and delivers a sermon. In the afternoon he reads prayers only. The keeper reads prayers every morning. These religious services are performed in the larger of the debtors' sleeping-rooms, where a small pulpit is erected. The chaplain also visits the gaol for a short time twice a week to admonish and advise any young prisoners to whom he thinks he can be of any benefit.

Prison duty.

The prison is throughout dirty; nor can it be otherwise, considering the contracted dimensions of the apartments, and the numbers and descriptions of prisoners who pass through them in the course of the year. It is stated to be the practice to whitewash the prison every spring.

A complaint has lately been made by the occupants of adjoining premises of the prisoners throwing stones over the walls; and the keeper has issued a notice threatening punishment to such as may be detected in the offence.

Soap, &c.

The felon prisoners are allowed soap, but no towels or combs. They are not required to wash themselves. Soap is not allowed to other classes of prisoners.

Bedding.

Each prisoner is furnished with 3 woollen rugs, a paillasse stuffed with straw, and a straw pillow.

Dietary.

The dietary is 14 ounces of the best wheaten bread daily, and 16 ounces of beef without bone, uncooked, twice a week. There is, besides, a private donation of soup-meat on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

Clothing.

Articles of clothing are not supplied.

The situation of the keeper's house prevents him from inspecting any part of the interior of the gaol. It is only when he visits the wards and yard for the purpose, that he can learn what is going on.

Keeper's Duties.

The keeper's duties, as deputy to the high-bailiff, require his daily attendance at the Town-hall, when he makes a report to the high-bailiff of the number of the prisoners and state of the gaol. He cannot quit the hall until the committing Alderman has left; and it is necessary that one of the turnkeys should also be there. Owing to these circumstances it is sometimes one o'clock before the keeper and his officer can return to the prison. During their absence the prisoners are necessarily left to themselves, as the only remaining turnkey must attend to the gate.

Turnkeys.

The turnkeys sit up at night alternately, to receive the charges brought in by the watch and police. The total number of those charges in 1836 was 420 males and 289 females.

Independently of these numbers, 365 males and 174 females were confined in this prison in the course of the last year.

Visits of the High Bailiff.

On referring to the prison books we find that the high-bailiff has visited the prison 8 times in the course of the year 1836. The present keeper has lately succeeded his father, Mr. John Law, who for many years held the appointment. He was a conscientious and humane man, and fully sensible of the evils which we have described; but which, notwithstanding his efforts, it was beyond his power to remove. In the observations which we have made, we attach no blame to the present keeper.

Account Books.

The keeper's account-books are—

1. A cash account of the disbursements of the prison.
2. A book for the receipt of rugs, paillasses, coals, &c.
3. A book for the receipt and delivery of bread and meat.
4. A book containing the daily account of the number and description of prisoners in custody.
5. Sundry memorandum-books of accounts.

The keeper's registers are—

1. A book for debtors: the date of their commitments, references on the execution, the defendant's and plaintiff's names, the parish in which the defendant was arrested, the amount of the debt and payments in part, the period committed for, the amount of costs, officer's name who makes the caption, when and how the defendant is discharged from prison.
2. A book containing the names, ages, and offences of all charges, when brought into custody, when committed, and by what magistrate, how disposed of, and when discharged, and the name of the officer apprehending the prisoner.
3. An Index to the foregoing, with the number of times each offender has been in custody at this prison before.
4. A Description Book of all prisoners committed for trial for felony, and an account of all other prisoners whose cases are disposed of at the Quarter Session.
5. A copy of all returns made to the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen, and (not in a book) copies of all other returns.

The journals kept in the prison are—

1. The Keeper's Journal.
2. The Chaplain's Journal.
3. The Surgeon's Journal.
4. A Journal for all officers not residing in the prison.

The Borough Compter has long been known as one of the worst prisons in England. A few years back even the sexes were not separated; and upon one occasion two women were found in a corner of a room (now occupied by debtors) with a rug only to cover their nakedness. The publicity which was given to this circumstance, and to the general condition of the prison about this time, led to a parliamentary inquiry; and in 1819 the state of the Borough Compter was reported upon and censured by a select committee of the House of Commons. These reiterated exposures at length induced the City Authorities to enlarge the prison by purchasing some adjoining premises. But the only improvement effected by this measure was to separate the men from the women, and provide additional yard room. The male prisoners were still permitted to congregate with that scandalous disregard to order and decency, which is exhibited in every part of the gaol at the present day.

The idea of confinement in this gaol having any tendency to deter is quite absurd. Its moral effects must be deeply injurious on all; but especially on the young and inexperienced, and also upon the debtors, whose average of detention is 10 weeks, and some of whom are occasionally obliged to pass 16 weeks in this hot-bed of corruption: the baneful influence of these vicious associations, be it remembered, extends also, during this period, to such of their wives and children as spend their days in the prison.

The association of the untried with the convicted—the facilities for occasional conversation between the sexes in the manner which we have pointed out—the exaction of "chummage"—the number and almost constant presence of visitors—the character of these visitors, many of whom are thieves and prostitutes—the encouragements to drunkenness by the unlimited quantity of beer permitted to be consumed by convicted as well as untried prisoners—the constant desecration of the Sabbath—the absence of any separate accommodation for the sick—and the want of an apartment for the decent performance of divine worship:—these are among the more prominent features of a prison which is exceedingly discreditable to the Court under whose jurisdiction it is placed.

From the official journal of visits to this gaol, it appears that the last visit made by a member of the Court of Alderman was in December 1835. The keeper, on our questioning him on this point, admitted that, with the exception of that visit and another of which no entry has been made (whether it occurred before or since that date he was unable to remember), there had not been an Alderman within the walls of the Borough Compter for a period of at least three years.

(* Note.)—As to the Prison Bedding,—if each Prisoner was annually supplied with new Bedding, the answer would be as stated, about £1 2*s.* 0*d.* But that sum appearing quite at variance with the sum total, the difference is accounted for in this way: that the prisoners, being principally night charges, or remaining a very short period in custody, the same bedding as would only supply one prisoner any length of time may be found sufficient for 20 or 30 before it becomes unfit for use.

GILTSPUR-STREET COMPTER.

Jurisdiction.

Giltspur-street Compter.
Jurisdiction.

This prison is under the jurisdiction of the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen. All the members of the court are considered Visiting Justices of the city prisons; but there is a rota appointed, in order to secure their regular attendance, and a book is kept, in which they enter their remarks and sign their names. But from 13th February 1837, to 2nd May (the last day of our inspection) no entry appears: the governor, however, stated his belief that a Visiting Justice had attended during the last month.

Site.

Site.

This prison is surrounded on three sides by a very high boundary wall. Its front opens upon Giltspur-street, and looks west upon St. Sepulchre's church, and down Skinner-street; on the south it is bounded by the houses which form the north side of Newgate-street; on the east and north sides by the land and buildings of Christ's Hospital; one of the windows of which institution overlooks that part of the prison which is called the House of Correction; and the balls with which the Christ's Hospital boys amuse themselves daily come over the walls in great numbers, and, falling amongst the prisoners in the House of Correction-yard, furnish them at once with a means and a temptation for amusement, in a way which is but little consistent with the proper discipline of a House of Correction. In the lower infirmary we found nine of these balls; and, as we entered the yard, we saw two of the prisoners, a boy and a man, running in a manner which satisfied us that they were then playing at ball.

Construction.

The prison is entered by a gate in the centre of the front building, from which a passage of about 25 feet long leads to a broad corridor at right angles with it, which runs the whole width of the prison parallel to the front building, the ground-floor of which is occupied by the lodge, governor's office, committee-room, store-rooms, and turnkeys' apartments. At either extremity of the passage, or corridor, is a staircase leading to the first and second stories of the front building, which are occupied by the governor's apartments; six rooms for prisoners, carpenter's shop, flax store-room, and turnkeys' apartments. It is in vain to attempt a description of this prison without the aid of a plan. The whole area, with the boundary wall, is occupied by a multiplicity of wards, yards, and sleeping cells, constructed without order or regularity; and in these are crowded together, without the possibility of classification, prisoners of every denomination and character.

The master's side-yard has two day wards, one of which is nominally set apart for charges of the more respectable order, and the other for a class of prisoners called Giltspur-street fines,—viz., prisoners who are sentenced to certain periods of confinement in Giltspur-street Compter.

The iron-yard is set apart for charges of a lower class; it has a day-room, and four sleeping cells of about 10 feet by 7, in each of which they have sometimes been obliged to sleep as many as five prisoners.

The middle-yard is appropriated to the House of Correction prisoners, and it also has a day-room and four sleeping cells.

The vagrant-yard is appropriated to vagrants, and has a day-room and six sleeping cells.

The House of Correction is appropriated to prisoners sentenced to periods of confinement with hard labour. This is a building three stories high, having airing-yards on two sides of it, connected by an arcade passing under the building. On the ground story there is a flax dressing-room, a wood-room, a store-room, and a small infirmary, called the lower infirmary, in which are placed such of the night charges as are brought into the prison in such a state of intoxication, as to render it unsafe or improper to place them in a ward with other prisoners. There is another males' infirmary, with a nurse's-room attached to it. There is a female officer, who attends upon the sick, and superintends both the males' and females' infirmary. On the first story is the mill-room (containing a crank mill for grinding corn, at which ten prisoners can work together) and a day-room; the second story contains two sleeping wards for 18 prisoners each, and a small apartment for three more.

The females' prison contains two yards; the charge-yard, immediately adjoining the vagrants'-yard, and the House of Correction-yard, to which is attached a day-room and sleeping-room. In the last there are 10 beds, but there have often been as many as 24 prisoners to sleep in them.

In the females' prison there is a kitchen, in which the meals are prepared both for males and females. There is also a laundry and wash-house immediately adjoining the kitchen, in which the prisoners' linen is washed. There is also a females' infirmary, and a room in which the female prisoners are daily assembled for prayers, which are read to them by the matron, except when any of the ladies of the British Association attend for that purpose, which they do about once a fortnight.

The females' prison is under the management of a matron; and there is also a female officer attached to the kitchen, whose duty it is to prepare and serve out all the meals; she has a female prisoner to assist her.

There is a chapel situated on the first floor, immediately in the centre of the prison. The female prisoners sit in a compartment by themselves, and are screened from the sight of the men by a curtain. The male prisoners of all classes are not separated by bars, and can see each other. The chapel is tolerably commodious, and is sufficiently well commanded by the chaplain and officers.

There are no dark, refractory, or punishment cells.

Dimensions.

Dimensions.

For a description of the various wards and sleeping cells, their dimensions, and the classes of prisoners to which they are nominally appropriated, see Appendix A.

Classification.

Classification.

We have briefly described the classes to which the various wards are appropriated; but this arrangement is merely nominal. In the House of Correction there are only beds for about 40, whilst the number of House of Correction prisoners frequently amounts to 90 or more; the additional 50 are therefore distributed by the governor through the other wards (to use his own words) "where and how he can." The same, he says, must be done with the prisoners under charges, or remanded, and with the night charges. These classes are numerous, and the consequence is that, with the exception of the House of Correction, every ward has constantly an admixture of criminals of every class,—felons, misdemeanants, assaults, and night charges; and amongst these it has, more than once, been our painful duty to see destitute boys, against whom no criminal charge had ever been brought, but who have been sent to the Compter, "to be taken care of," as it is called, until a ship or a situation can be provided for them, and who are there herded together, day and night, in utter idleness, and without efficient inspection or control, with the most dissolute and abandoned characters which the streets o London can produce.

Means of Separation.

Means of Separation.

After what has been said, we need not remark that there are no efficient means of separation; but it is incumbent on us to state some of the cases in which communication can be carried on between the various wards, and even between the sexes. The charge-ward and the fines-ward open upon the same yard, and the prisoners confined in them constantly and freely communicate. The sleeping cells belonging to the iron-yard and middle-yard are only separated by a narrow day-room, not five feet wide, into which large ventilators open from each sleeping cell, through which the prisoners can communicate even in a whisper; and, as some of those prisoners who are sentenced by the court to solitary confinement are placed in these cells, it may easily be understood what is the degree of solitude to which they are consigned, when we state that they can talk and laugh with companions all day long. There are also six apartments on the second story in the front prison building, appropriated to prisoners who are sentenced by the court to solitary confinement; these are large, airy, and light apartments, 17 feet by 8, having large windows, which open and look out upon Skinner-street, one of the busiest and gayest scenes in the City of London; here the prisoners pass their time in idleness, and amuse themselves in looking out of the open window upon the busy throng constantly passing,—the coaches, omnibuses, and many other objects, which are to the idle spectator a source of amusement. They looked out upon the multitude which attended the recent execution, and could almost command a view of the scaffold. In addition to this, they might receive from the street, by means of a bag and string, any articles of however improper or dangerous a nature; and some years ago a prisoner confined in one of these apartments did by these means procure implements by which he effected his escape. It is an obvious mockery of justice to place a culprit in such apartments as these by way of punishment!

The females' charge-ward is also separated from the males' vagrant-ward only by a day-room five feet wide, into which large ventilators open from each of the sleeping cells, so that the male and female prisoners can hold unrestrained conversation even as they lie in their beds. Their yards are separated by a wall 14 feet high, over which various things are occasionally thrown; but until very lately a much more pernicious mode of communication between the male and female prisoners existed in the kitchen.

It has been already stated that a female officer is in charge of the kitchen, and that she prepares and distributes the meals, assisted by a female prisoner. The female officer, who, until lately, filled this office, was most negligent and inefficient. We have been informed by the matron and governor, that this officer rarely attended the distribution of the breakfasts, and frequently not even that of the dinner; but left the whole duty to the female prisoner. The male prisoners come, each in turn, to the kitchen for their portion. One turnkey only attends to the male prisoners while this is going on; and, as he is engaged in unlocking the different wards to allow the prisoners to go to the kitchen, and in arranging their progress there and back again, it is manifest that he cannot be in the kitchen; thus the male prisoners were brought in contact with the female prisoners in the kitchen, without the presence or restraint of any officer, male or female. But this is not all: there is a door from the kitchen, opening into the wash-house, where three other female prisoners are constantly employed: this door was only bolted on the kitchen side; and between it and the female house of correction, (the doors of which were never kept locked,) there is only a yard 20 feet wide. It was, then, very easy for one or more of the male prisoners, whilst crowding into the kitchen for their meals, unrestrained and unobserved by any officer, to pass unseen into the wash-house or female house of correction, and, by returning to the kitchen before the distribution of the meal was over, or even during the next meal, to have personal intercourse with the female prisoners; and in confirmation of this we can state that when a quarrel took place between the female prisoners in the wash-house, one of them charged another with having had, in this manner, criminal connexion with a male prisoner. The governor, matron, and principal turnkey, say they have never positively known of any particular case of intercourse as so stated; but they admit that such an event was very possible, and even probable. The kitchen female officer was not only thus inattentive to her duties, and constantly absent from them, but she was an habitual drunkard. We ourselves saw her one day, as early as 12 o'clock in the forenoon, intoxicated. We charged her with it in the presence of the governor and matron, and they admitted that she was not sober. And, moreover, the matron observed that she was sorry to say it was not the first time, by a great many, she had observed her in this condition. The governor confirmed this statement, and said that he and the matron had spoken together on her want of sobriety. We directed the case to be reported to the visiting Aldermen; about six weeks after we again saw this woman, who still retained her office. The matron said that she certainly had been intoxicated since we had observed upon her state; still she remained an officer of the prison; and it was not until after some time, and after other acts of drunkenness and inattention to duty, that she was finally dismissed. There can be no question that an officer of such character and habits must have been in the power of the prisoners, who, no doubt, had their own way; and it is unnecessary for us to observe how mischievous this state of things must have been. A new officer has been appointed to this post, and different arrangements are now made in the distribution of the meals, to prevent intercourse between the male and female prisoners. The breakfast and dinners are first served to the female prisoners; and after they are supplied, they are all, together with the kitchen woman, locked into their wards, and the officer alone distributes the rations to the male prisoners. She is never to be absent from this duty; and, if prevented by illness or any other unavoidable cause, the matron takes her place.

Inspection.

Inspection.

The means of inspection are very deficient in various departments of this prison, with the

I.
Home District.
Metropolitan Gaols.
Giltspur-street Compter.

exception of the charge and fines wards, which can be inspected from the front passage or corridor: there are none of the wards or cells which can be overlooked without the prisoners being aware that they are under inspection; this greatly aggravates the evils arising from their uncontrolled association.

Security.

Security.

We deem this prison very insecure, but more from the nature of the discipline, or rather from the total absence of all discipline, than from its construction. Several prisoners are at various times employed in the front passage; and, as the officer on the outer gate is not unfrequently called away by duty, the prisoners have then an opportunity, if they are so minded, of breaking prison. Escapes have taken place. In November 1834, W. J. effected his escape; in April 1835, J. M. C. escaped; in June 1836, G. E. C. escaped. There is another circumstance which renders this prison very insecure, but which we do not think it prudent to particularise. The governor has frequently represented it to the gaol authorities, but no measures have yet been taken with reference to it: at which he has, to use his own words, "often wondered."

Repairs.

Repairs.

The prison appears to be in good repair; it is whitewashed twice every year; and, considering the number and class of prisoners confined in it, it is tolerably clean.

Drainage.

Drainage.

The drainage is not good. In winter the lower part of the prison has, at times, appeared to us to be damp. This has also been remarked upon by the officers of the prison.

Ventilation.

Ventilation.

The ventilation is bad; many of the cells and some of the day-wards are very close and offensive; and, from the manner in which the buildings are crowded together, it is quite impossible that the current of air should be free.

Temperature.

Temperature.

We have generally found the temperature good; there are fires in the day-rooms, and the supply of coals seems sufficient.

In concluding these observations on construction, we feel it our duty to observe, that nothing can be worse than the arrangements of this prison. We see no remedy for them but entire reconstruction.

System—Discipline.

System—Discipline

The system is that of unrestrained association in its worst form; and, with the exception of the prisoners in the House of Correction, all are in entire idleness: and a more melancholy scene can scarcely be imagined than is presented in the listless groupes which we have found lounging against the walls, or gathered around the fires, endeavouring to kill time, or to dispel the tedium of idleness by depraved conversation; or sleeping on the benches, contracting and confirming habits of indolence, the most fruitful source of crime.

Arrangements for working the System.

Arrangements for working the System.

There are 12 male, and 3 female officers. (See Appendix B.) But, from the multiplicity of duties which occupy their time, and which frequently call them away from the prison, they are quite unequal to the task of maintaining efficient discipline, or of exercising proper control over the prisoners. Ten of these reside in the prison:—The governor—the taskmaster—the matron—the nurse—five male turnkeys and cook. And five reside out of the prison:—The chaplain—the surgeon—the baker—the superintendent of prisoners employed as carpenters, &c.—and the chapel clerk.

Wardsmen. (See Appendix C.)

Wardsmen.

Wardsmen, who are convicted prisoners, are appointed to each ward, whose duty it is to assist in maintaining order and cleanliness. (See Appendix C.) They are allowed an extra half pound of bread per day; but they derive pecuniary emoluments from other sources. They provide their fellow prisoners with various articles, such as coffee, butter, sugar, tea, eggs, and, sometimes, beer and meat. In all our inspections of this prison we have found abundant proof that this is the case; as, indeed, it is admitted to be both by prisoners and officers. In our last inspection there was not a single ward in which we did not find some of the following articles—coffee, sugar, butter, raw bacon, eggs, flour, writing paper, &c., which were claimed by the wardsmen as their property; and it was quite manifest that these articles could not have been for their own consumption, but constituted the stock with which they were carrying on a trade with their fellow prisoners. Some idea may be formed of the extent to which this practice is carried on in the charge ward, by referring to Appendix D., which consists of regular coffee-house accounts, kept by the wardsmen against the prisoners, of the several articles supplied to them. These accounts we found in the wardsman's cupboard; some of them we have in our possession, regularly dated up to the present time. There were also bills for various articles furnished by the neighbouring tradesmen to the wardsmen for the supply of the prisoners. We find that in the course of only six weeks one prisoner named P. incurred no less a debt than £5. 2*s*. 3*d*. to the wardsman T. P.; another prisoner, T. M., a debt of £2. 17*s*. to the same wardsman, who had sundry debts owing to him, amounting in all to the sum of £14. 8*s*. 2¼.

The obvious impropriety—the palpable illegality—of permitting convicted felons, while undergoing their punishment, to carry on, systematically, a profitable trade with their fellow

I.
Home District.
Metropolitan Gaols.
Giltspur-street Compter.

prisoners, and to receive their supplies from tradesmen without, is highly discreditable to the authorities whose duty it is to regulate the internal economy of this prison. The extent to which this disgraceful traffic is carried on is indicated by the large amount of the accounts. Nor are the items comprised in these accounts less deserving of notice:—Breakfasts, luncheon, dinners, suppers, are supplied both to prisoners and their friends; beer, tobacco, "egg-hot," and cocoa, are also furnished: the beer frequently in large quantities. On one day specified in the account, (see Appendix D.) we found that no less a quantity than 12½ pints of beer were sold to a single prisoner.

The wardsman, on taking charge of his office, purchases from the outgoing wardsman the articles necessary for his trade as coffee-house keeper. We have found several of these accounts, and we have inserted one in the Appendix D.

Visitors.

Visitors.

Visitors are admitted daily, Sundays included, to all classes of prisoners, both untried and convicted. On week days visitors are admitted to the House of Correction—prisoners from 12 till 2—to all other classes from 10 till 2. On Sundays from 9 till 10, and from 12 till 2. There are at least a hundred visitors daily; and on Sundays nearly two hundred, on which day the prison, to use the language of the principal turnkey, "is like a fair or a market."

Visitors are admitted into the charge and fines wards, where they may sit and eat and drink with those prisoners whom they come to see. The chaplain states that many bad characters, both male and female, are admitted amongst the visitors; and whatever impression divine service may have produced in the prisoner's minds on the Sunday, must speedily be obliterated by the crowd of visitors who, immediately after service, are admitted to the prisoners. In the other yards visitors speak to their friends through open iron railings; through which prohibited articles might be passed with every facility: and, in point of fact, such articles frequently do pass. An officer is seldom present at these visits. There is a regular visiting room in the females' prison, and the prisoners are separated from their friends by an iron railing, which is covered with a close wire grating. The untried and the convicted see their friends together. Male visitors are searched, if they are suspected; but as there is no female searcher, decency forbids that the female visitors should be searched, except in extraordinary cases; and then the matron is summoned from the females' prison to perform this duty. There was a case some short time ago, when a woman was detected in making an effort to introduce spirits into the prison. The governor had her taken at once before the Aldermen at Guildhall; but the woman was dismissed without any punishment:—a fact which, no doubt, was made known to many of the prisoners' friends, and was calculated to satisfy them, that, in endeavouring to evade the prison regulations, and to introduce prohibited articles, they were exposing themselves to little risk.

Visitors are allowed to bring to their friends, whether convicted or untried, in limited quantities, money, cold cooked meat, coffee, tea, butter, sugar, bread, &c., in addition to the regular prison allowance.

Letters.

Letters.

Prisoners are not prohibited either from writing or receiving letters—and they are examined only when they are supposed to contain any improper information. We have found letters in the wards, which show that a prisoner in Newgate can correspond with a prisoner in Giltspur-street Compter; and that those in what is called solitary confinement in the Compter can correspond with those in the wards of the same prison.—See Appendix D.

Newspapers.

Newspapers.

Newspapers are said to be prohibited; but in each of our inspections we have found them in the charge ward. So recently as the 2nd of May we found three newspapers on the ward-table. The Morning Chronicle, the Standard, and the Weekly Dispatch: one of these papers bore the date of the 28th April.

Money.

Money.

The prisoners, the convicted as well as the unconvicted, are allowed money, if their friends can afford to send it them.

Several of those prisoners who are employed in the general service of the prison have from one shilling to eighteenpence per week.—See Appendix C. The male prisoners in the house of correction, employed at the mill, are allowed about sixpence per week. These sums are paid to the prisoners weekly; and they are permitted to expend this money, and whatever else they receive from their friends, in the purchase of cold cooked meat, butter, white bread, coffee, tea, &c., in addition to the gaol allowance.

Tobacco.

Tobacco.

Tobacco is said to be prohibited: but in one of our inspections we found no fewer than 13 papers of tobacco, made up in the penny portions sold by the wardsmen to the prisoners. On another occasion, whilst sitting in the governor's office, we perceived the smell of tobacco smoke so strong that we were led to inquire whence it came: and we found three or four prisoners smoking together in the charge ward, without any attempt at concealment. On a very recent inspection, we found in the cap of a prisoner in the house of correction a box filled with tobacco.

Beer.

Beer.

Beer is brought into the prison daily from 12 till one o'clock. All prisoners, males and females, tried and untried, are allowed to purchase it, if they can afford it. The House of Correction prisoners are allowed to buy half a pint daily; in some instances a pint; other prisoners, with the exception of boys, a pint daily. An officer goes round with the beerman, and sees the beer served to each male prisoner. The matron attends to the distribution to the female prisoners. Beer is allowed to certain of the prisoners engaged in the general service. The female prisoners in the wash-house are allowed by the matron a pint of beer each on Mondays, for washing her clothes; by the governor, one pint each on Tuesdays, for washing his clothes; and on Wednesday one pint of beer for each is allowed by the prison regulations.

The prisoners engaged in white-washing are also occasionally allowed half a pint of beer each, when working hard, or overtime.

As the beer and meals are served at the time when visitors are admitted, the prisoners and their friends not unfrequently eat and drink together. We may almost say that a greater burlesque upon prison discipline cannot well be imagined, than is exhibited in the management of this prison.

Spirituous Liquor.

Spirituous Liquor.

The attempt is made not unfrequently to introduce spirits; and the governor admits that, at times, it does find its way in.

Gaming.

Gaming.

Gaming is strictly prohibited; but not very long ago the governor found and destroyed a pack of cards in the House of Correction; and, considering that the prisoners are allowed money, and that they are so little under the inspection of the officers, he says he has no doubt that, to a limited extent, gaming is practised.

Meat.

Meat.

Cooked meat, in addition to the gaol allowance, is admitted in moderate proportions both to the convicted and untried; but raw meat is prohibited: yet in our inspections we have found uncooked beef and bacon.

Labour.

Labour.

The male prisoners in the House of Correction are employed in grinding corn with a crank mill for the supply of bread to this prison and the gaol of Newgate,—in breaking flax—in chopping wood—in painting and whitewashing the prison: they are also employed as carpenters, shoemakers, &c. The females in the house of correction are employed in spinning flax, and in washing, making, and mending for the prison. On referring to Appendix E, Return No. 2, Table No. 22, it will be seen that the labour is not productive to the prison. This is accounted for by the fact, that the profits are divided amongst the prisoners; which is done in the following manner:—The House of Correction male prisoners are allowed twopence for every bushel of wheat ground, which, divided amongst them weekly, averages sixpence each. Those employed as carpenters, whitewashers, &c., are allowed from one shilling to two shillings each per week. Prisoners on their discharge receive from one shilling to three each, as a portion of their earnings: no part of their earnings is applied to the officers of the prison. The following is the last annual account of the sums so paid to each class of prisoners:—

| | £ | s. |
|---|---|---|
| To prisoners employed at the mill . . . . . . . | 25 | 10 |
| To prisoners employed as carpenters, whitewashers, &c. . . | 28 | 3 |
| To ditto on their discharge . . . . . . . . | 14 | 13 |

No other class of prisoners have any employment, but pass their whole time in idleness.

Labour is said to be regarded as a punishment: this will always be the case in prisons on the associated system; where prisoners prefer the free intercourse with companions of similar tastes and habits to any regular employment. The taskmaster attends the male House of Correction prisoners during the hours of labour, and the wardsmen (prisoners) during the time allowed for air and exercise, and at their meals. There are three rooms in which the prisoners work, so that the taskmaster cannot have them constantly under his eye. Besides, he is a very negligent and inefficient officer. We have frequently found him absent from his duties; and, when he has been in attendance, we have more than once had occasion to observe upon the negligent manner in which he has performed them. The matron and wardswomen attend to the female prisoners during their hours of labour.

Chaplain's Duties.—Religious and Moral Instruction.

Chaplain's Duties.

Prayers are daily read in chapel to the male prisoners on Sunday, Christmas-day, and Good Friday. There are two full services: in the morning the Chaplain preaches a sermon; in the afternoon he expounds, in an easy and familiar manner, a portion of Scripture. The present Chaplain, the Rev. Thomas Boddington, was appointed to his office in October 1836; but he was officiating for some months previous, during the illness and subsequent to the death of his predecessor; and we have much pleasure in bearing testimony to the zeal and assiduity with which he devotes himself to his important duties. His salary is 200*l.* per annum. He has no other professional duties than those appertaining to the prison. When first he took charge of his duties, he found that the taskmaster read the daily prayers to the male prisoners in chapel; but he volunteered to take this duty upon himself, which he now regularly performs. Having observed the attention with which the prisoners listened to his plain and familiar expositions of Scripture; he thought it would be beneficial to devote 10 or 15 minutes daily to the explanation of the Lesson read in the course of the morning service; and he accordingly made application to the prison authorities for their sanction, but he did not succeed in obtaining it.

The female prisoners do not attend the daily morning service in chapel (this is contrary to the provisions of the gaol act, 4 Geo. IV., cap. 64, sec. 10, reg. 11); they are assembled in a room in the females' prison, and the matron reads the prayers to them; except on those days when any of the ladies of the British Association attend, which is now very seldom. The Chaplain attends them twice a week, on Tuesdays and Fridays, and reads and expounds the Scripture to them. He also sees and admonishes every prisoner who is admitted to or discharged from the prison. He visits, instructs, and admonishes, as he has time, the prisoners in the various wards; and he devotes a large portion of his time in endeavouring to procure situations for the discharged prisoners, or reconcile them to their friends; and he states that in this he has been very successful, and that he believes much good has resulted from this part of his labours.

Books.

Giltspur-street Compter.
Books.

The prison is well supplied with Bibles, Prayer Books, and tracts. Within the last few months the Chaplain obtained from the Bible Society, a grant of 25 Bibles for the use of the prison; he obtained also a grant of tracts from the Religious Tract Society; both charitable institutions; and the City furnished him with 50 prayer books.

School.

School.

There is no school; a circumstance which the Chaplain greatly regrets. He is anxious to have one, and would willingly devote a portion of his time to its superintendence and direction: there are many ignorant young persons who pass through this prison.

Health.

Health, Surgeon.

The Surgeon visits the prison daily, attends the sick and such prisoners as require his attendance. The health of the prisoners is remarkably good; and there is no connexion whatever to be traced between the diseases which have occurred, and the locality or actual state of the building, the diet, or the labour. The diseases most prevalent are the itch, venereal, rheumatism, and asthma: such complaints, in fact, as might naturally be expected from the previous habits, dissolute lives, and broken constitutions, of the great body of prisoners.

The proportion of sick to the whole number of prisoners admitted during the year is one in 38. The average number of days during which each individual remained on the sick list was 10. There were only four deaths out of 5,300 prisoners, who last year passed through this prison.

Infirmaries.

Infirmaries.

In the males' prison there are two infirmaries, the lower and the upper. The arrangements are sufficiently good for the number of sick. A nurse (not a prisoner) superintends the male infirmary; and she has a wardsman (a prisoner) to assist her in the care of the sick. The females' infirmary is superintended by the nurse and matron; here also there is a wardswoman.

Examining Room, Cleansing and Fumigating Room.

Examining, cleansing, and fumigating room.

There is no examining room; but the prisoners, immediately on their admission, are placed by order of the governor or principal turnkey in the ward allotted to them. Neither is there any cleansing room, or fumigatory for the clothing. There is a bath, but it has not been used for a very long time. Such of the prisoners as are admitted in a very filthy state, are ordered to be cleansed in their ward; but this is the exception, not, as it ought to be with all prisoners, the general rule.

Daily washing of the Prisoners.

Daily washing of the Prisoners.

The prisoners are directed to wash every morning; and water, as well as a sufficient supply of soap and towels, is provided in every ward. Generally speaking, the prisoners' persons appeared clean; with the exception of the vagrants, who are remarkably dirty.

Cleansing the Prison.

Cleansing the Prison.

Great pains appear to be taken in keeping the prison clean, which it is to a great degree, considering its generally crowded state, the low class of persons who are admitted, and the numerous charges which daily take place.

Diet.

Diet.

For the regular prison diet, see Appendix, Return No. 2, Table 18; but this is not a correct return. There are no entries under the head of other allowances; but the wardsmen and other prisoners employed in the general service are allowed half a pound of bread extra. The House of Correction prisoners who work the mill, are also allowed half a pound of bread extra; and the wash-house women are allowed three pints of beer weekly. But, in addition to the prison diet, the generality of prisoners purchase extra provisions: this leads to great irregularities, interferes with the awarded sentence, and greatly mitigates the severities of the law to those who happen to be able to provide for themselves comforts, and even luxuries; awakening a sense of injustice in the minds of those who cannot afford such indulgences. Whatever may be the opinion as to the propriety of allowing untried persons to provide themselves with extra diet, we think that it is highly improper that a convicted prisoner should have anything beyond the gaol allowance.

Clothing.

Clothing.

Convicted prisoners, both males and females, are clothed in the prison dress immediately on their admission to the prison. The dress is grey, and appears to be appropriate and sufficient.

Bedding.

Bedding.

The bedding consists of a mattrass, two blankets, and a coverlet: in the infirmaries sheets are provided. In summer the prisoners are allowed only one blanket. With the exception of that in the vagrants' ward, we found the prison bedding clean and good. But the vagrants are so exceeding filthy, that it is quite impossible to keep the cells, bedding, or utensils, allotted to them, in good order.

Offences within the Prison.

Offences within the Prison.

The number of punishments for offences within the prison in the course of the last year, upon an aggregate of prisoners exceeding 5,000, were only 20. This marks emphatically the laxity of the discipline. The offences most prevalent are quarrels amongst the prisoners, and assaults upon each other; swearing, and indecent language. The punishment consists of three days' confinement in solitary on bread and water: but, as there are no punishment cells, the offender is locked up in a sleeping cell. Not long ago a great disturbance took place in the

I.
HOME DISTRICT.

Metropolitan Gaols.

Giltspur-street Compter.

House of Correction. It was on a Sunday afternoon, just after evening service. Four prisoners were fighting, and the language made use of was dreadful. The governor was at this time confined to his apartments by ill health, and could not himself investigate the matter: and even if he had been able to do so, the offence was so serious, that, in the opinion of the chaplain, his power of punishment (being limited to three days' confinement on bread and water), was inadequate to the enormity of the offence, which, to use the chaplain's words, "was so bad, that, if not properly punished, the whole prison would mutiny." He, therefore, reported the case to the visiting justices, (the Aldermen); and one of them, in a day or two, came to the prison to inquire into the charge. He did not at that time finish the investigation; but said he would come again in a few days. This he neglected to do. Thus no further notice was taken of the outrage; no punishment was awarded; and a case of riot and fighting on the Sabbath, with language too horrible to be repeated; a case considered as too atrocious to be met by the power of punishment vested in the governor; a case formally reported to the aldermen, and in course of actual investigation by one of them, and therefore taken under these peculiar circumstances, out of the hands of the governor; is abruptly abandoned without adjudication, and no further notice taken—is passed over without any punishment whatever!

It was our painful duty to report to your Lordship in our letter of the 22nd of July last, a circumstance of a most awful nature, which had recently occurred in this very prison—Giltspur-street Compter—and we quote the passage we then had the honour of addressing to you:—

> "A prisoner, convicted of an assault of an abominable nature, was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, with hard labour, in the Giltspur-street House of Correction. He was placed in that part of the prison called the 'Fines ward,' with, upon an average, twelve other prisoners, amongst whom was a boy aged fourteen years. From the intimacy observed to exist between this prisoner and the boy, and from certain suspicious circumstances, the other prisoners were led to believe that something improper had taken place between them. They questioned the boy; who confessed, that, after several attempts, this man had succeeded in perpetrating an unnatural offence with him in the privy of the ward. The other prisoners immediately communicated this confession to the governor, by whom it was reported to the Court of Aldermen; and they, having inquired into the case, found sufficient grounds to direct, that when the sentence, under which this man was suffering, expired (which would be in a few days), he should be transferred to Newgate, to take his trial for the new offence. But, upon the morning on which he was to have been removed to Newgate, he was found dead in his cell, having hung himself by a piece of rope to the iron gratings over his cell-door. * * * * There is ground to believe that this prisoner availed himself of the opportunity to corrupt, and even to commit the capital offence with a boy only fourteen years of age; and the whole ends with self-murder! We feel that further comment is unnecessary."

This passage shews the facility with which the most atrocious offences may be perpetrated in this prison, under its present arrangements; and by what awful results such offences may be followed.

The suicide of this miserable man prevented the case from being brought forward, in a Court of Justice, and saved the City Authorities from that public exposure of the state of one of their prisons, which the trial of the prisoner for an abominable crime must have made. In consequence of the laxity of the discipline the capital offence is committed—by the laxity of the discipline the offender escapes from justice, by the further crime of suicide—by the laxity of the discipline the public exposure of the condition of the prison, and consequent disgrace to the City Authorities, are prevented; and up to this time no alteration has taken place in the arrangements of the prison; no steps have been taken to prevent a repetition of similar crimes; and in this very prison, another offender, under a capital charge, has recently escaped from the hands of justice by another suicide—the second within a year! Whereas, if proper precaution had been taken by the introduction of a well-regulated discipline, and if proper surveillance had been exercised over such important cases, neither the one nor the other could have occurred.

Recommittals.

Recommittals.

The recommittals to this prison, which have been recorded in the course of last year, amount to 678—(See Appendix E, Return No. 2, Table 11,) but this must be very much below the real number. The chaplain expressed to us his opinion that half of those committed to the prison were old offenders. With reference to the very day on which we saw him, he said—"There were seven new charges this morning; four of them were recommittals—there were about as many remands; and at least half of them were old offenders." On a recent occasion both the governor and chaplain thought they recognised an old offender in a man committed under a different name. He denied that he had ever been in prison before. The turnkeys also recognised him. The wardsman, a prisoner, was sent for; but he denied the identity of the man in question. But, after the liberation of this prisoner, the wardsman, still in confinement, came forward of his own accord, and confessed that, when questioned, he was aware that the man was an old offender, and the individual supposed, but that he did not dare to acknowledge it; declaring that his life would not have been safe after his discharge, if he had told the truth, and borne testimony against his fellow-prisoner. This shows how little prisoners are to be depended upon when acting as wardsmen, or when employed by the authorities in maintaining order and discipline.

Accounts.

Accounts.

The following account books, registers, and journals, are kept in this prison:—Governor's, chaplain's, and surgeon's journals; the non-resident officers' book; the lodge book; the Giltspur-street prison charge book; commitment book; the journal for felonies and misdemeanors of a serious nature; the House of Correction commitment book; the index book; the Giltspur-street prison and House of Correction description book; the daily occurrence book; the clothing and bedding book; the wheat, bread, and coal books.

Copy of a Letter directed to Mr. P——, Wardsman of Bail Ward.

Dear Sir,

I trust I need not apologize for thus troubling you. My motive for so doing is merely to remind you of the conversation that passed between us respecting the situation which B—— held. I believe you to have much interest with our worthy governor, therefore, pray let me intreat you, if there is a possibility, of placing me in that situation. I am certain sure I am quite capable of giving every satisfaction required; and you may fully depend on my discharging the duty with the utmost punctuality, and faithfully adhere to those principles which is generally expected from the inmates of this retired mansion.

I understood from one of the persons belonging to this establishment, that you had a little good news to inform me—pray let me know it as soon as possible; you can easily convey a note by the bakers, under seal, any time, which I hope you will, as I am much in want of some consolitary information, I do assure you, for at present my mind is sadly depressed, and more particularly so, being in a retired place.

I am, Sir, with all due respect,
Yours, &c., most sincerely,
J. R——.

Copy of a Letter from a Prisoner in Newgate to a Prisoner in Giltspur-street Compter.

Dear H——. Newgate, 1836. Sunday, 6th Nov.

I hope you are well, and all my enquiring friends. I am as well as things will allow. I have not heard of any thing yet: give my best respects to all of them my friends, not forgetting the turnkeys. I am going to Gosport, on board the York. Mr. H——, can I beg of you to write to Mr. Capper, for him to send me away as soon as he can from there?

I remain, your most humble servant,
R—— N——.

God bless you all.

To Mr. H——, Prisoner, Giltspur-street Compter.

GAOL OF NEWGATE.

Gaol of Newgate.

Our last Report contained so full an account of the then condition of the gaol of Newgate, that we feel it unnecessary on the present occasion to repeat those particulars which we have already so circumstantially related.

Our present purpose is to describe the alterations which, in accordance with the recommendation of the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, have been since effected in Newgate, and which consist either of improvements in the construction, or of regulations for the better management of the prison.

Improvements in the Construction.

Improvements in the Construction. Inspection.

Throughout the wards of the prison, inspection-holes have been formed in the doors, and in the most convenient situations in the walls, and wherever it has been practicable, windows have been formed opening into the well-holes (as they are called), for the purpose of securing better light and ventilation. The racks upon which the bedding was formerly arranged during the day-time have been removed, and bed-places (three tier high for the males, and two tier high for the females) have been contracted for, and partially supplied.

A dining-room has been provided for the prisoners confined in the several wards belonging to the middle yard, and the same arrangement has been made with respect to the masters' side yard. The windows of these dining-rooms have been glazed, and the flooring of one of them has been raised 18 inches, as a precaution against damp; and for the same purpose some minor alterations have been made in the rooms above-mentioned, one of which, in consequence of damp, had been unoccupied for many years. Tables also have been provided, on which the prisoners take their meals.

The dust-bins and watering-places have been removed from all the yards. No other watering-places have as yet been provided, and the prisoners, during the time they are taking exercise, make water at the sinks where they wash. We understand, however, that the Sheriffs have given directions that the dining-rooms should be left open during the day, in order that the prisoners might have access to the water-closets adjoining them, instead of using the sinks; until some better arrangement can be made.

Such of the windows in the wards as are ordered to be glazed are to be painted on the outside, to prevent the prisoners from looking out; and for the same purpose blinds are to be placed opposite to that part of each window which opens. The Sheriffs are desirous that all the windows of the prison should be glazed; but as yet no orders have been given to that effect.

A cleansing-room and bath, with hot and cold water laid on, have been provided both in the male and female side of the prison, as well as a fumigatory and a store-room for the prisoners' clothing. There is only one fumigatory for the clothing both of males and females. The Sheriffs are of opinion that all prisoners, both male and female, should be cleansed and bathed as soon after their admission as they shall have been examined by the surgeon. At present this is not the case; the baths are now used only in cases of excessive filth.

The press-room and the ward above it have been subdivided into 9 separate cells; the former apartment into 4 cells, the latter into 5, each cell being about 12 feet by 7, and 11 feet high, with a passage 5 feet wide, into which the cells open. The windows of all the cells have been glazed; inspection-holes have been formed in the doors; iron bedsteads have been provided; and close to the window of each cell a small desk has been fixed, at which the prisoners may read or write. The small yard in the rear of the cells has been made an airing-yard, by filling up the bath which was formerly in it; and the yard in front of the cells has been divided by a wall: thus giving to the prisoners confined in the cells three airing-yards, in which they take exercise singly for one hour a-day, always in the presence of a turnkey. A staircase and communication have been formed from the new to the old cells, and in the passages, which had been previously dark, windows have been made. Larger windows have been formed likewise in the old cells (which are 15 in number) to secure increased light and more complete ventilation. The prisoners confined in these cells have a chamber utensil, which is emptied every morning, and as often during the day as may be necessary; and a turnkey is in constant attendance upon the cells. The cistern in the corner of the cell fronting the airing-yard, which facilitated the escape of a prisoner in the month of July last, has been removed, and additional security has been provided against future attempts of that nature; but another escape has been recently effected from another part of the prison.

A wall, which formerly divided a passage about 6 feet wide from the chapel-yard, has been taken down, and the space thence arising has been thrown into the yard, thereby improving the light and ventilation of the adjoining wards; and it is proposed to divide this enlarged yard into two, to obtain an additional airing-yard. The walls which divide the yard on the north side have been lowered about three feet, for the purpose of improving the ventilation.

Between the chapel-yard and cells, a room has been appropriated to theuse of the turnkeys on duty day and night, and a water-closet has been provided for those officers in the adjoining well-hole.

On the upper floor of that part of the prison which looks into the north yard, three rooms have been set apart for the male infirmary, two for sleeping-rooms, and one for a day-room. A water-closet and a medicine-closet have been provided adjoining them. An officer is to be appointed as a permanent superintendent of the infirmary, under the direction of the surgeon. This officer is to reside in the infirmary, and to act as turnkey and attendant upon the sick.

At all the visiting-places double iron railings, about two feet apart, have been provided; and it is intended to cover them with a close wire grating, so as to prevent the visitors from conveying prohibited articles to the prisoners.

Between the chapel-yard and the passage leading to the north side, and conveniently situated with reference to the chapel, a room has been provided for the use of the chaplain, with water-closet and washing appendages, cupboard for books and robes, and a bell to summon the attendant; and the chaplain may cause to be brought to him to this room any male prisoner whom he may wish to admonish or confer with in private.

The superintendents and turnkeys no longer reside in the prison. Lodgings have been provided for them without, and the apartments formerly occupied by them have been converted into wards for the prisoners. The wards which had been previously occupied by carpenters and other trades, are now appropriated to the use of the prisoners.

On the female side of the prison the apartments lately occupied by Mr. Newman, the superintendent, have been converted into rooms for one of the matrons, and wards for the female prisoners. A communication has been formed on each floor, all round the female prison. A passage at the back of six of the wards has been removed, and the space thus arising has been thrown into them, and a water-closet has been constructed in each. Inspection-holes have been provided in all the wards, as well as on the male side of the prison.

The wall which divided the area within the female prison into two very unequal portions has been taken down, and the space is now divided into two yards of equal dimensions.

The matron's apartments in the upper floor of the prison have been converted into wards, and she has been provided with other apartments on the ground floor, so situated as to give her better means of superintending and inspecting that part of the prison which is committed to her charge. A new reception-ward has also been provided for the females, and an additional place for washing their linen.

Regulations for the better Management of the Prison.

The prisoners are to be placed in the various wards, according to the number which each is supposed to be capable of containing. On referring to Appendix A, the actual state of each ward in the prison, from the 1st April last up to the present time, may be seen; and from that statement it will appear that as many as 26 prisoners have been placed in a single ward at one time. In Appendix (B) will be seen the number which the prison authorities purpose placing together, when all their arrangements shall have been completed; and by this it appears that from 15 to 18 prisoners will be placed together in a single ward. Separate wards are to be appropriated to felóns and misdemeanants. Prisoners of the former class are again to be subdivided into such as are known, and such as are not known, to have been previously committed to this prison or to others; and the same regulation is to take place with respect to the misdemeanants. It is further purposed, if the number of wards shall prove sufficient to admit of a third subdivision, to separate the better class of characters from the worse.

The doors of all the wards are kept locked, and the prisoners consigned to them respectively are closely confined to them both by day and by night, with the exception of meal times, and an hour each day for exercise in the airing yards.

There is a dining-room, which is used by the prisoners of the four wards belonging to the middle yard; and another for the prisoners of the master's side-yard. The prisoners are brought into the dining-rooms, under the superintendence of the turnkeys; and they take their meals there in silence; the officer saying grace both before and after breakfast and dinner. With respect to the rest of the wards, the prisoners take their meals in them. The prisoners of each ward are allowed one hour's exercise daily; each ward using the airing yard successively for this purpose. The prisoners take their exercise in silence; walking in a circle in single file, and in the presence of an officer.

Prison Diet.

The provisions are weighed out, according to the prison dietary, in the kitchen, under the direction of an officer. Portions are served to each ward, according to the number of prisoners confined in it, in trays with divisions for each portion; and these are distributed amongst the prisoners by an officer; thus securing a just distribution, and avoiding favouritism and unfairness, and the consequent disputes which arose when the provisions were conveyed to the wards in the mass, and there subdivided by the wardsman, a prisoner.

Visitors.

Visitors are admitted to the untried three times a week—on Mondays, Thursdays, and Saturdays—between the hours of half past 10 and 2: to the convicted, once a week—on Tuesdays, from half past 10 till 2. Only one visitor is admitted to see each prisoner; except under special circumstances; and then by order of the sheriffs or magistrates. A rota of the Aldermen is appointed, two in each month, who are the Visiting Justices for that month; and these, with the Sheriffs, are the only parties who have power to give orders for the admission of visitors. On the female side of the prison, male and female visitors have separate times for visiting; they are not allowed to go in together; and it is intended that the same rule shall apply to visitors on the male side.

Admission of Provisions. Provisions are admitted, as under the former regulations; and those prisoners who have money may purchase them, or their friends may bring them in on the visiting days. This regulation causes a vast deal of confusion, and operates very unequally with reference to those who can afford to buy food or have friends to supply them, and those who have neither money nor friends. It leads to robbery, and consequent quarrels, among the prisoners; and thus it causes a waste of time both to the governor and turnkeys, in the necessary investigations which they are compelled to institute into such occurrences; it is obvious, also, that all this must lead to frequent punishments.

The Sheriffs object to this regulation, and are of opinion that the general diet ought to be made sufficient, and that no extra provisions should be admitted either to the convicted or to the untried. No beer or extra provisions are allowed to the convicted male prisoners, except by order of the surgeon; and then to those only who are sent to the infirmary. But the female convicted prisoners are allowed to procure tea, coffee, sugar; and needles, thread, and tape, for the repair of their clothes; and one of the female officers purchases these articles for them.

Beer. Those who can afford to pay for it are allowed to purchase a pint of beer daily. An officer always accompanies the beer-man from the time of his entrance into the prison until the beer is distributed. Each prisoner comes to the gate of the yard for his portion; he receives it in a separate vessel, and pays for it at the time. The officer notes in a book the names of those who have beer, with a view to prevent the same person from receiving more than his regular allowance. Under the present arrangements the Sheriffs say they have no doubt that prisoners who have money can, by the aid of other prisoners, obtain more than the pint of beer to which they are entitled; and they are opposed to its admission except by order of the surgeon for health.

Money. Prisoners are allowed to bring in, or receive, money. To this also the Sheriffs are opposed, as it leads to gambling and many other irregularities. They are of opinion, that all moneys should be taken, or withheld, from the prisoners; and that the governor should keep a book, in which he should enter all sums of money brought in by the prisoners, or given to them by their friends, which they should receive back on their discharge or removal from the prison.

Tobacco. No tobacco, in any shape, is allowed to be introduced; it is most carefully excluded.

Newspapers. Newspapers also are carefully excluded; and the Sheriffs are of opinion that not one newspaper has found its way into the prison since they have been in office.

Books. Bibles, Testaments, Prayer Books, and tracts, are provided by the gaol authorities. All other books are submitted to the chaplain, and none are admitted without his sanction.

Shop. The shop at the extrance to the female prison has been abolished.

Receiving Ward. Prisoners are placed, on their admission, in the receiving wards allotted to the male and female prisoners respectively, and they remain there until they have been examined by the surgeon. They are then distributed to the various wards according to their offences, and the governor's knowledge of them. The surgeon's examination takes place once a-day; but the Sheriffs are of opinion that it should be made both morning and evening. The description of the prisoners (both male and female) continue up to the present time to be taken in the bread-room, which is on the male side. The Sheriffs had directed that the description of the female prisoners should be taken in the females' reception ward; and they have now repeated their order, that no female prisoner shall, on any pretence whatever, be permitted to quit the female prison during the term of her imprisonment.

Letters. Letters are admitted to and from the prisoners. They are examined by the governor, his clerk, or the principal turnkeys. The names of those prisoners who send or receive letters are entered in a book; all improper letters are stopped, and submitted to the Sheriffs.

Prison Dress. No prison dress is provided. Clothing is given whenever it is absolutely wanted, but as scantily as possible.

Wardsmen. No wardsmen or wardswomen (prisoners) are now appointed; the authorities depend upon the officers solely for the maintenance of the discipline.

Washing Prisoners' Linen. No provision has been made on the male side for the washing of the prisoners' linen; on the female side an additional washing place has been provided.

Washing Prisoners' Persons. The allowance for soap remains the same as when we last reported; but a supply of towels and combs has been provided, and they are daily inspected by the turnkey on duty.

Coals. Coals are distributed to the wards every Friday. Officers take the allotted portions to the gates of the respective yards, from whence the prisoners carry them to the wards, in each of which boxes are provided for them. On the female side a vault has been formed for coals, and the female prisoners, under the superintendence of one of the matrons, fetch them from thence up to the wards as they are required. The vaults can be filled from an opening without; but the opening for the distribution is within the female prison. By this arrangement the objectionable practice of the male prisoners conveying the weekly supply of coals to the female prison is obviated.

Bedding. The prison bedding still consists of a rope mat and three rugs; but it is intended to substitute a straw mattrass for the rope mat.

Officers. See Appendix C. The number of officers engaged in the management of the prison is 29, all of these (with the exception of the governor and the female officers) reside out of the prison. The matrons still retain their apartments; but no male visitors are, on any pretence, admitted to see them.

Such are the alterations which have recently taken place in the construction and discipline of the gaol of Newgate. When they were first contemplated, and submitted for your Lordship's sanction in a Report of the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, we addressed a letter to your Lordship, bearing date the 16th of November, 1836, and this letter we desire again to bring under your consideration, as the sentiments which we then expressed remain unchanged, and have received additional confirmation from the result of our inquiries into the present condition of Newgate.

Copy of a Letter addressed by the Inspectors of Prisons for the Home District to the Right Honourable Lord John Russell.

My Lord,

We beg to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from Mr. Phillipps, dated the 11th Instant, transmitting to us, by your Lordship's direction, a Report from the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex recommending that certain alterations should be made in the Gaol of Newgate; and desiring us to submit to your Lordship our observations on the Report.

The suggested improvements consist either of certain alterations in the construction of some of the internal divisions, or of regulations for the better discipline of the prison.

The alterations which it is proposed to make in the construction are these:—

The conversion of the press room into four cells—a division of the press yard—the taking down two walls of other yards, and building two new walls in other situations—the providing of a bath and fumigatory in the vaults of the prison—the separation of the condemned yard by a wall, and the fitting up of a bath in one of the yards—the placing Hopper blinds at all the windows—and the removal of a cistern and some dust binns.

There are other suggestions which may be conveniently classed under this head; they relate merely to the future appropriation of cells and apartments to other purposes than those to which they are now applied—namely,—the cells for prisoners under sentence of death to be used for prisoners charged with unnatural offences—the kitchen near the press yard to be a visiting room—the visiting apartments of the first yard to be a day-room—Ward No. 14 to be a day-room—and the present visiting apartment on the female side to be a bed-room.

The regulations for the better discipline of the prisoners consist of those which ensure a complete separation between the tried and the untried, and a proper classification of criminals, separating the hardened and frequent offenders from the novice in crime and repentant criminal; limiting the association of prisoners to an intercourse with those only in their own ward; the providing of a separate bedstead for each prisoner, and providing a room for the Ordinary, in which he could see any prisoner who might be desirous of conferring with him on religious subjects.

Such, my Lord, are the measures by which it is proposed to amend the construction and discipline of Newgate, and by the adoption of which the Sheriffs of London express their persuasion that the Gaol of Newgate will become a pattern for all others. We do not hesitate to avow that this persuasion is in opposition to our deliberate opinion—it is in opposition to the resolutions of a Select Committee of the House of Commons, which distinctly state "that it is expedient to provide means for the separate confinement of prisoners committed for trial before the Central Criminal Court; and that for this purpose it is advisable either to reconstruct Newgate, or to build a new prison adjoining the place of trial." It is in opposition to your Lordship's most pointed and important observations in your letter to the Lord Mayor of the 4th of June last, in which your Lordship states 'Separation appears to me to be in all such prisons most desirable, but in a metropolitan prison absolutely essential.'

But, my Lord, what measures do the Sheriffs propose for the introduction of a sytem of separate confinement, or even for an approximation to that system? Literally none. On the contrary, the whole tendency of their regulations and alterations is to establish and perpetuate that very system of gaol association which we have felt it our duty to denounce as being fraught with most serious evils, which no improvement of the system can possibly remove or mitigate. My Lord, we feel that we should be wanting in our duty, we should betray the important interests involved in the conscientious discharge of our most responsible trust, if we were to afford the slightest ground for even a faint imputation upon the truth and accuracy of our views respecting the utter inadequacy, the powerful mischief, of any system of prison discipline, especially for the untried, which stops short of separate confinement; that conclusion, deliberately formed upon long, patient, and varied investigation, has, since our declaration of it in our first Report, been established upon a foundation which cannot be shaken. Everything we have seen or heard in our recent tours of inspection has confirmed us in this opinion. It has been corroborated by the testimony of magistrates, intelligent keepers of prisons, and by prisoners themselves; by the recorded resolutions of the Select Committee of the House of Commons, and by your Lordship's declaration in your letter to the Lord Mayor of London, to which we have before referred. These are authorities in support of the separate system of confinement which no zeal or activity on the part of the civil functionaries can weaken in our estimation; nor can we permit any exertions, however active for the removal of minor blemishes, to turn away our eyes from the contemplation of the master-evil, gaol association; which gives existence and vigour to every other, and with the extinction of which almost every other evil would disappear. The Sheriffs may imagine that by pulling down one wall and building up another; by constructing a few new cells in one place, and providing better ventilation for another, all will go on well and smoothly—They are mistaken: the deep-seated mischief still continues—gaol contamination, with all its fearful consequences, still goes on; the comparatively innocent are corrupted—the bad become worse—and the duties of the chaplain, whose instructions are called in to aid the scheme, become a laughing stock to the abandoned inmates, and a wearisome burden to the minister himself.

We observe that the Reports dwell with emphasis upon the sufficiency of classification. They state "that on the commitment of prisoners the governor classifies them according to their crimes and his knowledge of them; which we think most proper and judicious." We think, on the contrary, with all deference to the Sheriffs, that it is most improper, and, we might almost say, absurd: improper, because the operation of this regulation, which proceeds upon classification according to crime, must often assign a hardened and experienced villain, committed for a petty offence, to the place allotted to those who are new to the ways and companionship of more atrocious offenders; and, we might almost say, absurd, because it assumes that the governor is acquainted with the previous character of the newly-committed prisoners, of whom, in very many cases, he can know nothing; and of this our own experience, limited as it necessarily is, has given us illustration. We have found in some prisons, in situations of trust, as wardsmen, monitors, &c., men whom we instantly recognised as having been confined for previous offences in other prisons, and that unknown to the governor of the prison who had promoted them. What we have witnessed on several occasions, is, in all likelihood, a frequent occurrence.

Such are some of the persons upon whose previous character the governor is called upon immediately to pronounce.

We have now frankly, and we trust respectfully, declared to your Lordship our objections to the leading measures of the Sheriffs, as stated in their Report. To those measures our opposition is decided and unalterable. We cannot but discern in them an attempt to prevent the adoption of a system which is approved by our own multiplied observations and experience, by the testimony of competent judges, and sanctioned by the highest authority, by a Committee of the House of Commons, and by your Lordship. Wherever we have proceeded on our tours of inspection, we have found the magistracy most anxious to second your Lordship's enlightened efforts for the amelioration of the prisons throughout the kingdom, and it is, finally, approved and espoused by an influential party in the corporation and city of London.

In conclusion, we think it right to state our conviction that the alterations proposed in the Gaol of Newgate will be attended with considerable expense; and that this expenditure will not render the erection of a new prison the less absolutely essential to the interests of justice, the protection of the innocent, and the prevention of crime.

We have the honour to be,
My Lord,
Your Lordship's obedient humble Servant,
(Signed) Wm. Crawford,
Whitworth Russell,
Inspectors of Prisons.

Though the alterations which have taken place in the construction and discipline of this prison have had the effect of introducing in some respects an appearance of order, yet the great master evil, gaol association, and consequent contamination, still remain. By referring to Appendix A, it will be seen that as many as 26 prisoners have, up to the present time, been confined together in one ward; and, on referring to Appendix B, it will be seen that even when all the contemplated arrangements shall have been completed, from 15 to 18 prisoners are to be placed together. Thus are they associated in close companionship during the 24 hours, with the exception only of two hours—the times of meals and exercise—during which period they are in the presence of officers and are kept in silence. And here we cannot forbear observing upon the palpable absurdity of enforcing silence during the short time that the prisoners are in the presence of officers, while for the remainder of the day and night they are left to unrestrained intercourse in their wards. Though inspection holes have been formed in the doors and walls, we know from experiment that it is quite impossible to hear, by means of them, the conversation which is uninterruptedly going forward; and we observed in our recent inspections that sentinels were placed over those inspection holes to give intimation to their companions whenever an eye was upon them. In two of the wards we ourselves saw gambling going on; in a third we saw, through the inspection hole, a group engaged in communication upon some subject of great apparent interest, which they seemed to be discussing with considerable earnestness, and which proved, on our entering the ward, to be a defence of one of the prisoners, which they were then in the act of framing, with their combined ingenuity. In addition to the instances of gaming which we witnessed, we found three prisoners in punishment cells for the same offence: we found two others under confinement for robbing their companions; and on referring to Appendix D, which consists of extracts from the journal of punishments for the present year, it will be seen that bad language, irreverent behaviour in chapel, gaming, stealing from fellow prisoners, and fighting, are still offences of frequent occurrence—proving that whatever influence the alterations which have been recently introduced may have had in diffusing a general appearance of order and subordination, the improvement is really superficial and delusive, while the great source of prison demoralization is shown to be as active and powerful as ever.

An Order in Council has directed that the prisoners heretofore sentenced to confinement in Newgate shall undergo their punishment in the Penitentiary. By a Bill introduced by your Lordship, and now in progress through Parliament, a power is to be given to transfer to the Penitentiary the male and female transports, there to await their removal to the colonies—thus authorizing the immediate withdrawal of all convicts from Newgate, and devoting that gaol exclusively to the detention of the untried. By the great promptitude and expedition with which orders for the removal of convicted prisoners from Newgate to their respective destinations have been transmitted from the Office over which your Lordship presides, this prison has been relieved, with the least possible delay, of convicted prisoners, and given up to the untried, for whose safe custody it is to be exclusively set apart. While your Lordship has done all that lay in your power to facilitate the improvement of the Metropolitan prison, the City Authorities have contented themselves with doing no more than we have now detailed.

In protesting, as we most earnestly do, against the recent alterations in Newgate being considered final and sufficient, we are borne out no less by the evils which are shown still to exist in that prison, than by the very nature of the system pursued in it, from which no other effects could be reasonably anticipated. Wherever there is association, there (in spite of all discipline, however ingeniously devised, or strictly administered) will be found the frightful evil of contamination. We infer the fact from the nature of the case—we demonstrate it by pointing to the present condition of Newgate.

NOTE.

We deemed it advisable that Mr. Chesterton's evidence should be submitted to him previously to its publication; and, accordingly, we caused the proof sheets in which it appears to be shown to him. After hearing the evidence, he was asked whether it was correct, and he replied, without hesitation, "I see nothing contrary to the facts, or to my evidence."

Mr. Chesterton has since written the following note, which we feel bound, in candour and fairness to that gentleman, to publish; re-asserting here, in justice to ourselves, the correctness of the evidence as given in our Report. The point contended for by us, and not denied by him, is the fact that the Silent System is chargeable with numerous evils and defects, from which no zeal or promptitude on the part of the officer by whom it is administered, can free it. These evils and defects are inherent in the System itself, and this Mr. Chesterton's evidence abundantly attests.

Mr. Chesterton tendered two passages in writing which he wished should form part of his evidence. They have been printed verbatim: one of them, that which in the printed evidence is marked by the heading "Comparative Merits of the Silent System," contains the same sentiments with the note which we now publish; and we supposed that Mr. Chesterton, in tendering that passage as part of his evidence, designed to assert that though he was compelled to admit the difficulties which were inseparable from the Silent System, yet that it had been, in his opinion, productive of great moral benefit; and it was far from our intention to cause him to convey any other meaning. It is also due to Mr. Chesterton to state that his evidence consists of replies to questions put to him.

"House of Correction, Cold Bath Fields, May 11, 1837.

"Since you were here on Monday last and showed me my evidence in print, I have felt much distressed at the very peculiar nature of my position with reference to the Silent System; for while my evidence, in answer for the most part to leading questions, appears strongly to condemn it, I, on the contrary, taking it as a whole, have always highly approved of it, at least as it has been worked here. That there are numerous difficulties in its enforcement which require constant vigilance and promptitude to remove I readily admit; but innumerable difficulties would arise under the Separate System or any other. You must be aware, from the conversations which I have had with you, that I really do think highly of the system as enforced here, and yet I appear to condemn it. This is the anomaly which grieves me, and which would not have existed had the questions together with my answers have been published as in Parliamentary Inquiries. Many points will admit of much qualification or explanation; and I am convinced that, taking the varied terms of imprisonment, from three days to three years, and the various cases, from the most trivial misdemeanour to the gravest felony, nothing like this system, in point of moral benefit, has yet been perfected in this country. Discipline is upheld and contamination suppressed. I have looked with great satisfaction at our efforts, and I am quite distressed to be made to decry that which, as a whole, my deliberate judgment approves. I have from day to day been doubtful as to the most advisable course under such circumstances to pursue; but, without going into any analysis of the evidence, I have thought it desirable to inform you respectfully that I must demur to the unqualified censure cast upon the system."

County Gaol and House of Correction.

Bedford Gaol and House of Correction.

Construction.

This Prison is situated in the County Town of Bedford, and stands on a small plot of ground of about 176 feet square, inclosed by a boundary wall of 20 feet high. The Lodge, which is detached from the main building, consists of an entrance lobby, a fumigating room, and the Turnkey's apartments. The principal building stands in the middle of the inclosure, and, with its airing-yards, occupies nearly the whole space; the remainder being used as a garden. It was erected in the year 1800, with the exception of a small addition made in 1820 for female debtors. It is substantially built, and consists of three stories. In the centre, on the basement or first floor, there is a large hall, of an oblong form; above which, on the second floor, is the principal store-room; and on the third floor is the prison chapel. There are large well-holes in the floors of the store-room and chapel, and over the latter is a skylight for giving light and ventilation from the roof to the basement. The Governor's house adjoins this central portion of the Prison, on the front or south side; and three small wings, appropriated to the prisoners, and contradistinguished by the names of the East, North, and West Wings, issue from the other three sides. The entrance to these wings is through the Governor's house by a passage terminating in the hall. In the three floors of each wing, which are designated the lower, middle, and upper galleries, there are corridors running through the middle, and opening into the hall, store-room and chapel, by open grated doors, having a range of cells, &c. on each side; and at the opposite or most distant extremity of each wing, there is a staircase for the prisoners, leading from the lower to the middle and upper galleries. In all the cells there are ventilators opening on the corridors, by which prisoners might converse from cell to cell in each gallery. In most of the cells, in the debtors' sleeping rooms, and in the infirmaries, there are windows, which, although screened, will admit of missiles being introduced into the airing-yards below. There are ring holes cut through the stone floors of the corridors of the upper and middle galleries, whereby prisoners in these corridors might see and be seen, and converse from gallery to gallery in the same wing. The east and west wings being directly opposite, prisoners in the corridors of the upper and middle galleries might, through the open grated doors opening into the chapel and store-room (which intervene between these wings), see, and be seen, and converse across the latter, from wing to wing.

Wards.

East Wing. The east wing consists of the following divisions:—
Lower gallery, two day-rooms, 14 feet by 8 feet, 9 feet high;
four receiving cells, 8 feet 4 inches by 6 feet 6 inches, 9 feet high.
Middle gallery, eight sleeping cells, same dimensions as receiving cells.
Upper gallery, eight sleeping cells, same dimensions.

There are two airing-yards attached to it, accessible from the respective day-rooms.

This wing is appropriated to untried male felons and misdemeanants (classes Nos. 1 and 2), who by day are mixed, and associate in one of the day-rooms. At night the misdemeanants occupy the middle, and the felons the upper gallery; but, whenever either class is overcrowded, the excess are brought into the gallery of the other. Whenever there are transports (which often happens immediately after the sessions and gaol deliveries), they occupy, for a short time, one of the day-rooms and the upper gallery exclusively; and the number of felons being then generally diminished, there is room for both the untried classes in the middle gallery, where they are accordingly placed; two or more prisoners of different classes, however, never occupying the same cell. The cells in the lower gallery are used as receiving cells for the two untried classes.

North Wing. The north wing consists of the following divisions:—
Lower gallery, two day-rooms, one, 27 feet by 9 feet, 9 feet high;
one, 8 feet 4 inches by 6 feet 6 inches, do. do;
one dark cell, 8 feet 4 inches by 6 feet 6 inches, do. do.;
one refractory cell, 8 feet 4 inches by 6 feet 6 inches, do. do.;
two sleeping cells, do. do. do. do.
Middle gallery, two sleeping rooms, 15 feet by 8 feet 4 inches, do. do.
four do. 8 feet 4 inches by 6 feet 6 inches, do. do.
Upper gallery, three infirmaries;
one store-room.

There are two airing yards attached to it, accessible from the respective day-rooms. The dark cell is now never used: the refractory cell is used only as a wood room.

The lower and middle galleries are appropriated to untried female felons (class No. 3), and male debtors (class No. 4). By day, the former associate in the small day-room; and at night, sleep in the two cells in the lower gallery. The large day-room in that gallery, and the sleeping rooms in the middle gallery, are appropriated to the male debtors. One of the infirmaries is used by the untried male classes; and the other two by the convicted male classes.

At the extremity of this wing is the new building erected for female debtors (class No. 5), consisting of a small day-room, and two sleeping rooms above it, with its airing yard attached; and when there are no female debtors, it is occupied by untried female misdemeanants, or male prisoners committed for want of sureties, &c.

Without entering into details (the most accurate statement of which would not only be tedious, but wholly unintelligible, without the aid of a plan), it may be sufficient to state, that such is the construction of this wing and of the female debtors' apartments, in reference to the position of the windows, passages, airing-yards, &c. &c., that the greatest facilities are afforded for intercourse between the male debtors, their visitors (averaging 40 per day), the female debtors, and the female felons and misdemeanants; and also between the male debtors, their visitors, and the male transports in the east wing.

The male debtors, the female debtors, and the untried female felons and misdemeanants, when sick, are visited in their respective apartments, instead of going into the infirmaries.

West Wing. The west wing consists of the following divisions:—

Lower gallery, two day-rooms, same dimensions as the day-rooms in the east wing;
one receiving cell, do. as cells in lower gallery of do.;
two sleeping cells, do.;
one store-room, do.
Middle gallery, eight sleeping cells, same dimensions as in middle gallery of east wing.
Upper gallery, eight do. do. as in upper gallery of do.

There are two airing-yards belonging to it, accessible from the respective day-rooms.

This wing is used as the house of correction, and is appropriated to convicted male felons and misdemeanants, who together constitute class No. 6; and convicted female felons and misdemeanants, who together constitute class No. 7. One of the day-rooms, the middle and upper galleries, and the receiving cell, when required, are appropriated to the males; who are classified, as far as circumstances will permit, in the same manner as the untried male classes in the east wing, that is to say, the felons sleep in the upper, and the misdemeanants in the middle gallery. The day-room of the convicted male classes is never used; inasmuch as they work on the treadwheel, and take their meals in their cells. One of the day-rooms, and the two sleeping cells in the lower gallery, are occupied by the female classes; who, when sick, are visited there, instead of going into the infirmary. The position of their airing-yard is such, with reference to the airing-yards of the untried female classes, and the female debtors in the north wing (the walls of separation being only eleven feet high), that the greatest facilities for intercourse are afforded between prisoners of all these several classes; which opportunities are greatly increased, owing to the females (who have no work to perform which withdraws them from their cells) being allowed unrestricted access to their respective airing-yards during the whole day. Communication at night might also take place, by means of the ventilators in the cells in the lower gallery, between the female classes and the male prisoners, who frequently occupy the receiving cell there.

Having endeavoured to point out what are the means of communication between the classes arising out of the construction, I refer to the evidence of Mr. James Banfield (formerly a Turnkey at the prison, now keeper of the New House of Correction), to show the instances of flagrant intercourse which actually took place between those classes, when the prison was under the control of a less efficient officer than at present. But, in short, Mr. Tregenza, the present Governor, admits that it is impossible, even now, at least with the limited establishment of officers employed, to prevent intercourse and contamination of the worst kind; that the prisoners may, and do, converse freely from cell to cell; and sing songs, and raise such disturbances, that he is sometimes obliged to get up in the night and go amongst them to restore order; that even the convicted male classes, the only classes subject to the rule of silence, not only thus set at defiance the prison rules among themselves, but, from their galleries in the west wing, frequently hold conversation across the chapel and store-room with the several untried male classes in the galleries of the east wing; and that the silent system, as a means used for the prevention of contamination, utterly and absolutely fails.

Infirmaries.

For a description of the infirmaries, and of the manner in which they are used, we refer to the account given of the north wing. It is a singular fact, that, at the period of inspecting this prison, all the convicted male prisoners were in the infirmaries, from the effects of the influenza, and that the treadwheel was disused. The convicted male prisoners alone perform treadwheel labour. There were thirteen in the infirmaries; two of them died. There was an equal number of untried prisoners, of whom only three were sick. There is a circumstance connected with the infirmaries requiring notice. The proper approach to them being by the debtors' staircase, whenever there are many prisoners laid up with sickness, it becomes necessary for preventing intercourse between them, or their nurses, also prisoners, and the debtors, to carry the slops from the infirmaries through the chapel. During the late influenza, the stench arising from this cause was found to be so intolerable, that the chapel service was obliged to be discontinued for no less a period than a month.

Chapel.

The chapel comprises four divisions for prisoners. Females of all classes (except debtors) occupy one division; to which they are conducted before the males are admitted; and from the view of whom they are then effectually screened. Either the Turnkey's wife, or the Governor's servant, sits with them. There is no division for female debtors: but there are seldom any of that class. Convicted male prisoners of both classes occupy the second division; untried male prisoners of both classes occupy the third division; and male debtors occupy the fourth division. Each class, except that of the females, can see, and be seen by, the other classes. Both the Governor and Chaplain command a good inspection of the whole.

Cook-room.

The cookery is in the convicted male prisoners' airing or work-yard, and detached from the main building; but it is now wholly disused, the prisoners not being allowed meat.

Treadwheel.

The treadwheel stands under a shed in the work-yard of the convicted male prisoners, and is divided into separate compartments for ten persons. The classes are mixed on the wheel, and communications there take place between prisoners. The relief men never remain stationary, but walk round a circle in the yard in single file—a practice which (especially in connection with the low diet) the Governor considers highly injurious to health, and to have contributed in a great degree to the severe sickness which recently prevailed among the working classes. Since the prison was built, the mill-house has been erected against the west wing, the ventilation of which it greatly impedes.

Boundary-wall.

The boundary-wall appears to be secure against escapes; but, being only 17 feet distant from the airing-yards, and easily accessible on the outside, bread has frequently been found in the garden, which, of course, had been intended for the prisoners. Tobacco is now seldom found.

Dimensions.

The dimensions of particular parts of the prison have been described under their respective heads. We cannot answer for their accuracy, no regular return on this point of our inquiry having been made, and having derived our information from two different plans, both imperfect, and neither agreeing with the other; but we have reason to think that the statement which we have given contains no material errors. An order of sessions has been made, that the prison shall in future be used only as a common gaol, and that convicted prisoners shall be sent to the New House of Correction. When this arrangement is carried into effect, it is considered that the gaol will be sufficiently capacious for the average number of inmates. The average daily number of criminal prisoners is 50, and that number can be provided with separate cells. There have been 150 in confinement at one time. There is a paddock belonging to the County, adjoining the boundary-wall, which would afford ample scope for enlargement.

Repairs.

The prison generally is in good repair, but the boundary-wall seems to be giving way, and to require being strengthened.

Security.

The prison tolerably secure as a place of custody: some escapes have been effected, but the prisoners were retaken; and some unsuccessful attempts have been made. The following is an extract from the Governor's journal.—

| 1834. A felon escaped - - - - | Retaken. |

There is no fire-engine on the establishment: there are three in the town.

Supervision and Inspection.

None of the prisoners, in any part of the prison, or at any time, except those who work on the wheel, are under any regular supervision. Those who work at the wheel are in charge of an officer during the hours of labour. There are no inspecting holes; and, with the exception of one or two of the airing-yards, the prisoners cannot anywhere be overlooked without being cognizant of it. At night they are nearly as much beyond the officers' hearing as they are out of their view.

Adaptation for Separation for Employment.

The cells appear sufficiently capacious to admit of employment, but they are wholly inadequate for the purpose of effectual separation.

Dryness, Ventilation, Drainage.

The prison is dry and well drained, and the ventilation is good, except where it is impeded by the mill-house at the extremity of the west wing.

System.—Discipline.

Besides the Governor and Matron, there is only one regular officer employed for the purpose of maintaining the discipline, viz. the male Turnkey. Another man, called the superintendent of the treadmill, comes during the day to attend to the convicted male prisoners who work on the wheel; but his duties terminate at the hour of locking up, and he does not reside in the prison. There are no monitors or wardsmen. One prisoner is employed continually in cleaning the criminal side of the prison, and occasionally (about two or three times a-week) two are so employed. No extra allowance or other renumeration is given to these prisoners. The Governor states, and we quite agree with him, that 13 officers would be required to perform the duties, in order properly to enforce the Silent System, of whom five at least ought to do night duty in the galleries.

For a statement of the particular duties of the officers, see Appendix A.

Classification.

The classification is neither that of 4 Geo. IV., nor the limited classification of 5 Geo. IV. In short, it is difficult to say what it is; although we believe the best mode, from time to time, is adopted, which the construction of the prison and the ever fluctuating and unequal numbers in the respective classes will admit of. But the intermixture of prisoners, and the opportunities for intercourse between them all, are such, that, by whatever distinctive names they are called, it would scarcely be too much to say, that, so far as any moral good is effected, there might almost as well be only one class, comprising every variety of character, and every degree of crime. As to the classification of prisoners on the 21st February, 1837, see Keepers' Return, Appendix B.

Bedford Gaol and House of Correction.
Association of untried Prisoners.
Of convicted female Prisoners.

During the day, the untried male prisoners of all classes associate in idleness in one common day-room and airing-yard. The untried female prisoners of all classes do the same, in their day-room and airing-yard; and the convicted female prisoners of all classes associate in the same manner; but such of the latter as are sentenced to hard labour are not permitted to be idle. These several classes are not subject to the Rule of Silence. They are under no supervision, except that the Governor and Turnkey visit them, as often as their multifarious duties will permit, to see that order is maintained. They all sleep in separate cells at night, except when the prison is over crowded, which is seldom the case.

Silent System.

The Silent System, with separation, is enforced only with convicted male prisoners sentenced to hard labour, except that these meet on the wheel (which is divided into separate stalls), under the constant surveillance of the superintendent. They take their meals and sleep in their cells. They march to and from chapel, work, and meals, in single file, the superintendent accompanying them to maintain order and silence, and to report any breaches of discipline.

Hard Labour.

Hard labour is performed only by male convicted prisoners sentenced thereto, and is that of the treadwheel: it is not productive. Under the Silent System, it is regarded as a punishment. It has been mentioned that the relief men never remain stationary, but walk round a circle in the work-yard, and that the labour of the wheel, in connexion with that practice and the low diet, is considered injurious to health, and to have materially contributed to the late sickness among the working classes.—See "Construction—Treadwheel."

Convicted females sentenced to hard labour are only employed in repairing the prison bedding and linen, and the stockings of the prisoners.

Transports are not placed at hard labour, unless sentenced thereto.

Visitors.

Debtors may receive visitors at all hours between 10 in the morning and 4 in the afternoon, except that on Sundays, Christmas-days, and Good-Fridays the time is arranged so as not to interfere with the chapel service. The debtors' visitors average 40 daily. They see the prisoners in their day-rooms, no visitor, except a husband or wife, being admitted to the sleeping rooms. Convicted prisoners are not allowed to receive visits during the first six months of imprisonment, except in cases of illness, and under the Surgeon's certificate. After that period they may be visited once in every three months, between 12 and 3. The untried may be visited at any times (Sundays excepted) between the same hours. No visitors are admitted to criminal prisoners, except by virtue of a Magistrate's Order, and they are seldom allowed to remain above a quarter of an hour. They are not limited in point of numbers: there have been twelve to a transport at one time. They are admitted at an iron grated gate within the central hall, at the termination of the corridor of the prisoners' ward. There is a similar gate within the corridor, at a distance of seven feet, at which the prisoner stands, and the Turnkey is stationed between them, within the two gates. Visitors are not searched, but whatever they bring for prisoners is left in the lodge, and examined by the Turnkey before delivery; and we believe the greatest vigilance is used to prevent the introduction of prohibited articles. Prostitutes, thieves, or bad characters, if known to be such, would not be admitted, even with an order, except in the case of a wife visiting a debtor—her husband. Before the adoption of the Secretary of State's recommendation, the frequency of visits to, and the number of letters received by, prisoners, produced very injurious effects, not only by materially alleviating the punishment, but in other respects. The prisoners severely feel the restrictions which have been since imposed. The Governor thinks those restrictions will have a very deterring influence, and are the best regulations ever introduced.

Money.

Debtors are allowed the possession of money without restriction. Criminal prisoners may also have it in any quantities, but not in possession. On their admission it is always taken from them by the Turnkey, and accounted for on their discharge. About £1 per annum is said to be as much as is brought by, or on account of, the whole of the criminal population.

Letters.

Convicted prisoners may not receive letters during the first six months of imprisonment, and only once in every three months afterwards: this appears to be the only restriction.

Books.

No books are admitted to the criminal prisoners, except such as are of a religious or moral character; nor until they have been submitted to the Chaplain or Governor.

Newspapers, Tobacco, Spirituous Liquors, Beer, Meat.

Debtors who are not on the county diet are allowed books and newspapers of any description, both on Sundays and week-days; meat in any quantities; and the use of tobacco in any shape; but are allowed to smoke only in their airing-yard. They may also have one quart of beer, or one pint of wine each per day, and an increased quantity, at the Governor's discretion, when visitors are received. Debtors on the county allowance are not permitted any of these indulgences: beer is brought into the prison, and measured out in presence of an officer, but no check is kept. Inasmuch as the visitors are not searched, they might, especially females, introduce beer, spirits, or any other articles, without much chance of discovery. Newspapers, tobacco, spirituous liquors, and beer, are not allowed to any classes of criminal prisoners; and we do not believe that they have many chances of procuring these articles in a clandestine manner, unless they should be thrown over the boundary-wall, which we think might be done, at least to the untried classes, without great risk of detection. Convicted criminal prisoners of all classes are strictly confined to the county diet: untried criminal prisoners may support themselves, and have meat of any kind, or in any reasonable quantities; but no other indulgences.

Gaming.

Dice were once found on a prisoner, and immediately seized and destroyed before his face: with this exception, gambling has never been known to have taken place.

Religious and Moral Instruction.

Chaplain.

The Chaplain officiates both at the Common Gaol and at the New House of Correction: he also does duty at the Bedford Union Workhouse. At this gaol he preaches one sermon on every Sunday, alternately, at half-past nine in the morning and half-past two in the afternoon: he preaches once on every Good Friday and Christmas Day; at half-past nine in the morning of every week-day he reads the Prayers of the Church of England; three or four times in the week he visits the untried in their day-rooms, admonishes them, and occasionally instructs them in reading, and furnishes spelling-books to those who can read, that they may instruct the more ignorant: he visits and admonishes the prisoners who are sick, or under punishment, and those who are engaged at the wheel, as the latter successively come off on relief, taking them aside, and addressing them individually; and occasionally he distributes tracts amongst them all. Such are his visits to criminal prisoners. He sometimes sees the debtors, but not so often or so regularly as the criminal prisoners. On Sundays his duties occupy one hour and a half; on other days, about two hours. He remains with the prisoners in their rooms or cells about twenty minutes, and with each of those who are engaged at the wheel about five. He sees only a portion of the latter at each visit. When a prisoner is sentenced to be executed, he spends nearly the whole of every day with him until execution takes place. Only two executions have occurred since his appointment. He is accessible at all times to any of them who require his advice or assistance. The prisoners are attentive and orderly in chapel, respectful in their demeanour, and some of them desirous of intercourse with him. He keeps a Journal, but no Character Book. The officers, (except when absent on necessary duty), as well as the prisoners, regularly attend divine service; the latter are called over on entering the chapel, to ascertain that none are absent: absentees would immediately be discovered and punished. On Sundays the prison is only swept, which is always done before service. On week-days the cleaning occupies the entire day, one person only (a prisoner) being regularly employed thereat; although occasionally two are so employed. The Turnkey (a trusty officer) regularly visits every part of the prison on Sundays, before service, to see that it is done.

Books.

Prisoners who can read are supplied with Bibles, Prayer Books, and religious tracts, at the Chaplain's discretion; and, on their discharge, he furnishes such of them as he thinks are deserving with a Bible or Testament, either from his own resources, or by obtaining pecuniary aid from their friends, if the prisoners themselves have not sufficient means. Transports, on their quitting the prison, are invariably supplied with a Bible. No books are used by prisoners but such as are first submitted for the Chaplain's approval.

School.

There is no school, a circumstance which the Chaplain greatly regrets. The prisoners are extremely ignorant, very few being able either to read or write; and fewer still knowing anything of the first principles of Christianity. The Chaplain would greatly assist in promoting any measures calculated to qualify them for the reception or attainment of that religious instruction which their case so peculiarly requires. The Matron (an extremely respectable person, who takes a great interest in the moral welfare of the prisoners) gives instruction in reading to the females on Sundays.

General Improvement.

The Chaplain says that the prisoners are not only extremely ignorant, but extremely depraved; that in most cases they are depraved in proportion to their ignorance; and that the majority are decided drunkards. He believes that some have received good impressions; and that others have become decided converts, under the religious instruction imparted to them. He has formed this opinion from having kept up a communication with several after their discharge, and having found that they had altered their course of life. But, on the other hand, he says, that the associations of the prison, and the contamination which prevails, almost wholly counteract his best efforts. He says, "The system is so bad that we can do but little good." See his evidence.

The Governor says that the prisoners are ignorant in the extreme; in almost all cases wholly destitute of religious knowledge; callous and indifferent to the consequence of crime, except in respect of the punishment which it may draw on themselves: that the untried at least, if not the other classes, become still more depraved by the associations of the prison, whereby the services of the Chaplain are rendered almost abortive.

Health.

Surgeon.
Examining, Cleansing, Fumigating, &c.

The Surgeon attends both the County Gaol and the New House of Correction: he is in private practice. If the prisoners are cleanly, they are assigned to their wards without being washed or bathed; but not until their clothes have been fumigated, and their persons examined by him: their clothes are baked in an oven with brimstone. When there are sick prisoners, he visits them once or oftener daily, as circumstances may require; and he sees those who are well, whether at work or in solitary confinement under punishment, two or three times a-week. He reports the prisoners' health and conduct at every Quarter Sessions. He keeps a Journal, agreeably to the provisions of the Act, and also a separate Diet Book, in which he enters all orders for spirits, wine, or any other extra allowance.

Infirmaries.
Prevalent Diseases, &c.

The Infirmaries are under the supervision of nurses, who are prisoners, and they are visited occasionally by an officer. No means are taken to prevent conversation. During the last year there were many cases of small-pox, and, during the present year, all the male prisoners who work on the wheel were laid up with influenza. See observations thereon; "Construction—Treadwheel." The most prevailing complaints are Scurvy, Ague, Colds, Fever, and Bowel Complaints. There have been many cases of scurvy, and they have invariably occurred after five or six months' imprisonment. The Surgeon says that the confinement and sameness of life and diet, in some measure, but the dissipated habits and debilitated constitutions of the prisoners, in a still greater measure, have had a tendency to produce that disease; and that, when it has once fastened on the constitution from these causes combined, the perfect restoration of the patient is a matter of rare occurrence. The average number of days during which each invalid remained on the sick-list in the year ending Michaelmas, 1836, appears to have been about 21. The number of sick, compared with the total number of prisoners admitted during that year, was in the proportion of one in five.

The Surgeon thinks the diet insufficient, and that it has materially lowered the prisoners' health; he says, they ought to have meat twice a-week. He has expressed that opinion to the visiting Magistrates, and has, in consequence, been requested by them to prepare a new Scale, to be submitted at the ensuing Quarter Sessions.

Daily washing of Prisoners.

There seems to be no stated allowance of soap, towels, and combs; but the supply is sufficient. The male prisoners wash in congregated bodies of the entire number in each class, in the open yards, at the pumps, of which there is one in each yard; the Turnkey attending to see that it is done. The women wash in their day-rooms; the debtors wash where they please. The prisoners are cleanly in their persons.

Cleansing the Prison.

The walls internally, and the ceilings throughout, are washed with lime once a-year at least, and oftener if necessary. The sleeping cells and passages are swept daily by a convicted male prisoner; and the floors of the same are washed with water every alternate day, if the weather is not wet or damp, by two convicted male prisoners. The prisoners who thus clean are locked up, during the progress of their work, in each gallery, until it is finished. The other criminal prisoners of each class wash and sweep their own day-rooms and airing-yards, which is done just as frequently. Debtors sweep and wash their own apartments. The prison is cleanly.

Washing Linen.

The prison linen is washed by contract out of the prison; and it has been found that the contract price has been less than the cost of doing it in the prison. It is mended by the female prisoners sentenced to hard labour.

Air and Exercise.

The prisoners at the wheel have ample air and exercise, perhaps too much of the latter. The untried of all classes, convicted female prisoners of all classes, and debtors, have unrestricted access to their airing-yards.

Diet, Clothing, Bedding.

Diet.

As to the allowance of diet, see Appendix, Return II. No. 18. The only beverage allowed is cold water. No distinction is made in respect of age, sex, or class, except that convicted prisoners who work on the wheel are alone allowed the cheese and onions; that debtors, not on the County allowance, may provide themselves with meat, and one quart of beer, or one pint of wine each, per diem; and that the untried may provide themselves with meat alone. The sick receive extra allowance, at the discretion of the Surgeon. The cleaners do not receive extra allowance. It has been mentioned that the Surgeon thinks the diet insufficient. The Governor is of the same opinion, and attributes the diseases which have been most prevalent amongst the working classes, in a great measure, to that cause, and to the practice of walking the circle in the work-yard when on relief from the wheel. The total cost of diet for the last year was £177. 19*s*. 6*d*., or £4. 6*s*. 9¾*d*. and a fraction per head per annum.

Clothing.

As to the supply of clothing, see Appendix, Return II. No. 16. The untried are not allowed prison clothing, except in cases of destitution. Male convicted prisoners wear a dress of plain grey drugget; female convicted prisoners, a striped cotton dress; and transports, a party-coloured yellow and brown dress. Debtors are allowed plain prison clothing, if they are in absolute need, and have no means of providing for themselves. The supply is not made at stated times, and there are no periodical musters either for ascertaining what clothing is required, or how it is preserved; but it is furnished from time to time as the Keeper, in his discretion, thinks necessary; and it appeared that it had at all times been sufficient; and the whole of the stores are under his daily observation. He keeps an account of the issue and value, which he submits to the visiting Magistrates at their weekly meetings. The total cost of male and female clothing for the last year was £55. 19*s*. 6*d*. The offence of destroying or damaging the clothing has never occurred in this prison. No portion of the prison clothing is manufactured in the prison; but convicted female prisoners sentenced to hard labour mend the stockings, bedding, and linen.

Bedding.

As to the allowance of bedding, see Appendix, Return II. No. 16. Although there appear to be sufficient sleeping cells, or nearly so, for the daily average number of prisoners, yet the numbers greatly vary, and, immediately after the Sessions and Gaol Deliveries, are greatly augmented. Whenever the number of male prisoners exceeds the number of male sleeping cells, never less than three prisoners occupy one cell; but, the cells being too small to admit of three bedsteads, three sets of bedding are placed upon two bedsteads drawn together so as to form one bed, which is then occupied by three prisoners. There are no stated periods for washing the bedding, but the blankets are never used for a longer period than three, or the rugs for a longer period than six months without being washed; and it is done oftener if required. In fine weather, the bedding is occasionally taken into the respective yards to be shaken and aired, the Governor and Turnkey both attending, to see it properly done.

The Governor occasionally lets beds, bedding, and sheets, to debtors who are not on the County allowance, and who cannot conveniently provide themselves, for which they pay him 2*s*. 6*d*. per week; but it rarely happens that this accommodation is required more than once or twice in the course of a year. The total cost of bedding for the last year was £9. 8*s*.; the cost of bedding and clothing per head per annum was £4.

Prison Offences and Punishments.

Offences.

There were only 15 cases of punishment during the year ending Michaelmas, 1836. See Appendix C, Return II. No. 15. These were for the following offences:

|---|---|
| Talking in cells at night | 1 |
| Throwing stones over the boundary-wall | 1 |
| Talking to female prisoners over the wall | 1 |
| Irreverence at chapel | 2 |
| Improper conduct to the Chaplain | 3 |
| Talking, and other misconduct, on treadwheel | 3 |
| Rioting in the felons' yard | 2 |
| Cutting the walls in the yards | 2 |
| | 15 |

It would appear, therefore, that the prison offences were not numerous. There is only one case of punishment for talking at night. Nevertheless, it will be perceived from other parts of this Report, that much intercourse does take place at night among the prisoners. The infrequency of punishments for that offence may, perhaps, in a great measure, be accounted for by the fact, that the prisoners are beyond the hearing of the officers, that there are no night watchmen, monitors, or wardsmen, or other means for preventing conversation, or for detecting and reporting it. And we are inclined also to believe that, in consideration of the great facilities thus afforded, and the constant temptation thus presented to the prisoners to violate a rule, which, for the reasons mentioned, it is impossible rigidly to enforce, it is considered that it would be worse than useless (provided they are not so noisy and disorderly as to attract the attention of the Governor) very strictly to inquire whether they yield implicit obedience to it or not. Independently of which, there is but a small proportion of them (the male convicted classes only) who are subject to the discipline of the Silent System.

Punishments.

Stopping, or diminishing the ordinary allowance of food is never practised as a mode of punishment. Solitary confinement is that which is generally employed; and it is said to be most severely felt, and to possess a very subduing and deterring influence. When the punishment of whipping is inflicted, the ordinary number of lashes is five dozen, given in the presence of the Surgeon and some other person unconnected with the prison. Irons have never been used since the appointment of the present Keeper.

Officers.

The officers are the Governor, Chaplain, Surgeon, Matron, Male Turnkey, and Superintendent of the Treadwheel. See their names, ages, salaries, &c. Appendix C, Return II. No. 21, and also Appendix A. The Chaplain, Surgeon, and Superintendent, reside out of the prison; the others reside within the prison. They all appear well qualified for their duties, and to have discharged them satisfactorily. As to the duties of Surgeon, see "Health." As to the duties of Chaplain, see "Religious and Moral Instruction." As to the duties of the other officers, see Appendix A. The sub-officers are appointed by the Quarter Sessions, on the recommendation of the Governor made to the visiting justices. The Governor is a very respectable person, and, as a gaoler, held in high estimation by the county magistrates; he possesses much firmness of character, and is most humane to the prisoners, by whom he is both feared and respected. Considering his great difficulties, owing to the construction and the limited means allowed him, (only one regular Turnkey,) we think that the prison is well conducted. But we are of opinion that the number of sub-officers ought to be greatly increased, if it be expected that a vigorous discipline is to be maintained. The regulations of the Gaol Act, which have not been particularly referred to, have been complied with. The letting of beds to prisoners is at variance with that Act; and although this is done, we believe, rather for the accommodation of prisoners than for any advantages that it produces to the Governor, it is a practice which ought to be abolished.

Cleaners.

It has been mentioned that one prisoner is employed constantly, and occasionally two prisoners are employed, in sweeping and washing the prison, for which, however, they receive no remuneration. With regard to wardsmen and monitors, the Governor decidedly objects to them; having found, from long experience, that no reliance can be placed on them; that they often become too familiar with the Turnkeys; are influenced towards their fellow-prisoners by partialities and prejudices; and are subject to be biassed by bribes and intimidations.

Miscellaneous.

Accounts, Journals, &c.

The following are the account books, journals &c., in use in this prison, viz.:—General Account Book, Description Book, Order Book, Magistrates' Journal, Gaoler's Journal, Surgeon's Journal, Chaplain's Journal.

Re-committals.

The total number of prisoners (except 13 debtors), during the last year, was 241; of whom 64 had before been committed to this or other prisons; so that the re-commitments were in the proportion of about 26 per cent. upon the total number. See Appendix C, Return II., Nos. 3, 4, and 11. The Governor thinks that the number of re-commitments has of late years very slightly decreased. It appears that many of the old and notorious offenders in and about the town of Bedford have, within a few years, been transported; which may, in some measure, account for that decrease. See "Religious and Moral Instruction—General Improvement."

Passes.

Passes are now never used, on account of the gross frauds formerly practised by prisoners when they were granted. The present Governor was for several years Keeper of the New House of Correction at Bedford, during which time many passes were issued, but only one was ever returned. Discharged prisoners are paid a small sum,—in every case 6*d.*; if they have to travel above six miles, 1*s.*; if above 12 miles, 1*s.* 6*d.*; if above 20 miles, 2*s.*; and if many miles beyond the limits of the county, 5*s.*, which is the maximum.

Evidence.

The opportunities for intercourse between prisoners were so obvious, the admissions of the Gaoler were so candid, and it appeared that the demoralizing effects of that intercourse were so palpable, that we did not deem it necessary to waste time in taking the examination of the prisoners themselves: we therefore subjoin only that of the principal officers.

Mr. Short, Surgeon.

See "Health—Surgeon," &c. I think that treadwheel labour is injurious to health; it distresses the men in very hot weather, and in winter it exposes them to great changes of temperature, draughts, &c. I find that the system gives way generally after four or five months; it depends of course on the constitution. As a mode of punishment, I think it unequal; some men feel it much more severely than others. I find that the prisoners complain occasionally of this, and reason upon the inequality of the punishment, and become dissatisfied, sullen, and morose; and they practise every kind of deception to avoid the wheel: they feign sickness, they pretend to have looseness of bowels, and severe pains in the loins, and to suffer from old hurts.

I think the clothing is sufficient. In winter, I think, an additional blanket should be allowed. I am of opinion that the diet is not sufficient for those who work on the wheel. I should recommend meat twice a week. I have expressed that opinion to the visiting justices, who have requested me to submit a new dietary to the magistrates at their ensuing Quarter Sessions. I think the want of a proper diet has lowered the health of the prisoners, and greatly contributed to increase the late influenza in this prison.

Rev. Mr. Maclear, Chaplain.

See "Religious and Moral Instruction—Chaplain's Duties," &c. The prisoners are in general very ignorant; the great majority are drunkards; they are very depraved; manufacturers and inhabitants of towns are worse than countrymen and agriculturists; the most ignorant are the most depraved; their ignorance on religious matters is lamentable. Some, I hope, have received good impressions, and I trust that others have become true converts. I have ascertained that some discharged prisoners have conducted themselves well, and have altered their course of life. With some I keep up a communication by seeing them, if they do not reside at a great distance, and I lend them books, &c.; but many become more depraved in prison. I often hear of prisoners after their discharge. The greatest contamination prevails amongst the untried; but amongst convicted prisoners with whom the Silent System is enforced there is also contamination. Prisoners, notwithstanding the strictest attempts to enforce silence, have frequent opportunities for conversing. I have seen them converse whilst passing in file to and from chapel; and I have seen the cleaners talking under the doors to the various classes. I have known letters sent out of the gaol by untried felons; the letters were taken by the cleaners. In the infirmaries they are always aware of all that passes, both in the prison and amongst their friends out of the prison. It appears that there is a general communication among them throughout the prison. I have had great intercourse with prisoners, especially after trial, and sometimes after their discharge, and have endeavoured to gain their confidence, and they have admitted that their conversation in the prison has been most demoralizing; that they have related their exploits, and how they performed them; that they have discussed the best methods of picking locks and effecting robberies; what were the best instruments; how to make the best defence, and to trump up a good story, &c. With regard to treadwheel labour, I believe the prisoners practise various deceptions with the doctor to get into the infirmaries. I find it to be most unfavourable as it respects their moral reformation; no doubt it materially counteracts my efforts. I effect the most good with those whom I see alone. But the system is altogether bad for the purpose of affording them moral instruction. I greatly lament that there is no school. The greater number of the prisoners cannot read. I should wish them to be instructed by a schoolmaster or officer, not a prisoner, superintended by myself.

Mr. James Bayfield, formerly Turnkey at the Gaol, now Keeper of the New House of Correction at Bedford.

I was Turnkey of the gaol at Bedford for about two years, viz. from May 1832 to May 1834. This was before the appointment of the present keeper, Mr. Tragenza. I paid great attention to the construction of the prison and to the conduct of the prisoners. I have known instances of visitors going to the debtors' day-room under pretence of visiting the debtors, but having friends in the prison under sentence of transportation, whom it was their sole object to see. The window of the male debtors' day-room at that time opened into the transport or convict-yard, and was not screened. Such visitors had free access by means of that window, and other facilities, to the convicts, and occasionally to the untried felons; and I have frequently detected them (the debtors aiding and assisting) in the act of passing letters, bacon, and other meat, butter, sugar, &c. to the convicts or untried felons. In consequence of these practices, the window, at my suggestion, was screened. But, no doubt, communication by words can still be made: at least I believe so. I have also known the debtors, from the windows in their sleeping-rooms immediately over the convict-yard, converse freely with, and throw down tobacco to, the convicts below. These windows were also screened, in consequence of these practices. By that screening, however, communication by sight was alone prevented: sound will still pass, and articles might still be thrown either up or down. In the infirmaries in the upper gallery of the north wing, used occasionally for all classes of male criminal prisoners, I have known the like communications to take place by the windows. I have known conversation to have been held between the sick in the infirmary and the convicts in the yard below, one of the infirmary windows being immediately over the convict-yard. I have known of various articles having been thrown down. Although this window is now screened also, yet it opens at the top about 9 or 12 inches, with a cover working on a circular lever, which the prisoners inside can open and shut at pleasure, and letters and other articles may yet be thrown up and down. The other windows are screened in the same manner, viz. they open at top with a cover. The ring-holes in the floors of the corridors afford every opportunity for communication between prisoners of various classes; and between criminal prisoners in the infirmaries and male debtors in their sleeping gallery below those infirmaries. The male debtors, from a window in their staircase, can converse, and I have detected them conversing, with the surety men in the yard of the female debtors. When there are no female debtors, the female debtors' ward is occupied by surety men, soldiers waiting a route, &c. I have known the debtors supply such surety men with eatables and tobacco. I have often detected it. There is also another window in the debtors' staircase, and another on the infirmary landing of the debtors' ward, both which overlook the untried female felons' yard, and also the yard for all the female convicted classes; and I have seen debtors at both these windows, at one time, conversing with the female felons for trial, and with the convicted females of all classes. I have detected letters in the act of being passed over the airing-yard walls, by the women to the men; and the Matron, at the same time, has found letters on the persons of the females, appointing time and place for meetings with the men. I have also detected the surety men in the act of getting from the female debtors' ward to the women in the female convict-yard. But I cannot positively say whether such attempts to get to each other ever succeeded. I only detected the men in the act.

Mr. John Tregenza, Governor.

Silence is enforced with the convicted male prisoners only; it is required to be observed at all times, both at night and by day; but I find it impossible to enforce it at night. All other classes are permitted at all times to associate and converse. All the criminal prisoners, so far as the separate sleeping cells and the number of prisoners will admit, are separated at night: the convicted male prisoners take their meals separately in their cells. There are 50 cells, and, if the prisoners exceed 50, three prisoners are placed in one cell. The only officers are, myself, the Matron (who is my wife), a male Turnkey, and the superintendent at the treadwheel. We have various and heavy duties to perform. There is no night supervision whatever; I, and the Matron, alone sleep in the gaol: the Turnkey sleeps over the lodge. We have no wardsmen or monitors. I object to prisoners being so employed, because it would lead to familiarity between them and the Turnkeys; and I have found, during a long experience, that they are not to be trusted; that they favour their friends; that they are subject to be intimidated, and are open to bribes; and, in fact, that they seldom report. The Silent System requires constant watching: the prisoners ought never to be left, night or day: it is irksome to the officers, even when badly enforced. The superintendent at the wheel suffers much from exposure to the weather, and from the confinement required in constantly watching the working classes. He is never absent without a substitute. I believe I lost one superintendent by death, in consequence of this exposure. I think the men also suffer from exposure on the wheel, although not in so great a degree as the superintendent; they are not quite so much exposed, being more under cover. The Silent System occasions loss of time both to the officers and prisoners, in locking and unlocking, forming into file and marching to and from their work, meals, and chapel, which I consider occupies, on the average, in this prison, about 90 minutes every day; and although it is enforced with the criminal prisoners, yet they talk on the wheel, even in the presence of the officer; and it is often most difficult, if not impossible, to detect them; they also can and do converse freely at night, not only among themselves in their own galleries, but across the chapel and store-room, with the untried classes in the galleries of the east wing. I have no night watch monitors, or wardsmen, and therefore I consider the Silent System of no use whatever in this prison, for lessening the evils of contamination. The prisoners can talk all night without my detecting it. Sometimes I hear them singing songs in a loud voice. I always punish them if they are noisy, and I can find out the offenders. It would require altogether 13 male and female officers, including myself and the Matron, to maintain the Silent System in this prison, of whom five ought to do duty at night. I believe that all the evils of contamination prevail here; but that they are not nearly so great in degree as in many prisons, the prisoners here being generally agriculturists. No doubt they relate their exploits, and become much worse characters, and more expert poachers. There were many prisoners in the infirmaries during the influenza, which prevailed chiefly amongst the convicted male classes who work at the wheel, which I ascribe to the low diet, the labour of the wheel, and the practice of walking the circle. I think that treadwheel labour and walking the circle without intermission, except at meals, is injurious to health, at least if practised for more than three months. I do not believe the prisoners could stand it longer on our diet. I think that treadwheel labour is very unequal as a punishment; it punishes the body rather than the mind; it punishes the old and infirm more than the young; and robust and tall men more than short men. I find that I must also mix the classes in order to equalize the work. Solitary confinement is felt as the severest of all punishments; more so by far than either the Silent System or the labour of the treadwheel. We never reduce the food by way of punishment.

The prisoners are ignorant in the extreme; in almost all cases they are wholly destitute of religious knowledge: they are callous and indifferent to the consequences of crime, except in respect of the punishment which it may draw on themselves. The Untried, at least, if not the other classes, become still more depraved by the associations of the prison. I believe the Chaplain's efforts are rendered almost abortive, owing to the intercourse and contamination which prevail.

| Officers. | Age. | Duties. |
|---|---|---|
| Governor.—John Tregenza, appointed to the New House of Correction in 1819; removed to this Gaol in 1834. | 47 | The Governor resides in, and takes the general management of, the prison. He keeps a daily journal of prison occurrences, a description of all prisoners committed, a general account-book of the total expense of the establishment, a store-book, and a discharge-book, and sundry memorandums. Has to write all letters and make returns to Secretary of State and others; manuscripts for the assize and sessions' calendars; makes returns to the assize and sessions as required by the Act 4th Geo. IV., c. 64; a list of all convicts when sent on board the hulks, with an account of conduct in prison and previous habits of life; a certificate on the receipt of each prisoner to the committing magistrate; and answers all letters from the Insolvent Court respecting insolvent debtors. He attends Court during the assizes and sessions, and the Insolvent Commissioners Court; removes the convicts to the hulks, and debtors and other prisoners by Habeas; attends service in the chapel; inspects the prisoners and prison, the quality and quantity of food delivered to each, the beds, bedding, and clothing, and the locking up the prisoners at night. |
| Matron.—Mary Ann Tregenza, appointed in 1832 to the New House of Correction; removed to this Gaol in 1834. | 35 | Has the entire superintendence of all the females. |
| Turnkey.—James Elwood, appointed to the New House of Correction in 1833, and removed to this prison in 1834.The Wife of the Turnkey assists him much, although not a paid officer. | 50 | Rings the bell for unlocking, half an hour previous to the prisoners being let out; during that time the prisoners dress themselves, fold up their beds and bedding; then assists the attendant at the treadmill to unlock the House of Correction, after which he unlocks the debtors, and male felons and untried misdemeanours on the gaol side, and takes them to the yards for washing; he then returns to the cells, and inspects the beds and bedding, locks, bolts, &c.; takes the sweeper to his work, cuts up the bread, attends with lights, straw, and coals on felon and debtors' side; eight o'clock serves out the bread for breakfast; returns to the Lodge for his own breakfast, musters and attends with prisoners in chapel, conducts them back to the wards, removes the sweeper to some other part of his work; inspects the debtors' bed-rooms, hall, and yard, and all the privies in the gaol and House of Correction (except the females) to see that no slops are left about, and that the ashes are removed; attends at the Lodge, and admits visitors to the debtors; examines all baskets, bundles, &c. going into the gaol; makes a report in writing every morning of the sick, attends the surgeon on his visiting them; attends to the changing of all the beds and bedding, and sending the dirty bedding out to be washed; cuts bread and cheese for dinner, and serves it to the male prisoners; gets his dinner at one o'clock; attends at the Lodge, and to all visitors that may have orders to visit any male prisoner for trial, or in the House of Correction; receives the bread, with the bill, for the use of the prison; sees that all visitors leave the prison at the appointed time; takes letters and returns to post-office; receives all prisoners, and conducts them from the Lodge to the Governor; rings the bell for locking-up, and assists in the same; 9 o'clock P. M. visits the sick in the infirmaries, and locks the debtors' cell doors after the light and fires are put out; and many other occasional duties that cannot be enumerated. |

COUNTY HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

Construction.

This prison is situate in the county town of Bedford, and within about 300 yards of the county gaol. It is a neat brick building, and was completed for the reception of prisoners in 1820. It contains only four wards, comprising 51 very small separate cells, which are in single ranges, the greater part of them being built against the boundary-wall; and four small day-rooms, the latter, with the exception of that belonging to the female ward, being now used as sleeping-rooms.

Wards.

Ward No. 1, differing from all the others, consists of an upper and a lower gallery; the others consist only of one gallery on the basement. This ward contains 16 cells in the upper, and 13 cells and a day-room in the lower, gallery; and an airing-yard. The day-room is 17 feet in length, 10 feet in breadth, and 7 feet 10 inches in height: the cells, with the exception of two, measure 6 feet 7 inches in length, 3 feet 9 inches in breadth, and in height, in the lower gallery, 7 feet 10 inches, and, in the upper gallery, 10 feet 4 inches. The two cells which vary in dimensions are, the one, 10 feet in length, and 8 feet 6 inches in breadth; the other, 7 feet 2 inches in length, and 6 feet 7 inches in breadth. In the roof of each cell there is a pipe of 2½ inches in diameter, for the purpose of ventilation, as well as a small ventilator in the door, with a turn-up shutter within, which the prisoner can open or let down by a button. Through either of these ventilators, and, indeed, through the partition walls separating the cells, prisoners, not only in adjoining cells, but in those which are remote from each other, can easily converse. Poachers (by far the most numerous class) are usually placed in the upper gallery; rogues and vagabonds are placed in the lower gallery; and both poachers and rogues and vagabonds are mixed with all classes, whenever the other wards are overcrowded.

Ward No. 2 comprises five cells, of the same dimensions with those of No. 1, possessing the same facilities for communication, by means of the ventilators, &c.; a day-room 12 feet long by 10 feet 2 inches wide, and a small airing-yard. The airing-yards of these wards (Nos. 1 and 2), being separated by a wall of only 9 feet in height, and the respective cells being very near together, we think that prisoners in each might not only keep up an intercourse among themselves, but with the prisoners in the other ward. Prisoners for petty larceny, being considered, on account of the comparatively trivial nature of their offences, the least depraved of the male classes, are usually in this ward; although, whenever the prison is crowded, various classes are often placed in it at the same time.

Ward No. 3 comprises 10 cells, a day-room, and an airing-yard; the dimensions of the cells and day-rooms being the same as those of the cells and day-rooms in ward No. 2, and the cells affording the same means of communication by the ventilators. In this ward are placed together the worst classes; viz., felons (of which class of offenders there are but few), and misdemeanants; and with these are also mixed prisoners from other classes, when either of the other wards is overcrowded. The prisoners here can carry on conversation at night, not only among themselves, but with the female prisoners in the adjoining ward, No. 4, the respective airing-yards being separated by a wall of only 9 feet high.

Ward No. 4 comprises seven cells, each 6 feet 7 inches in length, 6 feet in breadth, and 7 feet 10 inches in height; a small day-room, 12 feet square, of the same height with the cells, a wash-house, and an airing-yard. The day-room is used as a receiving-room, where all classes are occasionally mixed by day; but it is never used at night. There are ventilators in the cells, similar to those in the cells of the male wards. In this ward are placed female prisoners of all classes: they occupy their cells by day as well as at night; and, to enable them to work, the doors are left open for the benefit of the light, to avail themselves of which they stand at these doors, where they can see, and might converse with, each other, without much chance of being detected, being generally under no inspection, except such as is afforded from the window of the Keeper's apartment, (where they could scarcely be heard, unless they spoke very loud): the matron, or her daughter, about two or three times in the course of the day, visit their ward. In their day-room, during the months of winter, there is a fire, to which one at a time is allowed to resort; and here, either accidentally or designedly, two or more might occasionally meet. The prison washing being done by contract out of the prison, they do not assemble together in the wash-house. They wash their persons there, however; and, although the rule requires that they shall do it only one at a time, yet, being left by themselves, and the wash-house not being immediately within view of any of the officers, from any point, they might very easily evade that rule. They might visit each other in their respective cells with nearly the same facility. It has already been mentioned that their airing-yard is separated by a low brick wall from that of the male ward, No. 3, in which the worst classes, and occasionally all classes, are confined; and that the sexes, from their respective cells, might keep up an intercourse, notwithstanding this barrier. But they might also communicate over that wall by letter, or otherwise, during the day; although it should be observed, that the male prisoners are not in their yards on the week days, except when they wash in the mornings at their pumps, or pass to and from their meals and work; or on Sundays, except while taking air and exercise. Generally, however, there are a greater number of male prisoners than can work on the wheel, and then the surplus number remain in their cells by day: all the prisoners are in their cells on Sundays; one at a time being allowed to walk in the yard for air and exercise; none of them being, in fact, locked in. The men sometimes leave their own cells to visit their fellow-prisoners. The female prisoners' day-room is separated from one of the sleeping-cells in the male ward, No. 3, by a brick wall, through which conversation might be easily carried on; but it has been mentioned that that day-room is not occupied at night. Intercourse between the sexes might also be carried on by means of a brick drain which communicates with their respective privies.

Bedford Gaol and House of Correction.
Work-yard, Treadwheel, &c.

There is a large work-yard, in which the treadwheel is erected under a shed, the shed being open on one side from the roof to the floor, from one extremity to the other. It has three compartments, each subdivided into separate stalls, and each capable, if required, of being worked alone. There are 19 stalls in the three compartments. The partitions forming these stalls are not continued to the roof, and are only a few inches higher than the men's heads when at work, measuring, from the point on which they stand, only 6 feet in height; so that the prisoners can, and in fact do, carry on conversation, both by the openings above, and through these partitions. They are very narrowly watched, and punished, even if they only turn their heads; nevertheless, they can distinctly hear the Turnkey's footsteps when he walks on the floor under the shed, which is 38 feet in length. When he is at one extremity, the prisoners at the other extremity might, we conceive, communicate without much risk. Those who come off on relief have no place of shelter in rainy weather, except under the shed, which being completely open to the south-west, the prisoners must be greatly exposed whenever the wind and rain set in from that quarter. The Keeper thinks, although we do not concur with him, that they might be sufficiently protected by going close to the wheel. But in coming off in succession for relief, they would then necessarily be brought into so near contact, as to have more frequent opportunities of intercourse.

Under the treadwheel shed there is a pump for cleansing the privies, at which one prisoner continually works; and over the mill-house there is a hand crank, at which one prisoner only can work at a time.

Male Infirmary

All classes are mixed in the infirmary: conversation is not allowed; but the prisoners being under no supervision, except of a nurse (himself a prisoner), the Keeper admits that it cannot be prevented. The most numerous class, by far, especially at certain periods of the year, is that of the poachers; and if a prisoner made no other proficiency in acquiring knowledge from his opportunities of association in this prison, he might, at least in theory, become an expert poacher by association in the infirmary alone. A boy 16 years of age, a short time since, set a snare in the privy, and caught some rats. This infirmary is 14 feet 6 inches in length, and 12 feet in breadth: there is an airing-yard attached to it.

Female Infirmary.

There have been no patients in the female infirmary since the present Keeper has been in office. It is generally used as the provision or store-room; but females of all classes, if sick, would be placed in it. It is divided from the male infirmary by a wall of only 9 inches in thickness, through which conversation might be carried on distinctly and intelligibly from one infirmary to the other. This infirmary has also an airing-yard. Both infirmaries are of the same dimensions.

Male Receiving-room.

All classes are mixed in the receiving-room until examined by the Surgeon; and frequently three or more prisoners at a time sleep on one large wooden bedstead.

There is an oven in the room for baking or for fumigating the prisoners' clothes.

Chapel.

In the chapel there are four compartments for the several classes. The females, before the male prisoners have completed their meals in their cells, are conducted to the chapel by the Matron or her daughter; the male prisoners following according to their classes, and each selecting his own seat in either of the three compartments, without reference to his class. It is said to be impossible to classify them in the chapel, owing to the inequality of numbers in the different classes. There have been at one time 40 poachers, and 85 prisoners altogether, and the chapel will not hold more than 54. It is 24 feet 6 inches in length, and 14 feet 6 inches in breadth. The Chaplain, Governor, and Turnkey have each a good inspection. The prisoners sit or kneel with their faces towards the officers. The sexes are screened from the view of each other; but there being no passage for the females, except through the work-yard of the males, they are conducted back to their cells before the latter quit their seats, passing across the chapel within view of the men.

Governor's House, &c.

The Governor's house is separated from the different airing-yards by an open iron fence or grating, from which the airing-yards radiate; and between the house and the fence there is a passage 8 feet in width. In the Governor's parlour and bed-room there are windows which command a complete inspection of all the yards. The common passage to and from the interior of the prison, by which prisoners have ingress and egress, is through the house. There is another entrance from the garden, on the back or opposite side of the prison; but it would be both inconvenient and dangerous to use it as a common thoroughfare, inasmuch as the garden door opens into the work-yard, and is close to the treadwheel.

Turnkey's Apartments.

The Turnkey's apartments are in the work-yard, the only approach to them being through the Keeper's house, and over that work-yard. The entrance or fore door and sitting-room windows open on the yard; the latter overlooking the prisoners at work, and being only 8 feet distant from the circle or ring where the relief-men walk. The bed-room windows overlook the yard, treadwheel, and male infirmary; and in the latter there is a window overlooking the Turnkey's apartments. The Keeper has observed the prisoners, whilst walking the ring, watching and smiling at females in the Turnkey's house. Visitors to the Turnkey must pass close to the prisoners, and his wife and children must be greatly inconvenienced by such a disagreeable contiguity; whilst it affords a source of amusement to the prisoners themselves. The Keeper has been obliged to limit the number of the Turnkey's visitors, many of whom might probably otherwise go to the prison from idle curiosity. He has known of a discharged prisoner obtaining an interview with the Turnkey's daughter (a child 12 years of age), and prevailing on her to carry bacon, &c., to a prisoner within; and of another prisoner inducing her to convey a letter to his wife on the outside.

Boundary-wall.

The boundary-wall is 20 feet high, and there is a stone coping projecting over it about 1 inch and three-quarters on both sides. On the outside, at the distance of 4½ feet, are two carpenters' workshops, and another workshop belonging to a plumber and glazier, the roofs being only about 5 or 6 feet below the top of the boundary-wall. The workmen in these shops might communicate with the prisoners, or aid others in attempts at such communication, or let down means to facilitate their escape. Some of these workmen are often employed during the whole night in making coffins, &c., and in the different workshops there are frequently 10 employed at a time.

It has been mentioned that several of the cells are built against the boundary-wall. There is no difficulty of access to the boundary-wall on the outside; and we conceive that a breach might be very easily made through it into the cells.

Dimensions.

The prison is not sufficiently capacious. For female prisoners there is only one ward, containing seven cells; and the appropriation of cells to the respective male wards is very unequal, there being in ward No. 1, twenty-nine; in ward No. 2, five; and in ward No. 3, ten. The mixing of the classes is, therefore, unavoidable. It has been mentioned that there have been 85 prisoners in confinement at one time, and yet only 51 can be accommodated with separate cells. The dimensions of particular parts of the prison have been described under the head "Construction." There is ample space for enlargement beyond the boundary-wall.

Repairs.

The prison is in substantial repair.

Security against Escapes.

From what has been said it may be perceived that, as a place of security, the prison is extremely defective. Independently of the defects of the boundary-wall, of the too easy access to it from without, of the cells being built against it, and of its proximity to the workshops, the door at the back of the prison, close to the treadwheels opening into the Keeper's garden, is greatly calculated to facilitate escapes. Several escapes have been attempted, and many have been effected. See Appendix A.

Against Fire.

There is no fire-engine in the prison: there are three in the town.

Supervision and Inspection.

There is no regular supervision of the female ward by day, the Matron only visiting it occasionally; or of the infirmaries. There is no supervision of any part of the prison at night. From the windows of the Governor's parlour and bed-room, however, there is an excellent inspection of every airing-yard, of the treadwheel, and of the exterior of most of the cells; and from these windows any great noise or loud talking, notwithstanding the facilities for intercourse between prisoners which have been described, might be heard, either at night or by day. The prisoners at the wheel are always under the immediate eye of the Keeper or Turnkey (both active and vigilant officers), assisted by one of the sweepers stationed in the passage which overlooks every yard in front of the Keeper's house. And although there are no inspecting holes into any of the cells or rooms, yet, from the circumscribed limits of the prison, and the favourable position of the Keeper's windows, the inspection, upon the whole, for a prison built before prison architecture was so well understood as in the present day, may be said to be good, and to afford advantages for maintaining good discipline with a comparatively small establishment of officers.

Adaptation for Employment.

The prison is badly adapted for employment of every kind; the treadwheel will hold only 19 prisoners, exclusive of those on relief; whilst there have been 82 males in confinement at one time: and the cells and rooms are very small. The Keeper, however, suggested that platting of straw by the males, and making lace by the females, might perhaps be introduced with profitable results.

Adaptation for Separation.

To separate the prisoners so as effectually to prevent intercourse, every part of the prison would require material alteration.

Communication from without.

It has been shown that there are means of communication from without, owing to the contiguity of the workshops, and the easy access to the boundary-wall. That communication might be extended to every part of the prison within by the sweepers, who are prisoners. The Governor said, "I have found that, owing to the sweepers, there is communication through every part of the prison; they can and do carry messages from yard to yard, and from prisoner to prisoner; but I could not do without the sweepers, unless regular officers were provided." Missiles of any kind might be introduced with great facility over the boundary-wall into any of the yards, and the only effectual means of prevention would be the employment of a regular watchman to perambulate the interior both at night and by day.

Dryness, Ventilation, Drainage.

The prison is thoroughly dry. The ventilation is bad, owing chiefly to the contracted dimensions of the cells. The drainage is excellent, there being drains and a pump for conveying the water through them in every yard.

System.—Discipline.

Classification.

But little more remains to be said on the subject of classification than has been stated under the head "Construction." The classification is neither that which is prescribed by 4 Geo. IV., nor the limited classification of 5 Geo. IV.; although, from there being three male wards, and from the circumstance of no untried prisoners being ever confined here, it would seem that the latter mode of classification, with respect at least to male prisoners, had been contemplated on the occasion of erecting the prison. We believe that every effort is used to classify the prisoners in the best manner that the building will admit of; but owing to the construction, and the inequality of numbers in the several classes, male prisoners of every variety of crime, frequently, and female prisoners always, are placed together in one ward. See Appendix B.

Silent System.

Convicted prisoners only are committed to this prison; and the Silent System, with separation, so termed, is that which is uniformly enforced; except that the male prisoners, or so many as the treadwheel will contain, are associated at work, where silence is maintained by strict surveillance.

It is but justice to say that the discipline is enforced with the utmost vigour, and in a manner which is highly creditable to the Visiting Magistrates, as well as the Keeper. Nevertheless, it will be seen by the evidence that considerable intercourse takes place between the prisoners. The Silent System has introduced quietness and an appearance of good order, but has not, in any material degree, checked the evils of contamination, while it has imposed on the officers more arduous duties, and given rise to more severe and frequent punishments.

The only officers, besides the Chaplain and Surgeon, are the Keeper, Matron, and Male Turnkey: there are no monitors or wardsmen; but there are two sweepers or cleaners, who also occasionally do the duties of monitors; one of them, during the greater part of the day, being stationed at the passage in front of the Keeper's house, commanding an inspection of all the airing-yards, for the purpose of watching the prisoners. The prisoners never move but in regular order, proceeding to and from their work, chapel, meals, and exercise, in single file, being forbidden to look around, but each being required to look towards the back of the person who precedes him: the same rule is observed during the periods of labour. The officers, with the sweepers, are stationed in the most favourable positions for overlooking the prisoners during their various movements, and while they are at work. The prisoners take their meals in their cells.

Hard Labour.

The only labour performed by male prisoners is that of the treadwheel, which is not applied to a profitable use. It is regarded as an alleviation of imprisonment, being preferred to the solitude of the cells. The Keeper says, "Meeting on the wheel is gratifying to prisoners; it lessens the punishment; they like to see and hear whatever passes, and to associate, although they cannot speak: the looking out for and seeing old acquaintances is a relief." Conversation takes place at the wheel, and they resort to the usual frauds and falsehoods to deceive the officers and each other, in order to obtain exemption from labour, and admission to the infirmaries. (See Evidence.) For a description of the wheel, the hours of labour, the amount performed, &c., see Appendix C., Return II., No. 19. The relief men never sit or remain stationary, but walk in single file in a circle in the work-yard. It is a practice which very materially adds to the severity of the punishment, especially in summer, when the hours of labour are never less than ten. In walking round the ring, greater intercourse takes place than on the wheel.

The sweepers clean the prison. The females mend the prison linen and bedding, and, at intervals, make lace, and plat straw for bonnets.

Visitors.

On the 8th April, 1834, the Court of Quarter Sessions made the following order:—"Ordered, that the Clerk of the Peace do communicate to the clerks of the petty sessions, that no friends be permitted to visit prisoners under sentence of imprisonment from the Assizes or Quarter Sessions, except in cases of illness." This order does not seem to embrace prisoners summarily convicted; nevertheless, the Keeper says that no prisoners whatever are allowed to see visitors, except in cases of severe illness, and then only by virtue of a Magistrate's written order: that there are not above six visitors in the course of a year; that they come no further than the door of his house, opening on the passage to the airing-yards, the prisoner standing within his airing-yard, the intermediate distance being 8 yards, an officer being always present, and the visitors remaining only five minutes. These precautions are found to be sufficient to prevent the introduction of prohibited articles without searching. Visitors not giving a satisfactory account of themselves are refused admittance, although bringing a Magistrate's order. The restriction on visits is most severely felt as a punishment.

Money.

Prisoners are not allowed money under any circumstances: they seldom bring it on their admission. If they do, it is taken from them, and accounted for on their discharge, their persons and every part of their apparel being most strictly searched.

Letters.

Prisoners may write or receive letters once a month, which appears to be the only restriction.

Books.

No books are admitted, unless they are first submitted to and approved by the Chaplain.

Newspapers, Tobacco, Spirituous Liquors, Beer, Meat.

Newspapers, tobacco, spirituous liquors, beer, and meat, are wholly inadmissible; and it may be sufficient generally to state that, from the excellent discipline which is maintained, it is almost impossible that they can be introduced surreptitiously, so as to reach the prisoners. But under a less vigilant officer than the present Keeper, and under any system in which prisoners are employed as officers, the construction of the prison is such as might afford great facilities for abuses of this nature.

Gaming.

Gambling cannot take place here.

Religious and Moral Instruction.

Chaplain.

The Chaplain does duty both at the Common Gaol and New House of Correction; he also performs service at the Bedford Union Workhouse. At this House of Correction he preaches one sermon on Sundays, and on Good Friday and Christmas Day: every morning at nine o'clock he reads the prayers of the Church of England. Three or four times in the week he visits the infirmaries and the prisoners at the wheel, as they successively come off on relief, taking them aside and addressing them individually; others, who are unemployed, he visits in their cells, occasionally distributing tracts amongst them all. On Sundays his duties occupy one hour and a half; on other days, about two hours; he remains with each prisoner in his cell about 20 minutes, and with those at the wheel about five minutes; and he is accessible at all times to any prisoners requiring his advice or assistance. He says the prisoners are attentive and orderly in chapel, respectful in their demeanour, and some of them desirous of intercourse with him. He keeps a Journal, but no Character Book. Both the officers and prisoners regularly attend divine service, so far as the contracted dimensions of the chapel will admit.

HOME DISTRICT.
County Gaols.
Bedfordshire.
Bedford Gaol and House of Correction.

The Governor says that, if either his Turnkey or any of the prisoners, without sufficient cause, should absent themselves, he should immediately discover it, being always himself present. When the prison is very crowded, there is not room for nearly half the prisoners, and then the classes attend alternately. On week-days the cleaning of the wards is done after chapel hours. The service being performed at nine o'clock and eleven o'clock on alternate Sundays, the cleaning is done before service when it takes place at eleven o'clock; and after service when it takes place at nine o'clock; the Keeper personally visiting every part of the prison, to see that it is not neglected.

Books.

Prisoners who can read are supplied with Bibles, Prayer Books, and religious tracts, at the Chaplain's discretion; and, on their discharge, he sometimes furnishes such as he thinks are deserving with a Bible or Testament, either from his own resources, or by obtaining pecuniary aid from the prisoners' friends, unless they have sufficient means of their own. All books used by prisoners are subject to his approval.

School.

There is no school; a circumstance which the Chaplain greatly regrets. The prisoners are extremely ignorant, very few being able either to read or write (see Appendix C., Return II., No. 8.), and fewer still knowing anything of the first principles of the Christian religion. He would gladly lend his assistance in qualifying them to receive that instruction which their case so peculiarly requires.

General Improvement.

The Chaplain says that the prisoners are not only exceedingly ignorant, but extremely vicious; that their moral depravity is great in proportion to their ignorance; and that the majority are decided drunkards. He believes, however, that some have received good impressions, and that others have become decided converts. He has formed this opinion from having kept up a communication with several after their discharge, and from having found that they had altered their mode of life and conduct On the other hand, he says that the associations of the prison, notwithstanding the Silent System, lead to great contamination, and materially counteract his efforts to produce reformation and amendment. "The System is so bad that I can do but little good." See his evidence.

The Keeper says, "The prisoners are very ignórant, few can read, scarcely any can write; they are extremely depraved: they do not improve: a few have benefited from the offices of the Chaplain: there are many re-committals." The re-commitments were about 30 per cent. on the total number of prisoners in the year ending Michaelmas, 1836. See Appendix C., Return II., Nos. 4 and 11.

Health.

Surgeon.
Examining, Cleansing, Fumigating, &c.

The medical officer attends both the County Gaol and New House of Correction. He is in private practice. If the prisoners are found to be cleanly, they are assigned to their wards without being washed or bathed; but not until their clothes have been fumigated, and their persons examined by the Surgeon, Their clothes are baked in an oven with brimstone. When there are sick prisoners, he visits them daily, and he sees those who are well, whether they are at work, or in solitary confinement under punishment, two or three times a-week. He reports the state of their health and their conduct at every Quarter Sessions. He keeps a Journal, agreeably to the provisions of the Act, and a separate Diet Book, in which he enters all orders for spirits, wine, or any other extra allowance.

Infirmaries.
Prevalent Diseases, &c.

The infirmaries are under the supervision of nurses who are prisoners, and are visited only occasionally by an officer. Scurvy, ague, and general debility, are the most prevailing complaints. There have been an immense number of cases of scurvy, which have generally occurred after four or five months' imprisonment. The Surgeon says that the confinement, and the sameness of life and diet, in some measure, but the dissipated habits and debilitated constitutions of many of the prisoners, in a still greater measure, have had a tendency to produce that disease; and that when it has once fastened on the constitution from all these causes combined, the restoration of the patient to perfect health is a circumstance of rare occurrence. The average number of days during which each invalid remained on the sick list, during the year ending Michaelmas 1836, was 21: the number of sick, compared with the total number of prisoners admitted during that year, was in the proportion of 59 to 284; there were no deaths.

The Surgeon thinks that the diet is objectionable;—that it has materially lowered the prisoners' health; and that they ought to have meat twice a-week. He has expressed that opinion to the Visiting Magistrates, and has, in consequence, been requested to prepare a new scale of diet, to be submitted to the justices at their ensuing Quarter Sessions.

Daily Washing of Prisoners.

There seems to be no regular allowance of soap, towels, and combs; but the supply is sufficient. The male prisoners wash in congregated bodies of the entire number in each class in the open yards at the pumps, of which there is one in each yard. And here are opportunities for conversation, which takes place notwithstanding the vigilance with which it is attempted to be prevented. The women wash in a washhouse in their ward. The prisoners were remarkably cleanly in their persons.

Cleansing the Prison.

The cleanliness of the prison is highly creditable to the Keeper; the walls internally, and the ceilings throughout, are washed with lime never less frequently, and generally oftener, than twice a-year; in summer the floors are washed two or three times every week, and not less frequently in the winter, when the weather will admit of it.

Washing Linen.

The linen of the prisoners is washed by contract out of the prison; and it has been found that the contract price has been less than the cost of doing it in the prison. The linen is mended by the female prisoners.

Air and Exercise.

The prisoners at the wheel have ample air and exercise. Those who are in separate cells have admission to the airing-yards, one at a time, as often as they wish; they are not locked in their cells during the day.

Diet—Clothing—Bedding.

Diet.

As to the allowance of diet, see Appendix C., Return II., No. 18: the only beverage allowed is cold water. No distinction is made in the diet with respect to age, sex, or class; the sick receive extra allowance, at the discretion of the Surgeon; the cleaners do not receive extra allowance. Not only the Surgeon but the Keeper considers the diet objectionable, and attributes to it the diseases which have been most prevalent; but he says that, if it were much better, many of the criminal population of the neighbourhood would commit petty offences in order to get into the prison. There was a sickliness and a want of tone and freshness in the appearance of the prisoners generally, which strikingly indicated the absence of robust health. The total cost of diet for the last year was £215. 13*s.* 1¼*d.*, or £4. 6*s.* 9¾*d.* per head per annum.

Clothing.

In regard to the supply of clothing, see Appendix C., Return II., No. 16. The males wear a uniform dress of grey drugget, with white felt caps, which has an extremely neat appearance. The supply is not made at stated times, and there are no periodical musters for ascertaining what clothing is required, or how it is preserved; but it is furnished from time to time, as the Keeper in his discretion thinks necessary: the supply appears to have been sufficient at all times, and the whole of the stores are under his daily observation. He keeps an account of the issue and value, which he submits to the Visiting Magistrates at their weekly meeting. The total cost of male and female clothing for the last year was £68. 2*s.* 2½*d.* The offence of destroying or damaging the clothing is of rare occurrence. No portion is manufactured in the prison; but it is repaired when necessary by the female prisoners.

Bedding.

Whenever there are more than 44 male prisoners, the surplus number cannot be provided with separate cells. The average daily number is about 52, but it is continually fluctuating; and immediately after every Quarter Session and Gaol Delivery it considerably exceeds that amount; and whenever that is the case, several sleep together in the day-rooms; but never less than three in one room, three or four being placed on one double bedstead. As to the supply of bedding, see Appendix C., Return II., No. 16. The Surgeon thinks that an additional blanket should be allowed in winter. Except in wet or very cold weather, the bedding of every prisoner is taken daily, and early in the morning, by the cleaners into the respective day-rooms, where it is aired and shaken, and returned to the cells shortly before the hour of locking up. The bedding was remarkably clean. The bedsteads are of iron, and, by means of hinges, can be turned back against the walls, for the purpose of affording more space when they are not in use. The total cost of bedding for the last year was £26. 12*s.* 1*d.*: the cost of clothing and bedding per head per annum was £3.

Prison Offences and Punishments.

Offences.

The usual offences committed by the prisoners are talking and making signs on the wheel, and at the ring; talking during the cells; visiting during the day in the cells, and also meeting in the privies; defacing the walls and paint; stealing bread from and also selling it to each other; refusing to work; profane and insolent language; and irreverent conduct in chapel.

Punishments.

The most usual mode of punishment is, that of confinement either in the sleeping or refractory cells, according to the magnitude of the offence: reducing the allowance of food is seldom resorted to. The Governor says, "I seldom punish by stopping the food, the allowance not being much." Sometimes the punishment employed is that of making the offender stand for seven or eight hours at and with his face towards the wall in the work-yard. See Appendix C. Boys are also occasionally punished by whipping with a birch, the number of lashes or stripes being from 30 to 40, given by some person not being a prisoner or having any connexion with the prison, in the presence of the Surgeon, Keeper, and two other persons, who also have no connexion with the prison. Irons have never been used. The Keeper states that he sometimes punishes by making the offender do extra work on the wheel, occasionally remaining thereon five hours together without relief. As to offences and punishments, see Appendix C., Return II., No. 15.

The labour of the wheel is less severely felt as a punishment than the prohibition of conversation; and the latter much less than separate confinement.

The Keeper enforces the Silent System with great strictness. He says, "I maintain the strictest discipline that I possibly can. I punish every violation of the prison rules, even turning the head, or looking off the work while at the wheel, or making a silent motion while walking the ring. I punish to the utmost extent that I am permitted by law. I never relax, except in the case of a new-comer for his first offence only, if slight, and if I have reason to think that he has not had sufficient time to acquire a knowledge of the rules of the prison." "I believe I am considered a severe disciplinarian." "Conversation takes place from cell to cell at night; sometimes the sweepers report such conversations; but I cannot always ascertain what the conversation is about, or who are the offenders; and I have often a difficulty in deciding how and whom I ought to punish, especially on the report of the sweepers. I have known the sound of voices to appear to have issued from different cells, and I have punished prisoners in five different cells, not knowing which were actually guilty; and because not one of the five would tell who were the guilty parties. Sometimes, no doubt, I punish an innocent man, who may not know who are the offenders; but how could I keep up the discipline without doing so? If I were not to resort to this mode of punishment, greater intercourse between prisoners would be the inevitable consequence: they would take advantage of my difficulty. I am, therefore, occasionally compelled to punish the innocent with the guilty; I believe it does not often happen, and I adopt every possible precaution that is consistent with the necessary discipline to avoid such an occurrence."

Such are the modes of punishment employed for enforcing the discipline. The following extracts from the Governor's evidence will show what are the results:—"The prisoners talk from cell to cell through the ventilators and partitions; they talk on the wheel; they talk while walking the ring, when on relief; and they talk while they wash in the yards." "They converse freely in the infirmaries;" "they communicate by looks and by signs, and watch opportunities." "The evils of contamination prevail to a great extent, and I believe throughout the prison." "I do not find that with all my discipline I can strictly enforce the rule of silence, or wholly prevent the evils of contamination."

Officers.

The regulations of the Gaol Act which have not already been noticed (so far as they have any relation to this prison) appear to have been complied with.

The only officers are the Governor, Chaplain, Surgeon, Matron, and a Male Turnkey; for their names, ages, salaries, &c., see Appendix C., Return II., No. 21: they all reside in the prison except the Chaplain and Surgeon, and appear to be well qualified for their several offices. In regard to the duties of the Surgeon, see "Health." As to the duties of the Chaplain, see "Religious and Moral Instruction." The Chaplain appears to be a zealous officer, and desirous of doing his utmost to improve the moral condition of the prison; but he finds that the congregating of prisoners at labour during the greater portion of the day admits only of a very limited scope for his exertions; and even that the little benefit which results from those exertions is materially abridged by the demoralizing intercourse which takes place among the prisoners. The Governor is a most active officer, and an excellent disciplinarian. But we disapprove of his promiscuous mode of punishment, by which an innocent party is in danger of being involved with the guilty. On the other hand, we are aware of the difficulties with which he has to contend, and are of opinion that whenever opportunities of intercourse among prisoners are inseparable from the system which is pursued, they will embrace those opportunities, and continue to do so until, by frequent repetition, their most predominant habits will be to seek by every possible mode to elude the general discipline. This habit they will indulge at much risk, if, indeed, from no other motive than a desire of acquiring an imaginary superiority and triumph over the officers, until it gains a strength and inveteracy which scarcely any rational mode of punishment will effectually subdue. We also think it an objectionable practice to allow the prisoners to remain in their cells without being locked up: it presents not only frequent opportunities for intercourse, but a constant temptation to transgress; and we think that their being required to walk the ring when coming off the wheel for relief an unnecessary extension of punishment, which, during hot weather, and the lengthened periods of labour in the summer months, must be very severely felt; and which, to say the least, cannot be productive of salutary effects, either on the body or mind.

Cleaners.

Two prisoners are employed as sweepers or cleaners, who also occasionally watch the prisoners, to preserve order and silence. The Keeper, in his evidence, says, "We do not in any other way employ wardsmen or monitors. Generally, I do not believe they are to be trusted; there may be a few rare exceptions."

The duties of the Keeper and Turnkey are extremely arduous; the former, in his evidence, says, "The Silent System requires constant watching; it is painful and irksome to the officers, who must be close on the heels of the prisoners; it amounts to double duty; I dare not scarcely leave the prison, although I have official engagements which almost daily require my occasional absence." "When I attend the Assizes, or Sessions, the Turnkey does my duty, and I am then obliged to provide a substitute for the Turnkey, of whom the prisoners will take every advantage; and I have known a person so substituted conniving at the prisoners." "I was laid up five days with the influenza, and I could perceive that during that short period the discipline had greatly relaxed." The prisoners communicate by looks and by signs, and watch for opportunities. I invariably punish all breaches of discipline when discovered, but they cannot be always discovered, unless your eye is continually on every prisoner, which is quite impossible."

Miscellaneous.

Accounts, Journals, &c.

The following are the books, journals, &c. which are used in this prison: Bread Book, Cheese Book, Store Book, Order Book, Provision Book, Copy of Vouchers and every Week's Expense, Punishment Book, Governor's Journal, Register, Index, Visiting Justices' Book, Visitors' Book, Chaplain's Journal, Surgeon's Journal, and Surgeon's Diet Book for the Sick.

Recommittals.

The total number of prisoners during the last year was 317, of whom 106 had been before committed to this or other prisons; see Appendix C. 1, Return II., Nos. 4 and 11.

Effect of Imprisonment.

The Governor states that the recommitments have of late years very slightly decreased; and is of opinion that the severity of the discipline has, in some measure, had a deterring influence on the criminal population of the immediate neighbourhood; he says that discharged prisoners have a dread of returning to the prison, but that many of the old and notorious offenders in and about the town of Bedford have been transported; which he thinks may also, in some measure, have occasioned the small decrease. He cannot say that, in any other sense, the effect of the imprisonment has been such as to have improved the habits of the discharged.

Passes.

Passes are not granted. Discharged prisoners, who have to travel a distance to their houses, are allowed a small sum, the maximum 2*s.*, the minimum 6*d.*: and they frequently spend their allowance in the public-houses of the town.

Pardon.

Three prisoners were recommended for and received pardon in the course of last year, on the ground of good conduct.

Prisoners committed under the Revenue Laws.

No allowance is made to prisoners committed under the Revenue Laws.

Insane Prisoners.

There are no insane prisoners.

Evidence.

W. A., Prisoner.

"I am 22 years of age, and have been sentenced to two months' imprisonment for trespassing under the Game Laws. I have been here six weeks. I have been here before four times for the like offence. I do not know who are in the same ward with me, or what are their offences, as we are not allowed to speak. I would as soon come here as go to the other prison, the Gaol. I have no complaints to make. I should like a better diet; we are allowed nothing but bread and water, and one ounce of cheese each day. I think conversation takes place most whilst the men walk the ring and in file to and from different parts of the prison; we are frequently aware when the Turnkey is near or far off, or when his eye is away; for instance, while he is admonishing or addressing a particular prisoner, &c., the prisoners watch for and seize opportunities for talking; they make motions, which they understand, among themselves; the Turnkey is obliged to be away three or four times a-day for a minute or two or more at a time. There is sometimes stealing amongst the prisoners. By the motions they know much of what goes forward in the prison. The cells smell close in warm weather. The prisoners greatly respect the Minister. I have been in the infirmary with other prisoners; there were poachers there at the time; some used to say what they did, and how they used to poach, and mention the different snares and instruments they used, and which were the best modes of poaching, and what money they made; some made a good deal of money; some said they would poach again if they could not obtain work; and no doubt a man might learn to be a better poacher by knowing the different modes of poaching which they used to talk about. I dare say some prisoners, and particularly young prisoners, must be corrupted and made worse by such talk. Some prisoners talked very badly about women, and mentioned that they had seduced them, and boasted about it, and that they would do so again; the language used to be very bad on the subject. I was about a month in the infirmary. The cells are very cold; they are enough to perish one sometimes. We are allowed no fire."

W. M., Prisoner.

"I am 29 years of age, and have been sentenced to three months' imprisonment for poaching. Several poachers are in my ward. (No. 1.) At the time of washing, in the mornings, there are a great number of prisoners together, emptying their slops, exchanging soap and towels, &c.; there are only two towels amongst all the prisoners in my ward; at these times the men are thronged together, three or four at one towel wiping their faces close together, and it is impossible for the officer to see all at one time, and they have great opportunities for speaking in whispers, or in a soft voice, or with the fingers, and by motions, and these communications do take place every morning without being observed. Conversation is occasionally carried on by signs at the ring, and I have observed it whilst the prisoners have been going on and coming off the wheel. I have known men converse for four or five mornings together, from cell to cell, by the ventilators, for several minutes at a time. I have reported such conversations lest I should be punished myself. The prisoners generally know what goes forward in prison, and there is very great communication amongst them which the Governor does not, and cannot, know anything about; they watch all opportunities for such communication while on the wheel; they always know when the Turnkey is near or far off by the clatter of his shoes; they can talk over the partitions so as to be heard, and they do talk at times when the Turnkey is away; I have heard it myself. I sleep in one bed with two other prisoners, and words do pass between us, but not many; one of the two often, and daily, uses blasphemous language; when I read the tracts, he jeers at me. This is a great annoyance to me. I wish I could be alone. I could read and think, but it cannot be done in company: I have long thought this."

J. H., Prisoner.

"I am 21 years of age, and have been sentenced to three months' imprisonment for poaching. I have been here once before. I cannot say who are in the same ward, because we cannot talk. I have no complaints to make as to the prison. I would prefer the other prison (the Gaol) on account of the wheel being more easy. I do not complain of the diet; the water is bad; it is very hard. I think conversation takes place most in going to and getting off the wheel; when we come from chapel to go to the wheel we get thronged, and pass close to each other; the men also talk in walking the ring, and in walking in file to and from different parts of the prison; the eyes of the officers cannot be upon us all at the same time; the prisoners look out for opportunities for talking, and speak in a low voice or whisper, and make motions, and show their fingers, which some of the old ones understand; we can tell when the Turnkey passes by the wheel, and whether he is near or far off; we can hear the noise of his shoes; there is a great deal of talking which is not, and cannot be, found out; we can watch the Turnkey as well as he can watch us. When the Turnkey goes away, a sweeper generally supplies his place. The prisoners know what is going forward in prison. Some respect the Minister, some do not mind what he says. I have been in the infirmaries with different prisoners, and there they talk by day. In the infirmaries we are allowed to talk quietly, in a low voice, by day; the prisoners discourse differently: one says he will lead a better life; others say they will do as they did before; that they will not come here again for a trifle—a paltry thing—but will steal something better; they talk about what they did, and how they did it; and what are the best ways of stealing or poaching, and about the different snares, and which are the best; and the money they gained: and they state their different opinions upon these things. Some men may be better, from getting sickened by the punishments, but I think many more are made worse by coming here. The cells are very cold in winter. There is not so much game as formerly; the poachers have destroyed it. I have myself gained £1 a-day by poaching. Some men cannot poach so well as others: many get disappointed if they do not meet with success, and they then get into liquor, and mix with bad companions, and they determine rather to rob than go home without anything."

I cannot say who are in the same yard with me, because we cannot talk. The treadwheel goes harder with some than with others. I do not make any complaint; the diet is sufficient, but I would rather have meat. I have observed that the men speak most when returning from chapel to the wheel; they pass close to each other; they also speak in coming off and going on the wheel. I can hear the Turnkey's footsteps when he passes behind me walking upon the pavement. I am a night poacher. There is less game than formerly, it has been destroyed by the poachers; poaching makes men worse; they go from bad to worse because they cannot get work; if men cannot succeed in poaching, it is sure to lead to worse; it leads them into bad company."

J. B., Prisoner. "I am 22 years old, and have been sentenced to three months' imprisonment for poaching. I was here once before for poaching. I am now in the infirmary. In my own yard I believe there are prisoners for different kinds of offences. They tell me so in the infirmary. I am nurse; I have had under my charge in the infirmary five or six prisoners at a time. We never talk improperly about poaching, or anything else."

T. J., Prisoner. "I am 25 years of age, and have been sentenced to six months' imprisonment for an assault. The men can and do talk on the wheel, over the partitions; we know when the Turnkey is present by the noise of his feet; and I think whilst he is walking to and fro is the time that there is the most discourse, also when he is engaged in speaking to any prisoner, also when he goes away, which he must do sometimes when new prisoners come in, and when he serves the victuals: when he serves the victuals we have a prisoner to mind us, and he is not so sharp as the Turnkey, and we have better opportunities of discoursing; we watch for these opportunities, and use them when we think we can escape punishment. At the washing pump, in the yard, we are sometimes as many as fourteen; and although the Governor is present, yet we have opportunities of making motions and talking with the fingers, which is understood by prisoners; a good deal may be said in this way, notwithstanding the Governor's sharpness. Another opportunity occurs under the shed before going on the wheel, when men pass each other just coming from chapel, and in getting on and coming off the wheel. I was afraid to speak when I came. The other prisoners gave me to understand that the Governor was very severe, but I have since found out a way of communicating my mind by whispers and motions, and what are the best opportunities for doing it. Silence is not so bad a punishment as the wheel, which, coupled with the diet, is a very severe punishment. There is a good deal of communication between prisoners which the officers never do or can find out, with all their watching; we know generally what goes forward in the prison. I am sure that men who come here, and have known each other out of prison, can and do so far communicate, as to learn a good deal of what passes about their friends and acquaintance out of prison. We can watch the officers as well as they can watch us. Prisoners can speak from cell to cell so as to be understood. I am sure of this; I have heard them bid each other good night, and say other things through the partitions. I was three weeks in the infirmary. There were two there for stealing lead, one for housebreaking, one for poaching. I believe they were all first offenders, and the conversation was not bad. The Clergyman is much respected. I have no complaints to make. The diet is very low; it is enough; but we feel the cold water; we want something warm. I would rather be in the other prison, merely because the prisoners there may have warm water, and before trial they can speak, and have a fire. I believe that silence does prevent a good deal of contamination, but there is still a great deal going on which is not and cannot be discovered. It is impossible to prevent men from talking when they get together and have opportunities."

L. J., Prisoner. "I am 32 years of age, and have been sentenced to three months' imprisonment for poaching. I was here seven years ago for the same offence. I have no complaints. I am satisfied with everything except the diet; the bread is sufficient, but we want a little meat. When we wash in the yard we are near together; sometimes twenty prisoners are present, and now and then a word passes; the Governor cannot always see us, and I have known a few words pass now and then at the ring when the Turnkey has been obliged to go to his house. Communication takes place amongst prisoners which is not, and cannot be, found out."

J. F., Prisoner. "I am 42 years old, and have been sentenced to nine months' imprisonment for breach of trust. I am a kind of monitor. I am almost all day long watching the prisoners. I find that they talk most at the washing places in the different yards, in the mornings; there are sometimes 12 or 14 together. In yard No. 1 the prisoners in the lower gallery remain in the yard until the prisoners in the upper gallery have come down and washed; there are sometimes as many as 31 prisoners together in the lower gallery, and then they watch all opportunities of conversing, and it is impossible to prevent it: it must be a full quarter of an hour before they have all washed. They first empty their chamber utensils, then wash in them, and then wipe themselves: they have three or four pieces of soap, which they exchange from one to the other, and in doing all this they are mixed together; no doubt they can and do pass many words, and use their fingers, and make motions without being seen. They are often found out and punished for it. I have seen the heads of some very tall men above the partitions on the wheel, and they sometimes talk in whispers over these partitions, and are punished for it: they also speak in going on and coming off the wheel: they watch every opportunity there and elsewhere to talk: they watch me and the Turnkey as much as we watch them: I have seen them peeping through the doors at us. I think they know what goes forward in the prison. I have heard them knocking in their cells. They generally respect the Clergyman. Perhaps I report about two or three times a-week on the average for conversing; perhaps once a-week for conversing at the washing place."

there have been three prisoners there at a time; prisoners in that ward mix together a good deal while washing in the yard, and they cannot be all seen at one time, and they will and do talk in whispers. There is a good deal of talking which cannot be found out. The prisoners occasionally talk on the wheel, and have been punished for it; they also talk in coming from chapel, whilst passing each other to go on the wheel.

Bedford Gaol and House of Correction. E. B., Prisoner.

I am 24 years old, and have been sentenced to three months' imprisonment for poaching. The prisoners have opportunities of talking in the yard (No. 1.); they whisper together, and it is not always possible to find them out; they have only two towels between the whole. Since I have been here four or five prisoners have been punished for talking over the wheel. I once heard a boy talk from the cell next to me; I distinctly heard him say, "What o'clock is it?" I was in my own cell at the time. The prisoners make signs with the fingers to each other, but I have not seen it done very often.

Mr. ——, Surgeon.

See "Health," "Surgeon," &c. I think that treadwheel labour, at some seasons of the year, is injurious to health: it distresses the men in very hot weather, and in winter it exposes them to great changes and draughts, especially in bad weather. I find that the bodily system gives way generally after four or five months; it depends on the constitution. As a mode of punishment I think treadwheel labour unequal; some men feel it much more severely than others. I find that the prisoners complain occasionally of this, and reason upon the inequality of the punishment, and so become dissatisfied, sullen, and morose, and they practise every kind of deception to avoid the wheel; they feign sickness, pretend to have looseness of bowels, and severe pains in the loins, and to suffer from old hurts, &c. I think the clothing quite sufficient. In winter I think an additional blanket should be allowed. I am of opinion that the diet is not sufficient, especially for those who work on the wheel; I should recommend meat twice a-week. I have expressed that opinion to the Visiting Justices, and am to prepare a new Dietary to submit to the Magistrates at the ensuing Quarter Sessions. I believe the insufficiency of the diet has lowered the health of the prisoners, and contributed materially to the prevalence of the influenza in this prison.

Rev. Mr. Maclare, Chaplain.

See "Religious and Moral Instruction," "Chaplain's Duties."

Some parts of the Rev. Mr. Maclare's evidence apply more especially to the Gaol, but when that is the case the distinction is sufficiently marked.

The prisoners are in general very ignorant; the great majority are drunkards; they are very depraved; manufacturers and inhabitants of towns are worse than countrymen and agriculturists; the most ignorant are the most depraved; their ignorance on religious matters is lamentable. Some, I hope, have received good impressions, and I trust that others have become true converts. I have ascertained that some discharged prisoners have conducted themselves well, and have altered their mode of life and conduct. With some discharged prisoners I keep up a communication by seeing them if they do not reside at a great distance, and I have lent them books, &c., but many become more depraved in prison. I often hear of prisoners after their discharge. The greatest contamination prevails amongst the untried in the Gaol, where they associate freely; but among convicted prisoners with whom the Silent System is enforced there is also contamination. Prisoners, notwithstanding the strictest attempts to enforce silence, have frequent opportunities for conversing. I have seen them converse whilst passing in file to and from chapel; and in the Gaol I have seen the cleaners talking under the doors to the various classes. I have known letters sent out of the Gaol by untried felons; the letters were taken by the sweepers. In the infirmaries they are always aware of all that passes, both in the prison and amongst their friends out of the prison. It appears that there is a general communication among the prisoners throughout both prisons, but more especially in the Gaol. I have had great intercourse with prisoners, especially after trial, and sometimes after their discharge, and have endeavoured to gain their confidence; and they have admitted that their conversations in prison (I am now speaking of the Gaol) have been most demoralizing; that they have related their adventures, and how they performed them; that they have discussed the best methods of picking locks, and of effecting robberies; what were the best instruments; how to make the best defence, and trump up a good story, &c. With regard to treadwheel labour, I believe the prisoners practise various deceptions with the doctor to get into the infirmaries. I believe it to be most unfavourable in respect of the moral reformation of the prisoners; no doubt it materially counteracts my efforts. I effect the greatest good with those whom I see alone. But the system is so bad that I can do but little good. I greatly lament that there is no school. The majority of the prisoners cannot read. I should wish them to be instructed by a schoolmaster, or officer not a prisoner, superintended by myself.

Mr. James Banfield, Governor.

Owing to the few wards in this prison, we are obliged to mix the classes; and frequently male felons, misdemeanants, and prisoners committed under summary convictions, and also prisoners from the Assizes and Sessions, are all placed together in one ward: women are always placed together in one ward. Although the prisoners are kept in separate cells (except when on the wheel, and when three or more sleep in one cell or room), yet the evils of contamination prevail to a great extent, and, I believe, throughout the prison: the prisoners can, and do, talk from cell to cell, and know generally what is going forward.

There is only one male officer besides myself, viz., a male turnkey; and one female officer, the matron, who is my wife. When I attend the Assizes and Sessions, the turnkey does my duties; and I am obliged to find a substitute for the turnkey. I always find that a new turnkey is not sufficiently acquainted with the duties, and the appointment leads to inconvenience; the prisoners taking many advantages of his inexperience. I have known of a person so substituted connive at the prisoners, and then of course conversation will go on more freely. There is no night supervision. I do not employ wardsmen or monitors. I employ two sweepers in the winter to clean the prison; one of whom, during a great portion of the day, and always when the men go to their meals, or when there are a greater number than can work on the wheel, is stationed in the passage overlooking the yards. In summer I employ only one sweeper, the prisoners being fewer. We do not in any other way employ wardsmen or monitors. I do not believe they are to be trusted: there may be perhaps a few rare exceptions. The sweepers are relieved from the labour of the wheel, at least during winter. I have found that, owing to the sweepers, there is communication through every part of the prison: they can and do carry messages from yard to yard, and from prisoner to prisoner; but I could not do without the sweepers, unless regular officers were provided.

The silent system requires constant watching: it is painful and irksome to the officers, who must be close on the heels of the prisoners: it amounts to double duty. I dare not scarcely leave the prison, although I have official duty that almost daily requires my occasional absence: I have to see about the prisoners;—to go to the county treasurer to pay fines;—to see the tradesmen about the work;—to provide straw, bedding, clothing, firing, &c.; and I have various things for my own house to attend to:—these are daily occurrences. I was laid up five days with the influenza, and I could perceive that, during that short period, the discipline had greatly relaxed. Much time is necessarily consumed in watching on the wheel, locking and unlocking, forming into file, and watching the prisoners in passing to and from work and meals, and at washing; and time is occupied in reporting, and investigating reports.

The prisoners, notwithstanding the discipline, can and do talk: I find they do it frequently:—they talk from cell to cell through the ventilators and partitions;—they talk on the wheel;—they talk whilst walking the ring when on relief;—and they talk whilst they wash in the yards. The surplus men for whom there is not room on the wheels steal bread from the cells in the yards. Prisoners converse freely in the infirmaries, there being no other supervision in the infirmaries than that of a nurse, who is a prisoner. They sometimes make signs at chapel:—they are aware of new comers, and of the discharge of old prisoners, and even of the day when such discharges are to take place; and sometimes they ask to send messages by prisoners about to be discharged; and they generally know what goes forward in the prison: they communicate by looks, and by signs, and watch opportunities. I invariably punish all breaches of discipline when discovered; but they cannot be always discovered unless your eye is continually on every prisoner, which is quite impossible.

My means of inspection are not sufficient to enable me to know what the nature or import of their communications may be. These communications must chiefly take place from cell to cell at night. No doubt they are often such as to produce contamination. Our prisoners are generally countrymen—poachers and agricultural labourers,—and I do not suppose that in this prison the contamination can be so bad as in many others. I do not think it possible, by the most rigid enforcement of the silent system, to do away all the evils of contamination: nevertheless, our prisoners being for the most part separated, and the discipline being very strict, I apprehend they are materially diminished. If the wheel were done away with, and they could be kept wholly separate, and the cells were so constructed as to prevent sound from passing, contamination could not prevail; and this, I am convinced, would be the only mode of preventing it effectually.

We do not work the women on the wheel. During the late epidemic, we had 28 male prisoners laid up in the infirmaries: we had at that time altogether in the prison 64 male prisoners. I do not attribute the sickness which then prevailed to the labour. I think treadwheel labour, however, unfavourable to health. I believe the constitutions of the generality of prisoners give way under the work in about four months: it depends in some degree on the strength of the constitution,—the diet,—the amount of work,—the discipline, &c. Neither of the sweepers had the influenza;—the work which they performed was more moderate, equal, and varied; and such work, I think, is more conducive to health.

I believe that treadwheel labour punishes the body rather than the mind. When the prison is full, some of the prisoners are idle:—they are in solitude in their cells; and then they repeatedly solicit to go on the wheel to avoid the solitude: they would not do so, I believe, if they could get together in idleness. We change the prisoners from the cells to the wheel every alternate week, in order to equalize the labour as far as we can. We mix all classes on the wheel, there being only one working shed. The punishment of the wheel is unequal: the short man can relieve himself from the work, by hanging on the hand-rail: it punishes weakly and infirm prisoners more than robust prisoners. But I make no distinction, unless the medical man reports for absolute sickness or infirmity. The men sometimes try to deceive the doctor and myself, to get into the infirmaries, by feigning sickness, &c.

I enforce the Silent System strictly with all classes. I maintain the strictest discipline that I possibly can. I punish every violation of the prison rules, even turning the head, or looking off the work, whilst at the wheel; or making a silent motion whilst walking the ring. I punish to the utmost extent I am permitted by law. I never relax, except in the case of a new comer for his first offence, if slight, and if I have reason to think he has not had sufficient time to acquire a knowledge of the rules of the prison. The second offence I invariably punish. I punish, of course, according to the nature and magnitude of the offence, either by causing the prisoner to stand with his face towards a blank wall (weather permitting), for a certain time, at least four, at most eight hours, or I place him in solitary confinement in his own cell, or in the refractory cell; or I assign him extra work on the wheel, for half an hour, or an hour, and sometimes for five hours without relief. I believe I am considered a strict and severe disciplinarian. Solitary confinement is decidedly the punishment which is most severely felt. The prisoners solicit to work on the wheel, rather than remain in their cells. Silence is felt less severely than solitary confinement, but more severely than treadwheel labour. Meeting on the wheel is gratifying to prisoners; it lessens the punishment: they like to see and hear whatever passes, and to associate, although they cannot speak:—the looking out for and seeing old acquaintances is a relief. The punishments have been more frequent since the Silent System began. I seldom punish by stopping the food, the allowance not being much:—that is a mode of punishment which is less felt by some men, and by boys, than others. Conversation chiefly takes place from cell to cell at night: sometimes the sweepers report such conversations; but I cannot always tell what the conversation is about, or who are the offenders; and I have often a difficulty in deciding how and whom I ought to punish, especially on the report of the sweepers, the prisoners frequently refusing to disclose their names: I have known the sound of voices to appear to have issued from different cells, and I have punished prisoners in five different cells, not knowing which were actually guilty, because not one of the five would tell who were the guilty parties. Sometimes, no doubt, I have punished an innocent man, who may not know who were the offenders, but how could I, under such circumstances, keep up the discipline without doing so? If I were not to resort to this mode of punishment, greater intercourse between prisoners would be the inevitable consequence: they would take advantage of my difficulty: I am therefore occasionally compelled to punish the innocent with the guilty. I believe it does not often happen; and I adopt every possible precaution that is consistent with the necessary discipline to avoid such an occurrence. If I had wardsmen it would not improve the system: they are not to be trusted; they can be influenced by fear and by bribes. In short, I do not find that, with all my discipline, I can strictly enforce the rule of silence, or wholly prevent intercourse and the evils of contamination. The prisoners are very ignorant: few can read; scarcely any can write; they are exceedingly depraved; they do not improve; a few have benefited from the offices of the chaplain: there are many recommittals.

APPENDIX (A).

Escapes and Attempts at Escapes from the County House of Correction.

Jan. 18, 1822, J. P.—Convicted of an escape from this prison, and sent to the common gaol.

Oct. 15, 1822, J. H.—At six o'clock A.M. found John Howes had broke prison and escaped, by breaking through the side of his cell and scaling the boundary wall, making use of his bedding for the purpose. Reported the above at eight o'clock the same morning to the Rev. Dr. Hunt, who visited and inspected the cell, bedding, &c.

Aug. 24, 1826, J. S.—Escaped from prison about seven o'clock this morning through the new gate at the back door, the lock of which must have been picked. Shirts and clothes are safe in the prison in the store-room; his county dress was found in the garden: he must have been assisted in his escape and provided with clothing by some of his former companions.

March 27, 1828, J.B.—This morning, at half-past five o'clock, James Burns was in the act of escaping from prison, he having broken through the door of his cell during the night, and having made a ladder of his rug, braces, and handkerchief, at one end of which was tied his pillow with gravel in it: this was thrown over the wall, and, catching hold under the coping, it was sufficiently strong for him to draw himself up to the top, which he had nearly accomplished when discovered.

April 10, 1828, J. B.—Who broke his cell, and had nearly escaped over the boundary wall, on Thursday the 27th ult., was found in the act of escaping this morning at seven o'clock, he having double irons on at the same time; but, having drawn them up over his legs so that they could not be seen, he had made a strong ladder of his blankets; his bed case was also cut and made into a smock frock. Ordered, that the said James Burns be deprived of the use of the yard, and that he be kept closely confined in the receiving-room until the next meeting of the visiting justices.

Sept. 27, 1828, J. B.—John Burgess, who was committed on Monday last as a rogue and vagabond, having expressed to a fellow-prisoner his determination to effect his escape from prison this evening, or to-morrow morning, by means of the scaffold. Ordered, that the said John Burgess be taken from his work to his cell, and that he be deprived of the use of the day-room until further orders.

March 31, 1832, B. D. alias R. M. B. P.—Had thrown his blanket over the wall with a bag of gravel at one end to assist him in his escape. Ordered that he be kept closely confined to his cell until the next meeting of the visiting justices.

May 13, 1833, W. G.—A vagrant, confined in the receiving-room, made an attempt to escape last night through the chimney, but was prevented by a bar being across. He was found in a most filthy state.

BERKSHIRE.

Reading County Gaol and House of Correction.

Berkshire.
Reading County Gaol and House of Correction.

Construction.

This prison is situate on the Forbury Hill, within the borough of Reading, upon a plot of ground of about 315 feet in length, and 216 feet in width, enclosed by a boundary wall 25 feet high. Within the boundary is a return wall, enclosing the buildings on the north and east sides. The prison was originally erected in 1786; but the building for juvenile offenders, and several other portions of it, have been added since. It is under the jurisdiction of the sheriff, lord lieutenant, and magistrates of the county. The arrangement of the buildings is extremely defective, and of so complicated a character, that no description will convey any correct idea of it without an accompanying plan. We shall, therefore, after stating generally that they comprise three principal divisions—first, the common gaol,—secondly, the house of correction,—thirdly, the prison for juvenile offenders, (a term which signifies in the sense wherein it is applied to this prison, delinquents of any age for their first offences)—merely give a transcript of our notes on the construction, in the order in which they were taken. These notes comprise a variety of matter, some portions of which, in point of arrangement, ought perhaps to be referred to other heads of this Report; but, inasmuch as the prominent evils which are intended to be pointed out, are almost wholly owing to the construction, it may be better not to dissever facts which, in order that they may lose none of their importance, required to be viewed in close connection.

In this place, it may be convenient, also, slightly to advert to some of the prison arrangements. The officers are the governor, matron, deputy governor, storekeeper, and three male turnkeys. There are 16 wards, and, including the sick in the infirmaries, and the women who work in the wash-house, the prisoners are distributed in never less than 18 different parts of the prison. The Silent System is enforced with the convicted male classes only, viz., those who are confined in the house of correction. Two of the turnkeys, during the day, so far as circumstances will permit, are in constant attendance upon these classes. The numerous other classes associate in their respective wards throughout the day; and sleep, several together, in the rooms at night: these are generally left by themselves at all times; or in charge only of wardsmen, the officers being so few, and the general duties of the prison being very multifarious: see duties of sub-officers, Appendix G. There is no night supervision; and even the prisoners who are governed by the Silent System, or the greater number of them, sleep together in rooms. There are only 13 cells in the gaol, and 12 in the house of correction: and these are not used for the separation of prisoners with a view to prevent contamination; but for the safer custody of the worst and most desperate characters, who are continually removed from cell to cell, to prevent their devising means of escape.

Lodge.

There is in fact no Lodge; and the limited establishment of officers will not admit of a porter being stationed at the entrance of the prison; which therefore is not properly protected. The common approach to the prison is by a door (which by day is never closed), opening from the boundary wall into the garden, and thence through another door (which is seldom closed), in the inner wall, opening into a small court. In this court are the governor's and storekeepers' officers, where, it is proper to mention (by the way,) one or the other of these officers is generally engaged. The passage thence proceeds by a circuitous route to the house of correction. There are several gates in the passage; but except when the bell rings for the prisoners to attend chapel, to rise in the morning, or to retire at night, all of them are left open for the convenience of the officers and customers at the mill, not one being guarded by a porter, or in any other manner. The treadwheels in the house of correction are erected within a close shed, the doors of which, whilst the prisoners are at work, are kept locked; and two turnkeys are generally on duty in the yard on the outside, but one of them, at least, must sometimes necessarily be absent. These doors, however, are frequently opened to enable the prisoners to go into the yard on various occasions. We conceive that, in consequence of this defective arrangement, whereby this passage is permitted to be continually open and unguarded, every prisoner in the house of correction, and, with their assistance, the other prisoners also, might escape, without possibility of prevention. Nothing could hinder them from overpowering the turnkeys, who are not armed. Any persons pretending to be customers at the mill, might introduce means for promoting the attempt without much risk of discovery, as such persons are never searched; nor are they, we believe, under ordinary circumstances, considered proper objects of suspicion, even although they may be strangers. The governor, seeing the practicability of such a mode of escape, has taken the precaution of setting up an alarm bell near his house: but, should it ever be attempted, there would be a hundred chances to one against such a flimsy safeguard proving of the slightest service.

Ward No. 1.—Male debtors.—To this ward belong 6 day rooms, 11 sleeping rooms, and 1 airing yard. The debtors are generally very few. The different rooms are appropriated to three distinct sets of debtors, viz., 1 day room and 1 sleeping room, to the most respectable: 3 day rooms and 5 sleeping rooms, to common debtors, who support themselves; and 2 day rooms and 5 sleeping rooms to debtors on the county allowance. All these occupy their own day rooms when sick, there being no infirmary for them. The airing yard is common to the whole. There are doors of communication from each division of the ward to the other divisions; so that constant intercourse may be kept up throughout.

The restrictions on debtors are, that spirituous liquors are inadmissible; and that they are limited to one quart of beer or cyder, or one pint of wine, each, per diem; and their fire and candle lights are extinguished, in winter at 9, and in summer at 10 o'clock. All other luxuries, viz., books, tobacco, newspapers, food of every description, money, &c., are allowable to those who can procure them; as well to prisoners who are on the prison diet, as to the others.

These prisoners being under no supervision whatever, except when the governor or a turnkey occasionally visits them for a few minutes at a time, might procure either lights or fire at any hour of the night: and, inasmuch as their airing yard adjoins the boundary wall, they might receive any articles whatever over it, with scarcely any risk of discovery; and thus be enabled to set at defiance certain of the gaol regulations. A practice also is permitted, which is at total variance with the spirit of the Gaol Act. The allowance of beer is not required to be consumed within any given time. They may serve it, and, as they themselves admitted, might lend it to each other. This practice is nearly as much calculated to lead to extravagance, luxury, and drunkenness, as if there were no restrictions at all, for a prisoner might, from time to time, save his allowance, and occasionally supply it in large quantities to others who could command money.

Escapes from this ward might, without much difficulty, be effected, and it is impossible to observe the fact without a feeling of surprise that the sheriff has taken no better precautions for his own security.

These debtors, from their airing yard, might not only converse with, but see, and be seen by, the female debtors, whenever there are any in the prison; and might carry on the like intercourse with the females of the criminal classes. The female debtors occupy a portion of the matron's house, there being no proper ward for them. The matron's house and yard adjoin the male debtors' ward; and the separation wall is only 11 feet high. The male debtors, by standing on their door, or by other means, might look over the wall into the matron's yard; and the window of the female debtors' sleeping-rooms overlooks the male debtors' yard. Female criminal prisoners of various classes continually go into the matron's yard to hang out clothes. Moreover the matron's yard alone intervenes between the male debtors' airing yard and the airing yard of ward No. 7 (appropriated to female felons and misdemeanants), the intermediate distance being only 21 feet, and the walls of separation only 11 feet high. Not only have conversations frequently taken place between the male debtors and the female debtors in the matron's yard, and between the male debtors and the female criminal prisoners in ward No. 7, but letters, snuff, tobacco, &c., are constantly exchanged over the walls, between the male and both the female classes. At the time of our visiting the prison, the governor was obliged to remove a female prisoner from ward No. 7 to another ward, to prevent such intercourse. The male debtors might easily get into any of the female wards over the partition walls.

Ward No. 2.—Recommitted male felons for trial at the Assizes.—To this ward belong 1 day-room, 2 sleeping-rooms, and an airing yard. Here were six prisoners; 1 for highway robbery; 2 for housebreaking; (one of whom had before been three times in prison, and once transported), and 3 for sheep-stealing. The worst and most desperate characters among the untried felons are placed in this ward; and at night are taken to the separate cells in another part of the prison for safer custody. When there are more prisoners than cells, those who cannot be thus provided sleep in their own rooms in this ward. Narrow slips of iron have been nailed against the ceilings and sides of these rooms for better security, but which might be separated therefrom without great difficulty. It has often been done, and the iron has been converted into knives and saws. There is now in the governor's custody a saw, which was most ingeniously manufactured, about four years ago, by a prisoner under sentence of execution, out of a piece of iron so separated, and by means of which he effected his escape. There are large spike nails in the floors and walls capable of being extracted; the very attempt to do it would at least afford amusement to prisoners; and, if attended with success, would furnish them with additional and powerful instruments for effecting their liberation. To guard against such attempts, the governor is obliged continually to remove the prisoners from cell to cell, and from one sleeping room to another; a practice which, in itself, is productive of much trouble, and not unattended with danger. The position of this ward, too, is such, in reference to other parts of the building, as to invite attempts at escape, and which, without the greatest vigilance on the part of the officers, might be made with every chance of success. A short time since, a prisoner contrived, out of the materials of his night tub, to make a hook, which he attached to some kind of rope he had manufactured, and threw it over the wall, for the purpose of fastening it on the coping stone. The governor was previously aware of his design, and frustrated it. Upon a former occasion, 7 prisoners escaped from this ward, by constructing a ladder out of their wooden forms, and affixing it against the wall from the top of their privy, and letting themselves down by a rope made out of their towels. Many similar attempts have been made.

The wards Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5, (in which all the untried male criminal prisoners are confined, and sometimes convicted prisoners from the house of correction,) being parallel to each other, and forming one continued or unbroken section of the prison, and the respective airing yards being separated by walls of only 22 feet high, and fourteen inches thick, and there being a brick drain communicating with, and running through the several privies in these yards, free intercourse might take place between all the different classes, over the walls, by words and written messages, and through the brick drain, which acts as a speaking trumpet. Slips of paper, containing written communications, are frequently thrown from yard to yard: the writing is accomplished by means of soot, used as a substitute for ink, and a chip of wood made into a pen. We have seen some of the writing thus produced, which was perfectly legible. The chief turnkey has conversed with prisoners through the brick drain; and although, at first, they were deceived as to his identity, yet he was so distinctly heard and understood as to be almost immediately recognised.

Ward No. 3.—Male felons for trial at the Assizes.—To this ward belong 1 day-room, 2 sleeping-rooms, and an airing yard. The observations as to the strips of iron which line the sleeping-rooms, the facilities for, and attempts at, communication over the walls, and by the privies, which have been made with reference to ward No. 2, apply equally to this ward.

At night, these prisoners, or as many as can be so accommodated, are also placed, for safer custody, in the separate cells; provided they are not wholly occupied by the prisoners of ward No. 2. These cells are so constructed and arranged, that conversation can be carried on from cell to cell.

Ward No. 4.—Male felons and misdemeanants for trial at the Sessions.—It will be seen that the classes which the Gaol Act requires to be kept distinct, are here mixed. This ward, in its construction, &c., resembles ward No. 3, being one of the wards in which intercourse can be carried on by the privies, and over the walls. Both classes of prisoners in this ward associate and are mixed together by day, in the day-room and airing-yard; but at night the felons occupy one of the sleeping-rooms, and the misdemeanants the other; these rooms being separated by a wooden door, which presents no impediment to conversation.

A few years since, two prisoners, by tying their blankets together, effected their escape from one of the sleeping-rooms: they descended from the window to the partition walls, and passed over the roofs of wards 4 and 5 to the boundary wall, which they found very little difficulty in scaling.

Ward No. 5.—Used for male prisoners from the house of correction.—To this ward belong 1 day-room, 1 sleeping-room, and an airing yard. Although it is within the common gaol, yet when any of the classes in the house of correction are over-crowded, the excess are brought here. This is one of the four wards in which intercourse can be carried on by the privies and over the walls. Prisoners in each of these wards have frequently been punished for that offence. These wards contain all the male prisoners in the gaol, and one class from the house of correction. It has been ascertained that, when conversation has been desired, certain pre-concerted signals have been given: a prisoner, with one of his wooden or Cumberland shoes, has been known, for instance, to kick one of the brick walls which separate adjoining yards; and the signal passing from yard to yard, and every prisoner being ready, great intercourse has then taken place throughout the different wards. Whenever such opportunities are presented, it will easily be conceived, by those who know anything of the habits of prisoners, that they will neither be overlooked nor neglected; and, if any doubt can be entertained of the demoralizing nature of such intercourse, a perusal of the statements of prisoners themselves, under the head "Evidence," contained in this Report, will assuredly remove that doubt.

Cells.—In this division of the prison there are only 13 cells, including 6 refractory cells and 1 condemned cell. Communication might be carried on most easily, and indeed prisoners might see each other from cell to cell throughout the greater number of them. Prisoners of different classes are occasionally placed in these cells. Escapes have been effected from cell No. 6.

Matron's House and Yard.—It has been mentioned that female debtors, when there are any (which is not often), occupy part of the matron's house: that from the matron's yard, and from their sleeping-room window, they might see and converse with the male debtors: that similar communication might take place between the male debtors and female criminal prisoners of all classes, who often (i. e., about twice a-week) go into the yard to hang out linen; and that, in fact, instances of such intercourse between these several classes are of frequent occurrence: see Ward No. 1. The female criminal prisoners might also intermix with the female debtors in the same yard.

Ward No. 6.—Untried female prisoners of all classes.—All classes of untried females are here mixed; and have one day-room, one sleeping-room, and one airing-yard in common. They all sleep on one large wooden bedstead upon the floor, although under separate bedding. These classes occasionally occupy Ward No. 7.

Ward No. 7.—Female transports and convicted misdemeanants.—These prisoners have one day-room, one sleeping-room, and one airing-yard in common. This is the ward from which the female prisoners can, and in fact do, converse and exchange notes, &c., with the male debtors: see Ward No. 1.

Ward No. 8.—Females of all classes summarily convicted.—It will be seen that this division of the prison is also used as a house of correction for female prisoners.

In point of construction, the apartments in this ward are similar to those in the other female wards already described. It has been mentioned that all the classes, except the convicted male prisoners, associate. Some idea may be given of the practices by which the associated classes amuse themselves, by stating that, a few weeks ago, the governor was obliged to punish a prisoner in this ward (a married woman), for exhibiting her adroitness in standing on her head, in the presence of the other prisoners; her person of course being exposed during the exhibition.

Ward No. 9.—Convicted female felons.—This ward resembles the other female wards.

Such is the construction and relative position of the several female wards, that intercourse can be carried on between different classes from ward to ward.

Wash-house and Laundry.—If the classification of the female prisoners, such as it is, constituted any check upon intercourse between them, all the beneficial effects resulting from that classification would wholly be counteracted by the association of prisoners of all classes in the wash-house and laundry. They are taken from any and every ward, chiefly on account of their qualifications for washing, without reference either to class or character. The matron has diversified occupations, which will not admit of her being constantly present; see Appendix A: and there is no female turnkey to maintain order in her absence. The majority of these females being of the lowest description of prostitutes, it may easily be conceived what must be the nature of their conduct and conversation. At this time there are confined in the prison and associated with some of these abandoned women, in ward No. 8, two female children, the one only 10, the other 12 years of age. About a week ago, there were four common prostitutes in this ward.

Cookery.—The cook is a convicted felon. He prepares all the meals for every ward throughout the gaol and house of correction. When the proper time arrives, the store-keeper attends at the cookery, and assists him in cutting up, weighing, and getting ready the messes; which are then carried by the former, in wooden trays, to the doors of the respective wards; where they are delivered to the different wardsmen, the storekeeper still attending and assisting him. The messes for the female prisoners are delivered to, and distributed in the female wards, by the matron. Before the meal is commenced, one of the prisoners holds up in succession each mess, and exclaims aloud the word "This?" by which is signified, Which prisoner is to have this mess? whilst another prisoner, with his back towards him, so that he cannot see the mess, calls out the name of any other prisoner that he may think proper, to whom the mess is then immediately delivered. This is done to prevent favouritism. The two prisoners who assist in thus distributing the messes, are taken from the prisoners in daily rotation.

House of Correction.

The house of correction is a distinct building, but within the same boundary wall. The approach to it is through the gaol, and has been partially described under the head "Lodge." It consists of three stories. There are four day-rooms on the basement, and nine sleeping-rooms, and 12 cells in the two upper stories or galleries. Male prisoners only are confined in this division of the prison. The wards into which it is divided, the classes confined in those wards, and the apartments appropriated to the respective classes, are as follow:—

Ward No. 10. Convicted felons.—1 day-room, 2 sleeping-rooms.
Ward No. 11. Do. misdemeanants.— do.
Ward No. 12. Vagrants.— . . . . do.
Ward No. 13. Reconvicted felons.— . . do.

Occasionally, one or more of the sleeping-rooms are occupied by military and other prisoners, who by day are confined in another division of the prison, viz., the juvenile prison.

There is a spacious work-yard attached to the house of correction, in which is erected the treadwheel-house, &c.

Although all these classes are under the Silent System, yet the prisoners, who sleep together in rooms, of course have great opportunities for conversation. It is a singular fact, from which a very decided inference may be drawn as to the little reliance which can be placed on wardsmen, that, although there were 252 punishments during the last year, not a single report was made by a wardsman; see Appendix F. But such is the construction of this part of the prison (and it may be sufficient to state the fact generally, without going into minute details), that the greatest intercourse might, and in fact does, take place between the respective classes, from their day-rooms and sleeping-rooms, through the partition-walls, doors, windows, &c. One of the turnkeys sleeps in this building, but at so remote a distance from some of the wards, that his services can be of little avail for the purpose of checking that intercourse.

Juvenile Prison.

This building, which stands on a piece of ground taken from the work-yard of the house of correction, has been constructed since the erection of the gaol. It is occupied by male juvenile offenders; and, by day, also by military prisoners, when there are any. The term juvenile offenders, as we have already stated, when used in reference to this prison, is not confined to children exclusively, but includes prisoners of any age, provided they have never before been imprisoned, and their offences bring them within the misdemeanants' classes. But adults, as well soldiers as others, sleep in the house of correction. This division comprises three wards, viz., Nos. 14, 15, and 16. The general infirmary for male prisoners of every class in the gaol, house of correction, and juvenile prison, is also on the third floor of the building.

Ward No. 14.—Adult Misdemeanants, not being Soldiers.—Prisoners of this class occupy one of the three day-rooms of the juvenile prison, and at night sleep in a room in one of the galleries of the house of correction. There are eight prisoners now in custody for various offences, one of them for an assault with intent to commit a rape. These prisoners, when in their day-room, can communicate freely with the boys.

Ward No. 15.—Boys under 17 years of age, of all classes.—These prisoners occupy one of the three day-rooms on the basement. The second floor of this building is divided into eight separate sleeping cells, which are also appropriated to this class. It has never happened that the number of boys in confinement has exceeded eight. Should they exceed that number, the excess would be taken into the house of correction to sleep. They can converse freely from cell to cell. A turnkey, indeed, sleeps on the same floor or gallery as it is termed, but at one extremity of it; and in the passage of the gallery are two doors which intervene between the turnkey's room and five of the cells; so that prisoners occupying these five cells could not be heard by him. The cells are miserably constructed; and so badly ventilated, that the stench arising from them at the time of unlocking is almost intolerable. The boys, from their day room on the basement, can converse, not only with the prisoners in ward No. 14, but with the military prisoners in ward No. 16. They can also, at night, from their cell windows, converse with prisoners of all classes, from the gaol and house of correction, in the infirmary on the third floor of this building. Such offences are of frequent occurrence; in short, there is no doubt that intercourse does take place between almost all the various classes who occupy this division of the prison; and that great contamination and corruption must result from it, since prisoners of all classes are in the infirmaries, and all descriptions of offenders are placed in the boys', as well as in the military, class. It is acknowledged too, by all keepers of prisons, that soldiers and boys are the most depraved and incorrigible prisoners of any.

Ward No. 16.—Military prisoners of all classes.—By day, this ward is occupied by soldiers of all classes, who indiscriminately associate in one of the three day-rooms, from whence, as before observed, they might communicate with the boys in their day room, through the respective windows, the intermediate distance being only three feet seven inches. The windows are glazed, and capable of being opened and shut by the prisoners. It is true that the boys are seldom in their day room, except on Sundays, having to work on the treadwheel on other days. But they take their meals in their day room. The soldiers sleep in the house of correction.

There are three airing yards belonging to the juvenile prison; but they are seldom used, except by the prisoners of ward No. 14, who have unrestricted access to one of them. The infirmary (which will next be mentioned) is on the third floor of this building.

Infirmary.

The apartments on the third floor of the juvenile prison are used as an infirmary for the whole of the male population, except debtors. There are three apartments, viz., the surgeon's room, the convalescent-room, and the general dormitory. Male prisoners of all classes from the gaol, house of correction, and juvenile prison, when sick, associate here. When we visited the prison there were ten patients, viz., three felons for trial, six convicted felons, one misdemeanant. There is no regular supervision by day or night, except that of the nurse, a prisoner: the present nurse is a convicted felon. From the windows (which overlook the neighbourhood) the patients can hold intercourse with the boys in their sleeping cells on the second floor, immediately below; and conversation frequently takes place between them.

Tread-wheels.

The prisoners at the treadwheel work in four distinct rooms; in each of which there is one treadwheel. In these rooms, all classes are kept separate so far as circumstances will permit; but in order to equalize the work, when the relative numbers greatly differ, they are frequently mixed in one room. When the prisoners are at work, the doors of the treadwheel house are kept locked. There are two centinel boxes in the work-yard for the turnkeys, one on each side of the treadwheel house; one of them being distant therefrom fifteen feet, and the other ten feet. From these, the turnkeys watch the prisoners through the open grated windows of the work-rooms as they walk to and fro; but can only command a partial view of them; and the intermediate distance will admit of the prisoners carrying on conversation in a low tone of voice, or by signs, &c., without much chance of detection: added to which, one of the turnkeys is occasionally obliged to be absent on other duties; and there are not even wardsmen or monitors appointed to overlook the prisoners, it having been found, when wardsmen were employed, (which formerly was the case,) that they were not to be relied upon. The reports were invariably made by the turnkeys alone, although it was equally the duty of the wardsmen to do that duty.

It will be remembered that the passage of communication from the entrance of the gaol to the house of correction work-yard is generally left open and unguarded; a circumstance which presents great facilities for the escape of prisoners: see " Lodge."

Back gate.

But there is another entrance to the house of correction, which is nearly as insecure, if not more so, than the one from the front of the prison. There is a large door or gate opening from the boundary wall, at the back or south side, directly into the work-yard; and to which the customers at the mill bring their corn in carts to be ground. These customers even go into the work-yard, and pass backward and forward to the miller's store-room, which is over the wheel-house, to transact their business, &c. It seems that any person might obtain access to the mill-house under pretence of being a customer, unless indeed there were some palpable reasons for suspecting his motives or character.

Military Store-Room.

On the west side of the prison stands a large military store-room, which is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the lord lieutenant, neither the sheriff nor the county magistrates possessing any control over, or right of access to it. It stands in the garden between the boundary wall and the inner or return wall, and abuts upon both, its roof being only four inches below each wall. The inner or return wall, at that part against which the store-room stands, bounds the house of correction work-yard, and is distant from the treadwheel-house about twelve or fifteen feet. Until very recently, several stands of arms were deposited therein; and it is said that, even now, it contains three or four stands of arms. The position of this building, and the various matters connected with it, which have been adverted to, are circumstances which must materially endanger the security of the prison.

Chapel.

Prisoners of the opposite sexes are screened from each other's view when assembled in chapel, as well as in going to and quitting it. Only one class of male prisoners is conducted to and fro at a time. All the male classes are exposed to each other's view; and it would appear that they have great opportunities of intercourse even here. The means of inspection by the governor and chaplain are not good.

Water-Tank.

There is a large water-tank in the gaol used for various purposes, and, among others, for cleansing the different privies in wards Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5. Prisoners from the house of correction are often employed in cleaning it: in the spring they do it about twice a week. There is a large pipe or tube which communicates from the tank to the brick drain under the privies, which is said to convey sound with the power of a speaking trumpet. Opportunities are thus afforded for frequent intercourse between prisoners from the house of correction and all the male criminal classes in the gaol.

Dimensions.

See dimensions of wards, Appendix C. The prison is said not to be sufficiently capacious for its average population; nevertheless, we apprehend it will be found large enough, so long as the prisoners continue to be associated: the average number is about 80; the present number is 105; the greatest number it will contain is about 156: there have been 160 prisoners at one time. There are only 33 cells, viz., 13 in the gaol, 12 in the house of correction, and 8 in the juvenile prison. The question, however, must, in a great measure, depend on the system which is to be pursued, viz., whether it be the associated or separate system. The magistrates appear to be fully aware of the evils of the associated system, and to have contemplated certain alterations for the separation of the prisoners; but these alterations have not been made: see Appendix E. There is ample scope for enlargement; but the prison is defective in so many points of view, that we conceive no alterations can ever make it a good one.

Repairs.

It is in substantial repair.

Security against escapes.
Against Fire.

As a place of custody it is insecure in every part: see extracts from Governor's Journal, Appendix A. There is no fire-engine on the establishment: there are three in the town.

Supervision.
Means of Inspection.

None of the prisoners are under any regular supervision, except those who work at the tread-wheel; and these are under the eye of the officers only during labour; see duties of sub-officers, Appendix G. There are wardsmen in the male classes; but it seems they never report: see punishments, Appendix F. There are no means of inspection whatever without being in the midst of the prisoners; and, in a great number of the wards, the prisoners are as much beyond the officers' hearing as they are out of their view.

Adaptation for Employment: for Separation.

The prison is not well adapted for employment, or for separation; both the rooms and cells are small; and of the latter there are only 33. The tread-wheels will hold 40 persons; but it is apprehended that there is generally a far greater number of prisoners in the house of correction than can be worked on them. There are no tread-wheels for female prisoners.

Dryness, Ventilation, Drainage.

The prison stands on a gravelly soil, and is dry and well drained; but the ventilation is said to be bad throughout: see "Juvenile Prison, Ward No. 15."

Communication from without.

There are means of communication from without, which greatly endanger its security: see Ward No. 1, lodge, back-gate, military store-room.

System.

Discipline.—The establishment of officers, and the arrangements for working the system pursued in this prison, have already been adverted to in the preliminary observations under the head "Construction;" see "Officers;" also Appendix G.

Classification.

The mode of classifying the prisoners has also been mentioned incidentally under the same head; and in the Appendix will be found a more formal description of the several wards and classes, with a list of the prisoners in confinement on the 8th February, 1836: see B and D. The classification is of a complicated character, and, in some instances, is contrary to the requisitions of the Gaol Act. It seems that there is a sufficient number of wards to admit of the classification prescribed, or rather sanctioned, by 4 George IV., sec. 5, for gaols and houses of correction enclosed within the same boundary walls; and perhaps it might be worth while to consider whether that mode of classification would not be preferable, inasmuch as it would impose on the officers less arduous duties, which, therefore, they might discharge more satisfactorily. Mr. Hackett, the governor, says, "We classify so as to effect the best separation." We believe that, so far as any moral good can be effected by classification, the plan pursued is not inferior to any other.

Association.

All classes of untried and convicted female prisoners, and all classes of untried male prisoners, associate in their respective wards, not being governed by the Silent System; and (except convicted females sentenced to hard labour) are in idleness. By day, they saunter about in their airing-yards and day-rooms, where they take their meals; and at night they sleep, several together, in rooms: some few sleep in cells. There is a wardsman in each male class; and the governor, or one of the turnkeys, of course, visits the wards occasionally: but these associated classes are generally left by themselves. Not only do prisoners of the same class associate among themselves, but it has been shown that intercourse is carried on between prisoners of many different classes. The evils of association and contamination, therefore, prevail in this prison to a very considerable extent: see Appendix E.

Silent System.

The Silent System is enforced only with convicted male prisoners sentenced to hard labour. But these work in associated bodies at the wheels under charge of regular officers, and sleep in bodies in rooms, where they are under no supervision. In some of the rooms there are wardsmen, but they never report—they receive no extra allowance or other compensation. The governor admits, that even among these classes the greatest intercourse takes place; and that contamination is in no degree checked by the operation of the Silent System.

Hard Labour.

The hard labour performed by the convicted male classes is that of the tread-wheel. For a description of the wheels, the hours of employment, the amount performed, &c., see Appendix, Return 2, No. 19. Although corn is ground for customers, yet the labour is not productive, the profits being considerably less than will pay the expense of keeping the machinery in repair. This kind of labour is regarded as a punishment; but is greatly preferred to solitary confinement. Much intercourse takes place between the prisoners on the wheels; and they practise the usual deceptions with a view of avoiding the work, and getting into the infirmaries. Convicted female prisoners, sentenced to hard labour, are employed in the wash-house and laundry, and in repairing the prisoners' clothes, and in no other manner. But the untried female prisoners frequently solicit work of this description; and when their services are required they are sometimes employed in the same manner. Transports are placed at hard labour.

Labour, not severe.

The labour, not severe, consists of cleansing the prison, gardening, pumping, and walking round a circle in the house of correction work-yard. Untried male prisoners are occasionally employed at the pump. There is a small crank which is used for pumping, and will employ four prisoners at one time in separate compartments: see Appendix, Return 2, No. 20.

The cook and nurse, as well as the wardsmen, are prisoners; but receive no extra allowance, except that, occasionally, when the duties of the nurse are very heavy, he is allowed a pint or half a pint of beer a day. A convicted misdemeanant is generally employed in the service of the governor, in sifting cinders, cleaning knives, and working in the garden; and in similar offices for the storekeeper and deputy-governor: two other misdemeanants do the like services for the turnkeys; and, in fact, light their fires, clean their rooms, and perform the business of common servants. The prisoner who is allowed to go into the governor's garden, might escape without much difficulty. Mr. Hackett admits that the practice of thus employing the prisoners is highly objectionable; but he says it has been long established, the magistrates do not object to it, and without such assistance it would be impossible, with so small an establishment, to keep the prison clean.

Visitors.

Debtors may receive visitors at all times, and in any numbers, between 9 in the morning and sunset, except between the hours of 12 and 2, and during divine service. Visitors to the untried are admitted at all times, with permission from the governor, between the hours of unlocking and locking up. In pursuance of the Secretary of State's recommendation, convicted prisoners are not allowed to receive visits during the first six months of imprisonment, unless under very pressing circumstances. Criminal prisoners see visitors only in presence of an officer, the prisoner with the officer standing at one side of an iron-gate, and the visitors at the other side; the latter remaining only from 5 to 10 minutes. Visitors may remain with debtors until within quarter of an hour of locking up. No visitors are searched, but all parcels, &c., which they bring are examined. Bad characters, if known to be such, would not be admitted. Since the adoption of the Secretary of State's recommendation there have been very few visitors either to the untried or convicted classes. Before its adoption the prison used to be crowded with them; and more so on Saturdays and Sundays than on any other days: the prisoners were kept in a state of constant expectation and excitement, and the officers had very harassing duties to perform. The new regulation is found to be a most salutary one.

Money.

Debtors are allowed the possession of money without restriction: criminal prisoners are not allowed to have any money. If it is brought into the prison by the latter, or by their friends for them, it is always taken by the governor and accounted for on their discharge. The governor thinks that the possession of money by debtors leads to irregularities and general profligacy.

Letters.

Convicted prisoners are not allowed to receive or write letters, during the first six months of imprisonment; and all letters written by, or addressed to, all classes of criminal prisoners, are submitted to the governor's inspection, who forwards or withholds the contents at his discretion. There is no restriction upon letters to or from debtors.

Books.

No books are admitted to prisoners (except debtors), unless they are first approved by the chaplain. Debtors may have whatever books they like without restriction of any kind.

Newspapers, Tobacco, Smoking, Beer, Food, &c.

None of these articles are allowable to criminal prisoners. On their admission they are thoroughly searched; tobacco is sometimes found most ingeniously secreted about their persons; but very rarely however. Almost any kind of missiles might be introduced into every ward over the walls, without great risk of discovery; but tobacco has never been known to have been so introduced. Of course the criminal prisoners may have these articles in cases of sickness, in the shape of extra allowance, if ordered by the surgeon. The prison regulations as to debtors have already been explained.—See "Construction, Ward No. I."

Gaming.

When the present governor was appointed (in 1835) he found the tables, forms, &c., throughout the prison cut into figures and devices for a variety of games, and he immediately had them planed smooth. He has since then found in the male debtors' ward cards and a cribbage-board, which he also ordered to be destroyed.

Religious and Moral Instruction.

Chaplain.

The chaplain has no other professional duties than those of the prison. On Sundays he performs full service in the morning at 9; and reads prayers and gives an exposition from one of the lessons in the afternoon at half-past 2; he preaches a sermon and reads prayers on Christmas-days and Good Fridays; he reads prayers and gives a short exposition on every week-day morning at half-past 8 in the summer, and at 9 in the winter; he admonishes the prisoners on their admission and discharge; visits the wards occasionally, but does not converse with the prisoners separately, unless requested by themselves or the governor; he visits the infirmaries almost daily, and converses with the sick severally, remaining with each about ten minutes or a quarter of an hour; he visits the debtors but seldom, as they give him no encouragement; he is accessible to any prisoner requiring his services; and whenever a prisoner is under sentence of death he sees him two or three times a day, for about an hour or half an hour at a time, both before and after the warrant of execution arrives. His duties occupy about three hours daily. He says the prisoners are respectful in their demeanour to him and desirous of his visits; but that, generally speaking, they would rather indulge in idle conversation than receive his services as a minister of the gospel. He keeps a journal, but no character book. He says that the prisoners, in general, are orderly in chapel; but that he often sees the women look through their screen (which is made of gauze or bunting) towards the debtors who sit in the gallery; that all prisoners (with the exception of the debtors) unless prevented by sickness, regularly attend Divine service; that the officers, unless absent from a similar cause, or on necessary duty, are also regular in their attendance; that when prisoners cannot attend, a list of their names is delivered to him; and that he generally visits them after service; that it is optional with the debtors to attend or not, and that very few do attend.

The governor states that a written list of all absentees is always made out by the storekeeper, and delivered to him; and that he attends the chapel personally, and inspects the prisoners to see whether it is correct; that the cook and nurse, who are prisoners, attend chapel on alternate days; that, with this exception, no prisoners are allowed to be absent, except such as are absolutely prevented by sickness, or are under punishment; that the wards are cleaned on Sundays before service; that he sometimes attends personally to see that it is done, but cannot answer for its never being neglected; that on week-days the cleaning is not done until after service.

The chaplain states that prisoners who are not of the Protestant religion may, at all reasonable times, on application to him, and with the sanction of the visiting justices, receive visits from their own ministers; that an entry of such visits is always made in the governor's journal; and that only two occasions of the sort have occurred, in both of which the prisoners were Roman Catholics.

Books.

It is a rule that each ward shall be supplied with one Bible at least; the chaplain distributes Testaments, Prayer-Books, and tracts at his discretion; and any prisoner requesting a Prayer-Book or Testament, if considered deserving, may have one. The prisoners frequently destroy their books, and their tracts always. The chaplain states that no books are admissible which are not submitted to his inspection and approval. An exception to this rule, however, appears to have been allowed. A prisoner in ward No. 5, of the name of A. G. (a gentleman by education), has been permitted to obtain novels, and a variety of other books from the circulating library; an indulgence which, it is submitted, is highly improper, and calculated to produce great laxity of discipline in other respects.

School.

There is no school in the prison.

Moral Improvement.

The chaplain says that many prisoners on quitting the prison make professions of amendment; that he has had few opportunities of testing their sincerity, although in many instances he has heard of their having pursued a better course of life; but that the associations of the prison lead to great contamination; and that the classification of prisoners, and the silent system, do not materially lessen that contamination. The governor states that the prisoners generally, on their admission, are extremely ignorant and depraved; that he knows of no instance whatever of amendment; that they are more decidedly corrupt and hardened on their discharge; and that the number of recommittals is one proof of the fact. The recommittals during the last year were about 20 per cent. upon the total number of prisoners.

Health.

Surgeon.
Examining,
Cleansing,
Fumigating.

The surgeon (who is also in private practice), or his assistant, attends the prison once every day, and oftener if necessary. There is an order of sessions authorizing the occasional attendance of the assistant; but the surgeon himself invariably sees the patients in all important cases. All prisoners (except debtors) are examined by him before they are passed to their proper wards, but are not placed in a bath, nor are their clothes fumigated unless they are found to be in a dirty condition: the only bath is a common slipper-bath; their clothes, when it is considered necessary, are fumigated with brimstone. He visits the prisoners who are well once in every three months; he does not see prisoners under punishment unless required to do so. He keeps a journal, in which he enters the times of his attendance, and all orders for extra allowance for the sick. At every quarter-sessions he reports the health of the prisoners.

Infirmaries.
Prevalent
Diseases, &c.

He states that the arrangements in the infirmary are excellent, so far as respects personal comfort; but that the intercourse between the prisoners there is most demoralizing. The nurse is always selected from the prisoners. There is no infirmary for females, who, when sick, are visited in their respective wards. He states, that of the diseases which are generated in the prison, he does not find that any are more prevalent than others; but that the venereal is that which prisoners most frequently bring with them; that he has had 50 cases of influenza at once; and that during its continuance the tread-wheels were not used; that the prison is healthy; and he believes no connexion can be traced between the diseases which have occurred and the locality, or actual state of the building, diet, labour, or other circumstances; that in many cases the prisoners come in, quite out of condition, and go out fat and well, particularly the females; that the average number of days during which each invalid remained on the sick list, during the last year, was $1\frac{89}{92}$; that there were 506 prisoners admitted, of whom 92 were sick.

Daily washing of Prisoners.

There is no fixed allowance of soap, towels, and combs; but the supply appears to be sufficient: clean towels are given out every week. The prisoners wash in the open yards, tubs being placed there for the purpose; the females in the presence of the matron, and male prisoners in presence of a turnkey. We found them cleanly in their persons.

We found every part of the prison clean. The walls internally, and the ceilings throughout, are washed with lime once, or oftener, every year; the day-rooms and passages are washed with water daily, when the weather is fine; and the cells and sleeping-rooms occasionally, and as often, we believe, as is necessary.

The prison linen and bedding is washed in the prison by the convicted, and occasionally by the untried female prisoners.

Convicted male prisoners sentenced to hard labour have sufficient air and exercise at the tread-wheels; and convicted male prisoners sentenced to labour not severe, in cleansing, gardening, and walking round a circle in the work-yard. Females of all classes, and untried male prisoners, have unrestricted access to their respective airing-yards; and the latter are frequently employed in pumping.

Diet. Clothing. Bedding.

Diet.

As to the allowance of diet, see Appendix, Return 3, No. 18. There is no fixed scale of diet for children. When we visited the prison there was a little girl in custody only ten years of age, who had been convicted of stealing turnips; she admitted that she received more to eat in prison than when at home, and much kinder treatment; and it seemed she was altogether more comfortably provided for. It was her first offence; it may almost be feared that it will not be her last. There is an infirmary diet table by which the surgeon regulates the allowance to the sick; it is as follows:—

Ordinary Diet.

Three-quarters of a pound of bread; one-quarter of a pound of meat; one quart of gruel. Estimated cost per week, 1*s.* 3*d.*

Extra Diet.

Three-quarters of a pound of bread; half a pound of meat; one quart of gruel. Estimated cost per week, 1*s.* 8$\frac{1}{2}$d.

Low Diet.

Three-quarters of a pound of bread, with barley-water; one-twelfth of an ounce of tea, with half an ounce of sugar for each time it may be ordered, whether for breakfast, supper, or both, and a quarter of a pint of milk. Estimated cost, 1*s.* 2*d.* per head per week.

Prisoners on the criminal side, who support themselves, are allowed whatever diet they may think proper, except spirituous and fermented liquors. As to debtors who are not on the county allowance, see "Construction; Ward, No. 1.," and "System; Food," &c. Of the various prisoners who are employed as wardsmen, &c., the nurse is the only one who receives extra allowance; and which consists of half a pint, and, occasionally, one pint of beer per diem. The total cost of prison diet for the last year was 339*l.* 9*s.* 2$\frac{6}{8}$d., or 3*l.* 18*s.* 10$\frac{11}{28}$d. per head.

Clothing.

As to the supply of clothing, see Appendix, Return 2, No. 16. Of the male prisoners, the untried wear a yellow dress of coarse cloth; convicted felons, a party-coloured dress of coarse cloth; convicted misdemeanants, a dress made of plain grey drugget; and boys, a fustian dress. The women uniformly wear plain grey woollen gowns, &c. The men's clothes, and the materials for the female dresses, are supplied by contract; but the latter are made up by the female prisoners. There is a tailor's shop in the house of correction, where a convicted misdemeanant is always employed, and where the prison clothing is repaired; and whenever a prisoner is about to be discharged, his own clothing is sent to the shop, and thoroughly mended. There seems to be no allowance of clothing to debtors in any case. The supply of clothing is not made at stated times; and there are no periodical musters for ascertaining what clothing is required, or how it is preserved; but it is supplied from time to time, as the governor thinks proper; and it appeared to have been sufficient at all times: the whole of the stores are under his daily observation. The clothing is not varied according to the season of the year. The storekeeper keeps an account of the cost, or contract prices, and of the issue; his account is made up monthly, is checked by the governor, and from time to time submitted to the visiting magistrates. The total cost of prison clothing for the last year was 25*l.* 0*s.* 4$\frac{1}{2}$d.; the average cost for the last three years was 90*l.* 12*s.* 2$\frac{1}{2}$d.; and the average cost of each prisoner's clothing, per year, for that period, 2*s.* 11$\frac{3}{4}$d.

Bedding.

It will be observed from what has been mentioned, that of by far the largest number of male prisoners sleep several together in rooms. The least number who sleep together in cells is 3. No regulations have been made with respect to prisoners charged with, or convicted of, unnatural crimes; and the governor says that in this prison such crimes might be perpetrated continually without detection; that one bad man might corrupt a whole room, and particularly the younger prisoners. All the males are provided with separate beds; nevertheless, on the occasion of our visit, we found that two of them, in one of the rooms, had, for the benefit of additional warmth, made up their bedding into one bed, in which they both lay. See bedding table, Return 2, No. 16. All prisoners, without distinction of sex or class, are allowed, each, one straw bed, one rug, and two blankets: in addition to which, prisoners in the infirmary are allowed one pillow-case each, which is changed weekly; and the debtors of both sexes are allowed, each, one sheet. There are no stated periods for washing, shaking, and airing the blankets; but the straw beds are emptied and refilled, and the blankets and rugs are washed when necessary, and frequently taken out to be aired; and the doors of the cells are continually left open when the weather will permit. We found the bedding, and in short every part of the prison, remarkably cleanly.

The total cost of bedding for the last year was 9*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* The cost of clothing and bedding, per head per annum, was 7*s.* 7¼*d.*

Prison Offences and Punishments.

Offences.

The governor, in one of his Returns, states, that the usual prison offences are, "talking, skulking, and stealing provisions." It will be seen, on reference to the Appendix, Return 2, No. 15, that the recorded offences during the year ending Michaelmas, 1836, were 246. The total number of persons in custody in the course of that year, (debtors excepted,) was 539, so that the offences were numerous. It will be seen, that of these 246 offences, no less than 224 were committed by convicted prisoners; and that, on a comparison of the relative numbers of the convicted and untried who were in custody during the year, much more than an equal proportion of them were committed by the convicted classes. These classes alone are under regular supervision by the officers, and that only during the day. Many of the offences committed by them are, therefore, likely to be detected. But the untried are not under any regular supervision, either by day or night; nor are the convicted classes by night. It is but reasonable, therefore, to infer, that the 246 recorded offences constitute but a very small proportion of those which are actually committed, where the opportunities of transgressing with impunity are so great. A return has also been made, which shows the nature of every offence committed during the year ending January, 1837: See Appendix F.

Reports.

There is a wardsman in each male class. It is the duty of the wardsman, no less than of the turnkey, to report offences; and being continually with the prisoners, both by day and night, and being 9 in number, whereas there are only two turnkeys who regularly overlook the prisoners, and by day only, of course they have much greater opportunities for detecting offences; and it would be but reasonable to suppose, if indeed it were possible to place any reliance upon them, that reports by wardsmen would be proportionably more numerous than by the turnkeys: but it is a remarkable fact, from which very important inferences may be drawn, that of the 252 offences recorded in the last-mentioned return, not one was reported by a wardsman, but all of them were reported by the turnkeys.

Punishments.

The usual punishment is that of solitary confinement on bread and water; and, in aggravated cases, whipping by order of the visiting magistrates. The number of lashes given is from 12 to 25, in the presence of all the officers, except the chaplain, and of all the convicted male prisoners. Irons have been used only twice in the course of the last two years.

The present governor is an able and zealous officer, and an excellent disciplinarian: nevertheless it will be seen, on referring to his evidence, that even the convicted classes, with whom the discipline is most rigorously enforced, and who are governed by the silent system, completely set at defiance the regulations of the prison, and carry on an almost constant intercourse, by conversing on the wheels, at their meals, in their day-rooms, and bed-rooms, from cell to cell, from room to room, and from gallery to gallery; by words, by signs, and in various other modes.

Officers.

The officers are the governor, chaplain, surgeon, matron, deputy-governor, or chief-turnkey, storekeeper, and three other turnkeys; all of whom, with the exception of the chaplain and surgeon, reside in the prison. See their names, salaries, emoluments, &c., Appendix, Return 2, No. 21. As to the duties of the chaplain and surgeon, see "Religious and Moral Instruction," and "Health." As to the duties of the sub-officers, see Return, Appendix G. We requested that return, in order to show that their duties are so multifarious, as to make it impossible, in a prison where the classes are so numerous, that the discipline can be enforced in such a manner as to prevent, or even check, that moral corruption, which must inevitably result from the almost constant association of the prisoners. We heard no cause of complaint against any of the officers. The governor is spoken of in high terms of approbation for his firmness, vigilance, and judicious management of the prison, and his humane conduct to the prisoners. And from our own observation, we formed the opinion that under all the disadvantages of construction, &c., the prison could not be more ably managed. The regulations of the Gaol Act, which have not been particularly referred to, appear to have been complied with. It must be observed, however, that a practice prevails which is not in strict accordance with those regulations:—the chief turnkey, who is a most respectable person, and an excellent officer, is allowed to let beds to debtors; and at this time, even one of the criminal prisoners, A—— G——, in ward No. 5, (and who has before been particularly referred to,) is indulged with permission to hire one of his beds. It appears to have been a custom of long continuance.

Wardsmen, &c.

The nurse and cook are prisoners; and other prisoners are employed as wardsmen, cleaners, and in various handicrafts for the benefit of the prison, such as repairing clothes, shoes, &c. &c. With the exception of the nurse, none of them receive extra allowance. With regard to wardsmen, the governor states as follows: "The wardsmen cannot be trusted, especially where they are allowed no privileges, either in the way of extra allowance of food, or exemption from labour, which is the case here. This fact is obvious from the great number of punishments which I inflicted during the last year; not one of which was reported by a wardsman. They are influenced by bribes, and by threats, and are naturally prone to favour the prisoners even at considerable risk to themselves." We object to any system which recognizes the appointment of prisoners to offices of trust or authority. Whenever wardsmen are employed, it leads to favouritism and oppression, as well as to discontent amongst the prisoners, who will not readily submit to reproof from their equals.

Recommittals.

The total number of persons in custody (except debtors), in the course of the last year, was 539, of whom 138 had before been committed to this or other prisons; and 56 of that number had been several times before in prison; so that the recommittals were in the proportion of about 20 per cent. upon the entire number of prisoners. But the governor states that the general average is 25 per cent. The chaplain thinks that the strictness of the discipline, and the increased severity of the punishments have, in a slight degree, produced a deterring influence, both on the criminal population of the prison, and the neighbourhood: he says the poachers on the boundaries of Oxford, Bucks, and Berks, were accustomed to select their prison, or rather commit their depredations in that county in which the prison discipline was considered to be the least rigorous, and that Reading had a preference, which it no longer has. On the other hand, the governor says that no good effect has been produced either on the minds of those in confinement, or on the habits of the discharged. See " Religious and Moral Instruction—General Improvement."

Passes.

Passes are never used, on account of the forgeries of those documents which have been practised. Mr. Hackett, the governor, furnished me with the following document:—

PASSES PAID BY THE RELIEVING OFFICER AT READING.

| Number of Passes. | | Number of Persons. | Cost. | | | Remarks. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | £. | s. | d. | |
| Forged . . | 169 | 1455 | 107 | 15 | 6½ | All paid in the space of six weeks. |
| Genuine . | 6 | 7 | 0 | 9 | 0 | From Lewes, 1836. |

The prisoners, on their discharge, if they have to travel above 20 miles to their home, are paid a trifling sum at the discretion of the governor: 8*s.* 5½*d.* was the aggregate amount so paid during the last quarter. When a more liberal allowance was made, it was found that the prisoners invariably spent what they received in the public houses of the town.

Pardons.

No prisoners during the last year have been recommended for pardon.

Prisoners committed under the Revenue Laws.

In the event of prisoners being committed under the revenue laws, application with respect to the allowance to such prisoners would be made in the proper quarter, pursuant to the statute.

Insane Prisoners.

There are no insane prisoners.

Expenses of the Prison.

For a statement of the total expenses of the prison for the year ending Michaelmas, 1836, see Appendix, Return 2, Nos. 22 and 23.

Evidence.

S. C., Prisoner.

" I belong to the convicted felons' class (No. 10 ward), but am now nurse in the infirmary. I was committed 18th July, 1835. The prisoners talk together in the infirmaries, and also in the bed-rooms in the wards. I have slept with seven or eight prisoners in a room in one of the felons' wards. The conversation of prisoners is generally bad; it relates to their exploits out of prison, how they performed them, &c.; and they boast of these things. No doubt a man might learn every mode of committing crime: they learn of each other the cant language, and are proud of showing their knowledge of it. There are words for highway robberies, for picking pockets, for house-breaking, &c. Most of the prisoners are anxious to learn this kind of knowledge: there are names for almost every thing. I suppose the prisoners must get worse by this kind of conversation, which takes place I know throughout the prison. It happens most at night. A well-disposed man cannot here separate himself from others: they would annoy him and laugh at him. I have been on the wheel, and they talk frequently in a low voice there; but they are seldom found out if they don't turn their heads. They can watch the turnkey as much as he can watch them. They cheat the doctor, and afterwards laugh about it. I have known a man to let his nose bleed into his pot, and inform the doctor he had voided blood. When I was in class No. 10, there was much stealing amongst the prisoners of provisions, handkerchiefs, braces, &c. I prefer being a nurse, for the advantages. I would not wish to be a wardsman: wardsmen have no advantages. The talk in class No. 10 was as bad as it could be. I know they can talk from room to room in the galleries. I never was placed with the misdemeanants."

G. W., Prisoner.

" I belong to the convicted felons' class, No. 13. I was committed to this prison 3rd February last. I have been in prison six times before. I have slept both in the misdemeanants' and in the felons' rooms. I think the felons are worst in their discourse; but each class used to talk: they talked about their different modes of committing crime; and how they used to do it; and the best ways. A man might learn a good deal more here than he could learn out of prison: they used to learn the cant words, and repeated them to each other as boys use a spelling-book; they regularly learned it one from another. I believe there were words for every offence: words signifying the different modes of breaking houses and committing highway robberies were taught chiefly: it was a regular school to many of them. They stole amongst themselves. Some of them talk entirely among themselves, and others can't understand them. A man disposed to be religious could not enjoy peace or quiet, the swearing and language is so bad. The misdemeanants are nearly as bad in their discourse; but they do not use or understand the cant language, being chiefly poachers. The talk was generally in the bed-rooms, but sometimes in the ward. I have no wish to be a wardsman."

Reading County Gaol and House of Correction.
W. L., Prisoner.

"I belong to the convicted felons' class, No. 13. I have been here since 29th March, 1836. I have been three times in prison. I have been in the other felons' class, No. 10. No. 13 I think is the worst class: there was a row to-day in No. 13 about some bread stolen. They talk about what they did before they came here, and what they will do again when they get out: one says he means to go on the road again: and others that they will practise house-breaking again, and get money: some that they will try one chance more, and make a little money, and then leave off: they put each other in the way to do these things: some who don't know are greedy to learn, and take delight in it: the more they can learn the more they will: a man would learn more here than he could out of the prison; the conversation is scandalous. I hope I repent, and have received some good impressions. They talk in cant terms, and learn them from each other. It is like a school. They have words for every "mortal thing." A man thinks a good deal of himself, and others think highly of him if he is a clever thief, and knows the cant well. They jeer at religion, and make all manner of game of the clergyman. They use a good deal of blasphemy and swearing. They quarrel with each other. I never knew of fighting. Sometimes these conversations take place in the wards, and sometimes in the bed-rooms; mostly in the latter: they leave off, however, about eight or nine at night: they talk about the women whom they have been with and led astray. They can, and do talk from cell to cell, when there are prisoners in the cells. I have known prisoners mention particular places which they would rob on getting out of prison; and which way they meant to go about it; and name persons whom they would rob on the highway. I have no particular wish to be a wardsman."

R. H., Prisoner.

"I am in the convicted felons' class, No. 10, and have been here since September, 1836. The conversation of prisoners is very bad: they talk of their different crimes, and the best ways of committing crimes; how to break into a house, to rob on the highway, and to pick pockets; but they talk least about picking pockets. I have heard them say that the easiest mode was to rob a man on horseback; that it was easier to pull him off than to attack him on foot; and some, that they would not misuse a man; and others have said they would act as might become necessary. Some have a language of their own: I can't understand half of what they say. They think a man very clever if he knows the language. Some learn it. They practise it sometimes. Some can learn it better than others. A good many of them laugh at the parson, and most of them make a jeer of religion. Many learn to become worse. I have heard a good many make fun and boast of having deceived the doctor to get off the wheel: they pretend all sorts of complaints; that they have colds, or are giddy, or have loose bowels, &c."

G. S., Prisoner.

"I belong to class, No. 2, but am now in the infirmary. I have been here about five months, under a charge of having committed a rape. The greatest number in ward No. 2, at one time, whilst I was there, was seven. The prisoners used to boast of the profits of poaching. I have heard many say that they had made 1*l.* of a night. I could not understand their language: I don't mean the poachers, they used to talk amongst themselves: I mean the travellers; they kept aloof. There was a boy in the ward for horse-stealing, and he told me he had stolen three horses in one month; that it was a very profitable business. The travellers would talk to the boy, whose name was Jeffs, but they did not talk with me. Jeffs could understand them; but he could not learn from them more than he knew before."

F. B., Prisoner.

"I am in the convicted misdemeanants' ward, No. 11, and have been there about nine months. I have been here before. I have known a person committed to this prison as a misdemeanant who had previously been here for felony; his name was John Herbert; he had been here three times before. They are generally poachers in my ward. The discourse is very often bad. There is a good deal of swearing. One may learn the best ways to poach. We don't speak the cant language: "we use plain English." Our ward is very honest; we don't steal bread; but a man would become a better poacher: he would know how to set snares. Some say they will poach again; and some that they will turn over a new leaf. They brag about it. There is no desire with the men to be wardsmen."

C. C., Prisoner.

"I am in the convicted misdemeanants' ward, No. 11, and have been in custody since 18th January last, for poaching. I have been here once before. The prisoners talk together after they get to bed at night: they talk about the best methods of poaching; how to catch hares and pheasants, and so forth. I think a man might learn to become a good poacher in the prison, even if he knew nothing of it before. Some of the prisoners laugh at the parson, and say they don't want to hear any more of his noise, and that they don't like his bother. If a man were to try to be serious, they would keep running on, and swear, and sing, and make a noise to disturb and plague him. Few care about being wardsmen, and the prisoners don't care for, or fear the wardsman in our class. He has never reported one since I have been in it. He ought to do it sometimes. Generally the language is very bad. Some say they have never done anything else but poach, and never will. They call it a profitable business. I have heard one of our men say he has often made 15 shillings of the game which he had caught in the course of two or three hours in a single morning."

H. S., Prisoner.

"I am in ward, No. 12, where I have been about six weeks. I was committed under the Vagrant Act. The prisoners discourse most at night. Many are here as misdemeanants, who have committed felonies before. I have heard the prisoners tell how they committed robberies and broke into houses. A man of the name of Butler told me he had been in many different prisons; that he had been in prison at Devizes, and in Coldbath-fields; and he mentioned different tools which he used, and which were the best ways of breaking into houses. He spoke of a particular jemmy, or crooked bar in the form of an S, which he said was the handiest thing of any, and which he always used; and that he could make an entry with it almost into any place. Some used to say they never would starve in a land of plenty, and rather than do so would return to their old practices. There was a good deal of cant language amongst them, "a rubbishing stuff" which I could not understand; but which they taught each other, and were anxious to learn, and proud of teaching. Such goings on are very corrupting. A prison is a kind of school, "if a man is led that way." Since my time, there may have been about twelve altogether, from first to last, in my class, as misdemeanants; and I think half of them were felons before: one admitted to me that he was a housebreaker. I judge that half were felons from their having mentioned the different robberies they had committed: several of them had been in former prisons: there are two boys now in the class, one about 18, and the other a little more than 17; their names are Mc. Cormick and Adams. The prisoners are honourable to each other. There is no desire in our class to be wardsmen. I have no wish to be such."

G. S., Prisoner. "I am in the convicted felons' class, No. 10, and have been in custody about nine months. I was in class, No. 2, with the untried felons, about ten weeks. In class, No. 10, where I now am, there are sometimes 21 or 22 prisoners; and as many as eight sleep in one room. In class, No. 10, the felons talk what they have done out of prison, what offences they committed, &c. I have heard them talk about different instruments which they used in committing such offences. The prisoners in class, No. 10, are almost all "travellers:" I mean, they are men who perform crimes in different counties, and travel from county to county to avoid being found out. They have acknowledged that they attended fairs to watch men who they expected would receive money; and that they have waylaid them and robbed them. I have heard them say which is the best way of attacking a man on horseback. They boasted of these doings, and sometimes spoke in cant language, which I could not understand; but often they spoke in plain English. The other prisoners used to practise the cant, but found it difficult to learn: a man was considered clever who understood it. When I was in the untried class, No. 12, I have heard prisoners say that if they should be acquitted, they would not go far before they robbed a man; that they would not even spare a poor man if he had money, rather than go without food themselves. Such was the nature of their conversation almost always. They used to laugh at the parson and religion, and ridicule both him and it: they swore and spoke blasphemous language, particularly so in the trial yard. I never heard such shocking language. They stole from each other. They used to quarrel sometimes, and it was often about who was the best thief, highway robber, or housebreaker, and who knew most about these matters. They often argued until they became angry, and would then fight if they were not afraid of being found out, and locked up. Their discourse was bad about women, and they boasted of what they had done, and would do again when they got out of prison."

C. H., Prisoner. "I am now in ward, No. 6. There is no other prisoner with me. I have been in custody about 9 months for an assault. I was in the vagrants' ward 3 months: there were others with me there. All sorts of low and obscene language was used by the prisoners, many of whom were women of the worst description, and their conversation was as bad as it could be. I thought it a great misfortune to be mixed with such characters. I have heard the vagrants speak of getting an old woman in that ward to stand upon her head and make an indecent exposure of herself. They used to laugh about it. Hezia Goddard, a girl of weak intellects, used to be made by the vagrants to dance before them with her petticoats up: she told me so, and wished to exhibit before me in my ward where I now am. The prisoners talk most at night. They quarrel and fight dreadfully; their language is horrible. They ridicule what the chaplain says directly after he turns his back, but cry before him."

M. A., Prisoner. "I am in the felons' ward, No. 9. I have been in prison about 5 months. We have had all kinds of women in one ward. They use very bad language: they talk a good deal about the men; and what they did out of prison, and would do if the men were here. I don't like to mention it. It was as bad as it could be. The beasts of the field could not be more beastly. They quarrel amongst themselves. A woman was once made to turn her petticoats over her head, and they used to laugh at it. I did not see it, but heard of it. Their conversation is very injurious to many. They also talk about their thefts, and some would boast of them. They chiefly used to speak at night in bed."

A. C., Prisoner. "I am in the felons' ward, No. 9. I have been here about 5 months. I never heard the women in my ward talk about men, except their husbands: they are all most modest and properly behaved: I have never heard them use bad language: we cannot be better behaved than we are: we read the Bible together when we have time, and say our prayers. I should report any person who behaved badly: no person could learn any thing improper in prison that I know of. I was in Aylesbury prison: the prisoners used to read the Bible and pray together there also."

S. S., Prisoner. I am in the felons' ward, No. 7, under a charge of having stolen fowls. I have been here about 3 months. There were four other prisoners with me in the ward for about a week. We were very religious that week, but it did not last long. I am alone in the ward now. I don't know what the prisoners in other wards talk about. Many of the women who have left the prison were accustomed to use the lowest language, such as I am ashamed to mention. It is not fit for any one to hear: it was about their conduct with the men; and what they would do when they got out of prison. A great many of them discoursed after this manner. These conversations happened most when we were altogether in the wash-house. I am seriously inclined. I hope by God's blessing to return to a proper course of life. The prisoners ridicule religion."

M. N., Prisoner. "I am in the convicted felons' ward, No. 9, and have been in prison about 6 weeks. There have been five prisoners in that ward together since I have been in it. The discourse has been very bad. Ann Cockle is one of the worst. Cockle talks of the life she has led: she has been a prostitute in different places: she makes a brag of it: it would not be fit for me to tell you the particulars of what they say. I think they talk most on going to bed. One mentioned how she picked pockets, and what money she got of a night, sometimes £3 or £4 by robbing gentlemen; and that two or three girls used to share it. I have known prisoners listen attentively to these stories at first, but they were so constantly repeated that they became tiresome."

"I believe that all the evils of contamination prevail in this prison, notwithstanding the classification of the prisoners and the observance of silence. It may be owing, in a great measure, to the construction of the prison, and the mixing of the classes in the infirmary, wash-house, &c. But I believe it to be impossible, under any circumstances, to enforce silence so as to prevent contamination, which must be ruinous in its consequences, especially to young persons and children. The prisoners practise every kind of deception to get into the infirmaries. I have known 20 muster at a time under pretence of being sick, and I have sent back 18 to the wheel because there was nothing the matter with them. They do not complain on meat days until after dinner. They chalk their tongue, tatoo their arms and breasts, complain of old sores and hurts, and use every possible deception to obtain their ends. I cannot think this a favourable state of mind for the purposes of moral reformation. I have known of no single instance of a seriously or religiously disposed prisoner since I have been here; I have been here 40 years. A serious prisoner could not separate himself from the others; and he could not of course enjoy his reflections during his intercourse with them. This prison is better conducted now than it ever has been in my time. The governor is an excellent disciplinarian, and performs every part of his duty thoroughly and conscientiously. My assistant occasionally attends the prison in my stead. There was an order of sessions in 1829 or 1830, authorizing his attendance."

Rev. Rob. Appleton, Chaplain.

"I believe that the silent system, when most strictly enforced, can only produce an appearance of order, and operate as a check upon the intercourse of prisoners, without materially lessening the evils of contamination. The opportunities of communication here, owing to the construction, are complete throughout the prison; and I believe the contamination is very great. Prisoners on their discharge (whose communications I think deserved some credit), have admitted to me that they have heard worse language in this gaol than they could have conceived; that the tricks and wickedness which they had seen had opened their eyes; and that any person, by being here, might know how to proceed in the commission of various crimes: that poachers especially would become more expert. I know an instance of a female who had been committed to this prison for uttering base coin, who took down the names and address of many of the female prisoners for the purpose of forming a connexion on her discharge; and I know that she went to the family of one of the prisoners; no doubt for this purpose, viz., for forming a connexion for carrying on her traffic more successfully. I knew an instance, (and I believe there are many such,) of an apparently modest woman having made up her mind through her association in prison to lead a dissolute life. The females here are most abandoned: the mixing of the classes produces great demoralization, especially amongst the younger prisoners and children. From time to time I have known some respectable women. I have observed the progress of contamination on their minds. I have known some come in with feelings of contrition, go out hardened, and I believe contaminated. I have known an instance of a young girl of about 17 years of age, of rather weak intellects, having exposed her person in the wards: she was encouraged by the wanton women there to do it for their amusement: I know it because she was punished for it: it was a fact known and discussed in the prison. Another woman stood on her head and exhibited her person for the amusement of her companions. There are many prostitutes among them. I do not think the labour of the tread wheel a desirable mode of punishment. I know it to be most vexatious to prisoners. They think it useless and degrading. It affords great scope for deception, which is here practised in a variety of ways. It produces generally a state of mind unfavourable to religious impressions. I am a most decided advocate for separation; which I believe is the only mode of imprisonment calculated to prevent contamination, and to deter from the commission of crime; and I believe it to be the most favourable for producing reformation."

Mr. Edw. Hackett, Governor.

"It cannot properly be said that the separate system, in any mode, or to any extent, is enforced in this prison. The worst classes are kept separate at night so far as the prison will admit of it; but there are only 13 cells in the gaol, 12 in the house of correction, 2 of which are used as workshops, and 8 in the juvenile prison. The worst classes in the gaol and house of correction are placed in the cells merely for safe custody. The silent system is enforced with the convicted male classes only. The female prisoners of all classes, and the untried male prisoners of all classes, are permitted to associate and to converse freely, provided they are quiet and orderly. The silent system is enforced with the convicted male classes at all times, viz. during labour and meals, by day and night. It is not, however, observed in the infirmaries, where all classes mix. There is much intercourse kept up between the convicted male prisoners, although they are subject to the most rigorous part of the discipline; they converse on the wheel, at their meals, in their day-rooms and bed-rooms, from cell to cell, from room to room, and from gallery to gallery, by words, by signs, and in various other modes. They watch all opportunities for talking. The wardsmen cannot be trusted, especially when they have no privileges, either in the way of extra allowance of food, or exemption from labour, which is the case here. This fact is obvious, from the great number of punishments which I inflicted during the last year, not one of the offences for which those punishments were inflicted was reported by a wardsman. They are influenced by bribes and by threats, and are naturally prone to favour the prisoners, even at considerable risk to themselves. And therefore, even with respect to the silent system, taking all these facts into consideration, as well as the defective construction of the prison, which admits of so much intercourse between prisoners, and the few officers which I command, it can scarcely be said that it is enforced even with the convicted classes. It is wholly impossible to enforce silence. It is a system which produces but few, if any good results; it generates many evils; and in this prison, at least, it does not prevent contamination. No doubt the most free and complete communication takes places between all classes. We have not great opportunities of overhearing their conversation, there being no means of inspection and no night-watch. Nevertheless, my knowledge and experience of the conduct of the prisoners is such, that I feel perfectly assured they relate and boast of their exploits, and that they instruct each other in the different modes of committing crime. They become more hardened and corrupted by the associations of the prison; and there can be no question that young and inexperienced offenders not only become hardened, but acquire a sort of scientific knowledge of crime, and probably more practical expertness for the commission of it. These facts, in some measure at least, are manifested from the number of recommitments to this prison compared with the commitments for first offences. The recommitments are 25 per cent. upon the yearly average number of prisoners; and many of the recommitted prisoners have been here 4 or 5 times, and most of them twice or thrice before. We once had a prisoner named Edward Grenit, of Reading, of the age of 18 years, who had been recommitted to this prison and the borough bridewell at Reading 25 times; and had been frequently convicted, whipped, &c., and at length was transported from this gaol for robbery. It may be worth mentioning that, being only 18 years of age when transported, he must, during the greater number of times that he was confined in this prison, have been placed amongst the boys in the juvenile ward, where all males under the age of 17 are confined. I think the silent system extremely complicated and difficult. It requires great vigilance, and is most irksome to the officers. Here it is impossible to enforce it effectually; it would require a greater number of turnkeys: our prisoners are at all times distributed over never less, and sometimes even more, than 18 different parts of the prison, exclusively of those who may be in separate cells. I have only 6 officers, including the storekeeper and matron, who, besides their multifarious and distinctive duties set forth in my return [Appendix G.], are frequently otherwise employed, and have various personal wants of their own which must be attended to. And with regard to monitors or wardsmen, I object to any system which recognizes the appointment of prisoners to offices of trust or authority. Wherever wardsmen are employed it leads to favouritism and oppression, as well as to discontent amongst the prisoners, who will not readily submit to reproof from their equals.

The labour of the tread-wheel punishes the bodily system, but as a punishment I think it unjust, unequal, and injurious in every sense: it often produces great exhaustion of the physical strength, and in such cases I have known of prisoners becoming irritable, surly, and reckless. I believe it sometimes calls their worst feelings into exercise. It is felt much more severely by some men than by others. It affords much scope for deception. The prisoners here practise a variety of artifices, for the purpose of deceiving the surgeon, and obtaining admission to the infirmaries. I have known of a prisoner making wounds on his legs; of another, chalking his tongue; of another, having reduced his system by abstaining from food: one of our prisoners once reduced himself to a most emaciated state of body by starvation, although he had saved, and was actually in possession of five loaves of bread at the same time. They continually resort to the privy, under pretence of their bowels being relaxed; but there are seldom any complaints on meat days, except after dinner. They also practise various modes of deception with the turnkeys. I therefore think the labour of the tread-wheel is highly unfavourable to reformation: it hardens the offender: it renders him more cunning and skilful in the arts of deception: it prevents reflection; and it produces consequences which counteract the efforts of the clergyman. I have not known a single instance of a prisoner becoming seriously or religiously disposed; and the turnkeys, one of whom has been here 10, another 16, and another 24 years, all say they never knew of such an instance. If a prisoner were so disposed, he could not possibly separate himself from the other prisoners, so as to escape annoyance."

18th October, 1826.

An attempt to escape was made, on the night of the 17th, by R. F., T. E., W. C., W. A., W. B., T. D., T. M., W. O., J. B., and J. R. A committee of magistrates attended at the gaol this day, when, after a full investigation, F., O., and D., were ordered to be confined, in irons, in solitary cells, for 1 month each, with 1 pound and a half of bread per diem; and A., B., M., E., C., B., and R., to be confined in solitary cells for 3 days.

Geo. Ernest Eaststaff, Keeper.

9th September, 1827.

This evening, at ¼ before 6 o'clock, C. D., R. S., J. A., J. W., J. S., T. B., and W. B., sentence of death having been recorded against them, effected their escape from No. 2, day ward, by forcing the benches, and placing them upon the top of the privy, against the boundary wall, and succeeded in reaching the top, and by the aid of their broom and mop, towels and handkerchiefs, they descended into the garden, and from thence into the King's Meadow. The whole were captured. Ordered to be ironed and secured in solitary cells till their sentences arrived.

Thos. W. Eaststaff, Keeper.

16th February, 1828.

Ordered by Captain Gardiner, that the handkerchiefs be taken from the Assize prisoners, in consequence of their trying experiments of the means of escape, by getting upon each other's shoulders, and tying their handkerchiefs together.

Thos. W. Eaststaff, Keeper.

22nd March, 1828.

This day the following prisoners were confined in cells and ironed, for conspiring to escape, by cutting a hole through the floor of their sleeping-rooms, viz., T. D., W. O., J. R., T. H., T. W., J. C., W. A., J. B., B. M., W. S., and J. S. On the following day the visiting magistrates attended, and, after an investigation, ordered that D. and W. be kept in solitary cells 14 days, and that D. do receive 25 lashes with the cat-o'-nine-tails.

Thos. W. Eaststaff, Keeper.

12th May, 1829.

Ordered by Mr. Blagrave, that W. B., J. H. alias B., and J. H., for aiding and assisting W. O. and J. P. to make their escape, and evidently attempting to effect their own escape, do suffer corporal punishment in the following manner, i. e., B. to receive 30 lashes, H. 30 lashes, H. 25, with the cat-o'-nine-tails, and be kept in irons till further orders.

Thos. W. Eaststaff, Keeper.

21st March, 1832.

☞ This morning, J. D. alias G. H., sentence of death having been recorded against him, effected his escape from No. 6 cell, by making an aperture on the top of his cell, and by removing a sufficient number of tiles, to admit of his escape, and reaching the boundary wall between Nos. 2 and 3 wards, and descending by the aid of a rope, which he made from his bedding, into the garden.

Thos. W. Eaststaff, Keeper.

1st July, 1832.

This morning, during divine service, H. M., a deserter, effected his escape, by ascending from the top landing to the roof over the cells in the house of correction, and reaching the boundary wall, he then descended the same by means of a scaffold pole placed for erecting the new buildings.

Reading County Gaol and House of Correction.

Extract from Report of the Gaol Committee, appointed by order of Sessions, to inquire into various matters connected with the Gaol.

Separation and Discipline.

Your Committee are convinced, from the evidence placed before them, and the inquiries they have entered into, that much good would result by a better and more strict system of separation being introduced in the gaol and house of correction.

1st. With regard to prisoners before trial; for it is in those wards that the association of the innocent with the guilty is most to be feared. Prisoners who have been committed and tried for repeated offences, and who have been in this gaol for their second, fourth, and even twentieth time, are classified according to their last offence, and become the daily and sleeping companions of the eventually proved innocent prisoner, and who has never been in gaol before.

2nd. With regard to the house of correction where all have been pronounced guilty, yet it becomes a serious consideration whether crime is not greatly increased by the little attention that is here paid to the separation of prisoners. The old offenders, and those who have become hardened in crime, are frequently recommitted for minor offences, and thus become the daily and sleeping companions of those prisoners, who, under a better discipline, might be reclaimed.

As many as from 10 to 18 prisoners are here placed together for the night; and when not at labour, from 10 to 30 are associated in the day wards; and however strict the officers may be at other times in preserving silence and preventing communication, yet all the good that would result from a continued and efficient separation, here fails, and thus leads to the contamination of the comparatively innocent prisoner. It is here, as has been rightly observed and proved, that thieves, and all other offenders whose crimes are committed upon property, receive the most useful instruction, not only for perfecting themselves in their vocation, but of the objects on whom it may be most easily practised, and the comparatively short detention of a large majority gives them the means of immediately executing the lessons they have received. It is here also that the old and wily offender picks up his dupes, and obtains proselytes and companions for his future projects; and at this moment there are men in the gaol, who, from having been the dupes, have now become masters in the art of fraud and deception, especially in that serious evil, the practice of passing base coin, and which is perhaps scarcely or ever done by the principal.

It has been ascertained that vagrants come to gaol for the benefit of the pass; others have subjected themselves to imprisonment for the cure of disease, and have timed the period so well that during their incarceration they are necessarily exonerated from labour: but imprisonment even with labour is of little import to many offenders, under the present management, their only regret being deprivation of beer, spirits, and tobacco. The loss of liberty is of little moment, where they find so many congenial, and to them agreeable associates.

It has become a well known and widely spread fact, that a man having been sent to gaol could get no good there—at least he should derive no harm: the object is that he should be improved;—ought we not to strive to procure so desirable an end for his present and future welfare, as well as for the advantages of society?

Your committee therefore suggest, in order to obviate the evils of contamination as much as possible, as regards the prisoners before trial in the gaol, that, as far as practicable, they shall be made to sleep in separate cells, and that the cells in these wards be increased from time to time, and that this improvement be effected by the prisoners under the superintendence of the officers: and by order of the visiting justices this has been done in other counties and has been attended with little expense, and at the same time has proved exceedingly beneficial to the prisoners employed.

Your committee also recommend that the same improvements for separation by these means be commenced in the house of correction, and that the day wards opposite the treadmill and sleeping rooms over them be converted into separate sleeping cells, and that the present cooking-house, which can be removed to a building applicable to that purpose, and No. 13 ward, be divided in the same manner; which will at once give thirty-three separate sleeping cells: and it is proposed that the worst description of prisoners and all recommitted prisoners be kept to these cells, and that they be then kept separate from each other, and all other prisoners; that they be removed from thence to their work and back at meal times, and that their several rations be placed in their cells, which are to be cleaned and aired whilst they are at work; and that the tread-wheels be arranged with separate compartments, so that the prisoners during labour cannot see or converse with each other: and this is particularly required for carrying into practice the provision in the will of the late Mr. Shutes: at present the boys are necessarily associated with the other prisoners when at work on the treadmill.

That during labour there shall be strict silence and no conversation, and that a shed be erected by the prisoners in like manner as before suggested, from the materials of buildings now of no use, in lieu of the day wards, and as a workshop.

Dated, Reading Gaol,
October 21st, 1834.

Signed J. J. Bulkeley.

READING COUNTY GAOL AND HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

Duties of the Sub-Officers.

Samuel Ferry, Deputy Governor.

ATTENDS to all the duties of the governor of the establishment in his absence, and particularly to debtors; he is careful in visiting them and seeing that their wards and apartments are cleaned and in order; superintends occasionally the distribution to each debtor, of the regulated quantity of beer; admits and attends to visitors' friends and legal advisers; personally inspects and delivers articles of food, clothing, parcels, &c., at the debtors' gate; and attends the insolvent court with prisoners. He keeps the major part of the books, assists the governor in making out returns for the Secretary of State, the judges of assize, the quarter sessions, and the quarterly returns. All copies of warrants, calendars, &c., are drawn up by him, and being numerous, occupy much time; he is also much at the printer's, employed in preparing the several returns, &c., for the press, and in correcting them. He removes all convicts to the hulks; occasionally removes prisoners by habeas corpus, and has been employed in tracing out stolen property, and bringing it home to prisoners. Performs generally the duty of clerk in the chapel, collects the quarterly small bills, and rents for the cottage and gardens attached to the buildings, and assists generally in superintending and enforcing discipline in the establishment.

Wm. H. Gregory, Storekeeper.

Attends in the office during the unlocking and washing of prisoners in the morning; then goes to the bread-house, where he weighs out and delivers the bread for all the prisoners. Waits in the office until breakfast time, when he gets his own breakfast. Unlocks the debtors' gate and summons them to chapel; attends divine service; where, in case of the absence of the deputy governor, he performs the duty of clerk; he also keeps a list of absentees for the chaplain. After morning prayers, attends at the cook-house, and delivers the potatoes for dinner; goes to the butcher's and orders the meat; sees that it is proper in weight and quality; and at half-past eleven is present at the cook-house, where he cuts up and weighs out the proper allowance of meat to the prisoners, and sees it delivered to the respective wardsmen. During the day, when not employed on other duties, attends at the office and at the debtors' gate; takes in the bread from the baker, receives and weighs all coals, chips, &c., and delivers them when wanted. Receives and delivers out all clothing, stores, &c.; attends at the tread-mill twice a day, and takes the number of men on the wheel; keeps the mill, coal, bread, butcher's, and clothing return books, and attends at the tailor's and shoemaker's shops, and sees that the clothing is repaired. Fetches groceries from the grocers, and fish from the fishmongers, when allowed to sick prisoners, and waits upon them with arrow-root or any comfort that they may be indulged with, and which cannot be well prepared in the infirmary. Sometimes superintends the prisoners employed in the garden, and assists in making out returns and a list for the magistrates of all prisoners whose time expires in the ensuing week, specifying the number of days in custody, &c.; and attends at assizes and sessions when held at Reading.

John Paulin, Turnkey, No. 1. House of Correction Turnkey.

On the bell sounding in the morning, assists in unlocking the house of correction prisoners, and conducts them to their respective wards, sees them wash, comb and clean themselves for the day; and during this operation is careful in preserving strict silence; then attends them to the wheel, where he remains inspecting the north side of the mill during the hours of labour. When the labour is closed, conducts the prisoners to their wards, and delivers their knives to the wardsmen, sees them receive their breakfasts, locks them in, and then gets his own breakfast. Previous to going into chapel, unlocks, and collects the knives, then places himself in a situation to observe all prisoners on their way from the wards to the chapel door; conducts the unconvicted prisoners to chapel, and, when morning service is over, sees all reconducted in the same order. Attends again during labour hours on the north side of the wheel, and sends the wardsmen to clean the wards which are inspected in the course of the day. When dinner hour arrives, conducts prisoners to their wards, delivers their knives to the wardsmen, sees them receive their dinner, and, in case of no complaint, locks them in: (should there be a complaint of the quantity or quality of the food, they are brought to the cook-house to state their complaint, and see it weighed); then gets his own dinner. At the usual hour collects the knives, and conducts the prisoners to their afternoon labour, where he is stationed as before. At supper time, the same routine of duty is performed, and at bed time they are counted and locked in their cells for the night. In the course of the day, in addition to the above-mentioned duties, he conducts prisoners who wish to see the surgeon from wheel-houses Nos. 1 and 2, and attends during the visits of friends to prisoners of wards Nos. 10, 11, and 12. He sees clean linen, towels, &c., delivered at the regular periods. Dresses incoming prisoners, takes the description of their persons, and an account of their clothing and books the same; sees them cleaned, hair cut short, &c., and attends to the fumigation of prisoners' clothing. Inspects bedding, cells, and wards of Nos. 10, 11, and 12; attends occasionally at the back gates, and makes out on Friday the magistrates' returns, generally writing and keeping of books. Whips publicly.

Thomas Webb, Turnkey, No. 2. House of Correction Turnkey.

At the regulated hour rings the morning bell for turning out; assists in unlocking and conducting prisoners of the house of correction to their respective wards, where they wash, comb, &c.; during which silence is preserved; then leads them to the tread-mill, where, during labour, he is inspector on the south side, and distributes the bread to each ward and to the infirmary. At breakfast time conducts prisoners from the wheel to their wards, viz., Nos. 13, 14, 15, and 16; delivers their knives to the wardsmen, sees them get their breakfast and locked in, then gets his own breakfast; conducts the prisoners to and from the chapel, and places them on the wheel, where he again inspects on the south side. Looks to the cleaning of the wards under his charge by the wardsmen, and at dinner time conducts the prisoners to their wards, delivers their knives, and sees them get their dinners; on dinner days sees that no complaint is made, then gets his own dinner. After dinner, at the usual hour, reconducts the prisoners to the wheel, watches them at the usual station, during labour, and at supper time the same duty is performed as at breakfast and dinner, after which they are counted in, and locked up in their respective cells for the night. During the day also, attends the surgeon on his visits to the sick in the infirmary, and conducts, and reconducts, prisoners who wish to see the surgeon. Attends during visits from friends to prisoners in his wards, and is careful in seeing to the cleaning of the wards 13, 14, 15, and 16, during the day, and to the state of the locks, bolts, &c.; distributes the clean linen to his prisoners once a week, and towels twice; sees that they are shaved and their hair close cut; he attends on prisoners at the crank pump and sometimes at the back gate; attends to the management of the infirmary, fetches medicines from the surgeon's residence, delivers the same to the nurse with proper directions, locks the infirmary, and, in case of dangerous illness, reports state of patient to governor at ten o'clock at night. Attends to the collection of dirty linen, bedding, &c., for washing; conveys it to the house of correction for the purpose of being dried, and re-conveys it to the matron. Superintends the removal of ashes, dust, &c.; attends on all prisoners in cells on the west side of the house of correction, and particularly to the anointing and washing of prisoners affected with itch; attends to the cleaning of the tank on the top of the new building, and to the lighting and cleaning of the lamp in house of correction, and almost daily to the conduct of misdemeanants whilst walking round the circle opposite the wheel-house. Whips privately.

James Hewitt, Gaol Turnkey, No. 3.

At the regulated hour opens the doors of the establishment, and prepares the office for the reception of the governor and deputy governor. Discharges the prisoners for trial from their cells, and brings them to the wards, where they are made to wash, comb, and make themselves cleanly for the day. Examines the vacated cells, and looks to the locks and bolts. Winds up and regulates the clock. Attends until breakfast to the front gate, and delivers bread to trial prisoners; afterwards sees them get their breakfasts, and gets his own. Rings the bell for chapel, attends to the interior of the chapel, whilst the prisoners are coming in and going out. Sees that during the day there is a proper supply of mops, brooms, pails, &c.; and particular attention is directed to the cleanliness and arrangement of wards, cells, and other parts of the gaol. Attends upon the chaplain during his visits to prisoners, and to the surgeon when he sees the sick; and does anything that may be wanted in the course of the day, such as carrying letters to the post, going of errands, &c. Attends to the weekly delivery of linen to the prisoners under his charge, and to their shaving and hair-cutting twice a week. Conducts prisoners to the pump. Serves out dinner and sees there is no complaint, then gets his own dinner. Attends occasionally to the receipt of corn at the back gate, on particular occasions attends at the tread-mill; always on Friday. Attends to the filling of prisoners' beds with fresh straw, and pays particular attention to the water supply in the front tank and to its cleaning. Is present at the interviews between trial prisoners and their friends. Sees the suppers served out, rings the bell for bed time. Locks up the prisoners for the night in cells, and examines the wards they have quitted, and certifies whether they have received any damage during the day. Attends in front, in turn, until ten o'clock at night, when all is locked up, seen safe, and all the keys deposited with the governor.

Ann Webb, Matron.

At bell ringing in the morning for turn out, sees that all the female prisoners rise, dress, and wash themselves, making themselves as cleanly as possible for the day. After which they proceed to wash linen, &c., or any other work appointed for them until breakfast time, when the food being brought from the cook-house to the matron, she serves it to them in their respective wards, and in case of complaint, if just, sees it rectified. When the bell rings for chapel, she marches them in order to their seats, prior to the admission of the male prisoners. During divine service she is seated in a gallery which commands a view of them through a half transparent blind which covers their seats, and is enabled to notice if they converse together or commit any other irregularity. After church, when the men have retired, they are marched back in the same order as they entered, every precaution being taken so as to render it impossible that they should either see or be seen by the males. They then proceed to their daily work of washing, mending, or whatever it may be, which they carry on until twelve, the dinner-time, when the dinner is brought on dinner-days and served out at the usual hour: they work until supper-time, which they get, and are locked up, in their dormitories at the same time as the men. The matron is careful in inspecting daily the wards, the bolts, locks, &c., to see that they have sustained no damage. Twice a week towels are served out to them, and once chemise, stockings, caps, and handkerchiefs. The bedding is carefully looked after, and is emptied and re-filled when necessary. In case of any complaint of food, the matron goes herself to the cook-house to see it weighed, and if that does not satisfy, bears the complaint to the governor. In addition, there are sometimes female debtors, who have a ward appropriated to themselves; they go to church with the matron, sit in the same seat in the gallery, and are otherwise governed by the same regulations as the male debtors.

County House of Correction, Abingdon.

Construction.

Abingdon County House of Correction.

This prison is situate on a small plot of ground, in the parish of St. Helen, in the town of Abingdon, inclosed by a boundary wall 20 feet high. It was completed in 1812. The principal building is a remarkably handsome structure, of a sexagonal form, with three short adiating wings. The sessions house, governor's apartments, chapel, infirmaries, and storerooms, occupy the centre, which consists of 4 stories; and the wings, which are of 3 stories, are appropriated to the prisoners. These contain 3 day-rooms and 42 cells: 1 day-room and 10 cells for females; and 2 day-rooms and 32 cells for males. The detached buildings consist of a tread-wheel house, crank-wheel house, mill-house (the only approach to the latter being from without the boundary wall), small dressing room (occasionally used as a receiving room), wash-house, cook-house, bakehouse, &c. The cells are so constructed that prisoners can freely converse from cell to cell in the same gallery or floor.

There are 4 classes. Females of every description constitute one class, and occupy one wing of the prison. In the day-room of this class are associated felons and misdemeanants—the convicted and the untried—those who possess an extensive knowledge of crime, and experience in the practice of it, and others who are uninitiated in its mysteries—the former skilful to impart—the latter apt at receiving instruction; with abandoned prostitutes and children of tender years.

Untried male felons and misdemeanants constitute another class, and occupy another wing. These are mixed together in one common day-room, and sleep in cells on the same floor. They have separate day-rooms, but use only one between them during winter. With these, silence is not enforced; and if it were, the construction is such, that it would not be possible, without a very expensive establishment of officers, to prevent or limit their intercourse.

Convicted male felons and misdemeanants, nominally, are divided into two classes, but, in reality, they constitute but one. These alone are governed by the silent system, and occupy the remaining wing; both descriptions of offenders frequently sleeping in cells in the same floor. In short, whenever the prison is crowded, the legal classification becomes impracticable, and delinquents of every class and character are intermixed in one ward, and in the same gallery; so that it often happens that there is no other classification than a separation of the sexes. These classes are governed by the silent system, and work on the tread-wheel. Whilst associated at their labour, they are often left by themselves for three hours together, almost daily, and during short intervals of that time are in perfect idleness; the heavy duties of the turnkeys requiring a considerable portion of their time and attention in other parts of the prison, and there being no proper machinery for regulating the velocity of the wheels, which occasionally is so unequal, that it becomes necessary to stop them altogether. But these prisoners have abundant opportunities for conversation in other parts of the prison, and great intercourse takes place between them. In going to and from their wards and work, they pass by the wash-house, bakehouse, and coal-yard, and through the drying yard; to which places the female prisoners frequently resort. Thus opportunities are presented for communication even between the sexes.

Corn is ground at the mill for customers; the chief turnkey performing the duties of miller, assisted by one, and, occasionally, by two prisoners, who are taken to the outside of the prison 10 or 15 times daily, in order to get to the mill-house.

The staircase of the females' ward is in the common passage, leading to every part of the interior of the prison; so that, in cleaning their cells and passages, and in going to and from the chapel, these prisoners are continually brought in contact with the male officers and others who may have business with the governor.

Dimensions.

The following are the dimensions of the principal portions of the prison occupied by the prisoners:—

| Description. | No. | Length. | | Breadth. | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | feet. | inches. | feet. | inches. |
| Day-room | 1 | 26 | 9 | 16 | 6 |
| ditto | 1 | 16 | 6 | 7 | 9 |
| ditto | 1 | 17 | 6 | 16 | 9 |
| Cells | 16 | 10 | 0 | 8 | 0 |
| ditto | 16 | 8 | 9 | 8 | 8 |
| ditto | 8 | 8 | 3 | 7 | 6 |
| ditto | 2 | 16 | 6 | 8 | 0 |
| Tread wheel house | 1 | 35 | 6 | 15 | 9 |
| Crank-wheel house | 1 | 7 | 0 | 5 | 9 |
| Washhouse and laundry | 1 | 12 | 0 | 7 | 6 |
| Infirmaries | 2 | 38 | 6 | 20 | 0 |
| School-room | 1 | 31 | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Airing yards | 2 | 68 | 0 | 60 | 0 |
| ditto | 1 | 73 | 0 | 67 | 0 |
| ditto | 1 | 39 | 0 | 12 | 6 |

The intermixture of the classes in the manner described, shows that the prison is not sufficiently capacious for its inmates, which has amounted to 70 persons at one time; whereas there are only 42 cells. There have been twenty male prisoners for trial; and there are only eight cells for the untried: there have been 40 convicted male prisoners; whereas there are but 24 cells for those classes: there are but 10 cells for all classes of females; and there are no refractory cells. It seems questionable whether any considerable enlargement could be made without an almost complete re-construction.

Repairs.
Security.
Supervision and Inspection.

The prison is a substantial stone building, in an excellent state of repair.

It is not altogether secure against escapes. Several have been attempted, and some few successfully; see Appendix A. There are no fire-engines, but there are four in the town.

There is no supervision over any part of the prison at night; and the classes who work on the wheels are the only prisoners who are attended by an officer by day, and then only occasionally. There are badly contrived inspecting holes into two of the day-rooms; and there are no other means of inspection in any part of the prison.

Some of the cells are spacious, but, generally speaking, we apprehend that the prison is badly adapted for employment; there is no treadwheel for females. It does not admit of an effectual separation of the prisoners.

Adaptation for Employment and Separation. Dryness, Ventilation, Drainage.

The prison is dry, well ventilated, and well drained. There is no contrivance for warming the cells; but good coal fires are kept up in the day-rooms.

System—Discipline.

Classification.

The rules of the prison require the following classification to be observed; but it has been shown that, from unavoidable circumstances, the infringement of those rules is a matter of frequent occurrence; and that all the male classes, as well as the female classes, are occasionally intermixed: see "Construction:" and "Prisoners in Custody," Appendix B; where classes and 3 are described as one class.

Class No. 1, Untried male felons and misdemeanants.
No. 2, Convicted male felons. } one class.
No. 3, Convicted male misdemeanants. }
No. 4, Untried and convicted females of all classes.

Association.

It is scarcely necessary to mention, after what has been said, (see "Construction,") that the 1st and 4th classes associate in their respective day-rooms, being generally left by themselves, or in charge only of a wardsman, and wardswoman, and being under no prohibition upon conversation. The wardsman informed us that he had been appointed to his office four months, but had not made a single report. When these classes are not over crowded, they sleep in cells separately.

Silent System, with Separation.

The Silent System, with separation, is said to be that which is enforced with the convicted male classes, except that they work in association. They sleep and take their meals in separate cells; but, whenever they exceed 24 in number, three or more occupy one cell. Whether their numbers will admit of their sleeping separately or not, they possess scarcely less opportunities of intercourse, on all occasions, both by day and night, than the other classes.

Hard Labour.

Male prisoners sentenced to hard labour work on the tread-wheels: see "Description of the wheels, hours of employment, &c., Appendix, Return 2, No. 19. Corn is ground for customers; but so little custom can be obtained, that the work is done for half the ordinary price. The profits (if any) go to the county fund. Female prisoners are employed in the wash-house.

Labour, not severe.

Male prisoners sentenced to labour, not severe, are occupied in grinding corn, painting, whitewashing, and cleansing the prison, pumping, &c.; and female prisoners, in needle work, mending the prison clothing, and cleaning their cells and passages. Labour of every kind is regarded as a punishment.

Of the untried prisoners, the males are occasionally employed in whitewashing and gardening, and females at needle-work.

Four prisoners are engaged in the following offices: 1 as wardsman of class No. 1; 1 as wardsman of class No. 4; 1 as wardsman (designated a looker-over), of classes Nos. 2 and 3, being employed during the hours of labour and in the absence of the turnkeys only; and 1 as cook. None of these receive remuneration; but the looker-over is exempted from labour whilst in charge of his classes.

Visitors.

The visiting hours are from 12 to 2. On producing a magistrate's order, visitors may be admitted to the convicted at the expiration of the first six months of their imprisonment, and to the untried at any time; an officer, in all cases, being present. They are permitted to remain only a quarter of an hour. They are not searched, but are admonished not to give anything to the prisoners. They are not admitted on Sundays.

Money.

No prisoners are allowed the possession of money; but the governor will receive it for them, and account for it on their discharge. It is rarely introduced.

Letters.

Convicted prisoners are not allowed to receive letters during the first six months of their imprisonment; which seems to be the only restriction.

Books.

No books are allowed unless approved by the chaplain.

Food.

There are seldom any untried prisoners who support themselves; but, when they do, they are not allowed wine, beer, or any spirituous or fermented liquors. Their food is brought to, and examined by, the turnkey, at the lodge gate, and by him delivered to the prisoners.

Newspapers, Tobacco, Smoking.

Newspapers and tobacco are inadmissible to all classes; but tobacco is frequently attempted to be brought in by prisoners; and sometimes it is thrown over the walls to them, in which way, we think, they might often obtain it without much chance of discovery. They are thoroughly searched on their admission; and the governor is not aware of any instance of their having obtained it clandestinely afterwards.

Gaming.

The untried male prisoners have occasionally been found playing, with small stones or pebbles, at a simple game called shepherd's puzzle. No other instance has been known.

Religious and Moral Instruction.

Chaplain.

The chaplain reads prayers, selected from the liturgy, daily. On Sundays he performs full service in the morning, and reads prayers and delivers a lecture in the afternoon; he also attends the male prisoners in their school. He performs the usual services on Christmas Days and Good Fridays. Once a week he visits the female class and the untried male class; but he does not see the prisoners separately, except they are sick. He does not visit the convicted male classes who work on the wheels, nor prisoners under punishment, unless at their own request, which is seldom (if ever) made. He inspects the cells and wards once a week. His duties, on Sundays, occupy 4½ hours, on other days 20 minutes. He keeps a journal, but no character book. The prisoners are respectful to him, but not particularly desirous of his visits. He states that both the officers and prisoners regularly attend divine service, unless prevented by necessary duties or sickness; and that the latter are orderly and attentive. The women are screened from view of the men. The chaplain is master of a grammar-school at Abingdon, and reads prayers daily, (Sundays excepted), in the parish church of St. Nicholas in that town. The wards are never cleaned on Sundays.

Abingdon County House of Correction.

Books.

Each ward is furnished with several bibles and religious tracts. Each prisoner who can read is supplied with a testament, prayer-book, and religious tracts; and if his character has been good, he is presented with a testament or prayer-book on his discharge. All books used by prisoners are subject to the chaplain's approval.

School.

On Sundays, all classes of male prisoners are assembled in the school-room, where they receive instruction in reading, and are catechised: they are taught by the turnkeys, and superintended by the clergyman; some of the prisoners assisting. The female prisoners assemble for the like purpose in the governor's kitchen, where they are instructed by the governor and the matron, his wife. The only books which are read are the bible, testament, prayer-book, and religious tracts.

General Improvement.

The chaplain states that the prisoners are generally agricultural labourers, and are very ignorant; but in a moral sense he hopes they improve: he says it is difficult to judge—that he has no other means of forming an opinion, than from their orderly demeanour at chapel and in school; and he admits that he knows of no particularly satisfactory instance of amendment. The governor says they are generally very ignorant; that the best informed are the least demoralized; that few (if any) improve, either under the discipline, or from the religious instruction they receive; and that the greater number become more depraved by the associations in prison.

Health.

Surgeon, Examining, Cleansing, Fumigating.

There is no receiving room; and prisoners are generally taken at once to their cells before they have been seen by the surgeon, their persons (if that process has been deemed necessary) having been first cleansed. Their clothes are also fumigated with chloride of lime, or baked, and sometimes burned. In consequence of being assigned to their cells before the surgeon has examined them, they have been known to introduce animalculæ and the itch into their wards. The surgeon attends the prison daily, and oftener if required; he visits prisoners under punishment, and occasionally inspects those who are well: he keeps a journal, and gives written orders for all extra allowance to the sick. He is in private practice.

Infirmaries, prevalent Diseases.

Male prisoners in the infirmary are under charge of a nurse, who is a prisoner. All classes are intermixed there. The females, when sick, generally remain in their cells. The most prevalent complaints are colds and coughs. The building and its locality are considered healthy. The average number of days during which each invalid remained on the sick list, last year, was about 9; and the proportion of sick to the whole number of prisoners admitted, about 14 per cent.

Daily Washing of Prisoners.

There appears to be a sufficient supply of towels, soap, and combs. Classes 1 and 4 wash in their day-rooms; and classes 2 and 3, as they first come off the wheel in succession for relief, after commencing work. The prisoners are cleanly.

Cleansing the Prison.

The walls internally, and the ceilings throughout, are washed with lime once, or oftener, every year; the passages and floors are not washed with water, but are swept and dry-rubbed with stone, once a day, at least.

Washing Linen.

The prison linen and bedding are washed by the convicted female classes sentenced to hard labour.

Air and Exercise.

Untried male prisoners, when unemployed, may take exercise for 2 hours, daily, in their airing-yard: prisoners at the wheel are marched round a circle in their yards, twice or thrice, daily, for a few minutes each time: female prisoners have unrestricted access to their airing-yard.

Diet—Clothing—Bedding.

Diet.

See Dietary, Appendix C, No. 18. The surgeon considers the diet unobjectionable, both in quantity and quality. The convicted receive a more plentiful supply than the untried, and adults than children. The untried may support themselves. See "Discipline," "Food." Wardsmen, &c. receive no extra allowance. The total cost of diet for the last year was 198*l.* 10*s.* 2½*d.*, or 5*l.* 7*s.* 6½*d.* per head.

Clothing.

See Clothing table, Appendix C, No. 16. Male prisoners, if untried, or convicted of misdemeanours only, wear plain yellow cloth dresses: convicted male felons wear party-coloured dresses; and females of all classes, plain linsey woolsey. The supply seems sufficient. The materials are purchased and manufactured out of the prison, by contract; but the manufacturer employs the prisoners in making up the greater part of them; for which a proper abatement is made from the price. The total cost for the last year was 50*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.*, or 1*l.* 7*s.* 0¾*d.* per head.

Bedding.

See Bedding table, Appendix C, No. 16. All prisoners are supplied with two blankets, and one straw mattress each; and convicted males, and all classes of females, with one rug: and untried males, with two rugs each in addition. The bedding is washed as often as is thought necessary, and shaken and aired frequently; in winter, in the cells; in summer in the yards. It did not look particularly clean: this the keeper stated was owing to prisoners not having worn night-caps, but which now they do. The dimensions of the cells will admit only of one common sized bedstead; in which, whenever the classes are crowded, one prisoner sleeps, and two others sleep on the floor under the same bedding. The total cost of bedding for the last year was 8*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*, or 4*s.* 5½*d.* per head.

Prison Offences and Punishments.

Offences.

The usual prison offences are stated to be, "breaches of prison discipline, stealing bread and attempts at escape." The term "breaches of prison discipline" includes various offences, and, amongst others, that of conversation in the classes governed by the silent system.

Punishments.

The offenders are usually punished by confinement in their own cells, (there being no refractory cells,) on bread and water, or on a diminished allowance of food. Whilst under punishment, they are taken from confinement to be washed and shaved, and to attend chapel, and that their cells may be cleaned; a practice which most materially alleviates the punishment. Irons are used only when escapes have been attempted. Whipping is seldom had recourse to; the ordinary number of lashes is two dozen, inflicted in presence of the governor, turnkeys, and male prisoners. The governor states that the punishments are not sufficient to enforce the discipline; that the most demoralizing intercourse takes place between the prisoners, even those with whom silence is enforced; and that the conversation of the women is most obscene. See "Punishments," Appendix C, No. 15.

Officers.

The officers are the governor, chaplain, surgeon, matron, and two male turnkeys; of whom the chaplain, surgeon, and one turnkey, sleep out of the prison: See "Officers' Salaries, Fees,"&c., Appendix C, No. 21. They all appear to be highly respectable, according to their respective stations; and the governor, especially, seems to be an intelligent and zealous officer. As to the duties of chaplain and surgeon, see "Religious and Moral Instruction," "Health,"&c. The regulations of the Gaol Act, which have not been particularly referred to, appear to have been complied with. The keeper and all the turnkeys state, and we are of the same opinion, that twelve regular officers would be required to enforce the silent system in this prison.

Wardsmen.

Prisoners are employed as wardsmen, &c.: See "Labour, not severe;" but it is stated that no reliance is to be placed in them. They receive no extra allowance.

Miscellaneous.

Accounts, Journals, &c.

The books of account, journals, &c. which are used in the prison, are—quarterly account book, payment of vouchers, prisoners' earnings, tread-mill earnings, charity fund, oakum account, borough quarterly account, day book, prisoners committed and discharged, commitment and description book, prison clothing ditto, prisoners' clothing ditto, annual and other returns ditto, furniture ditto, keeper's journal, keeper's punishment ditto, visiting justices' ditto, chaplain's ditto, surgeon's ditto, visitor's ditto.

Recommitments.

The number of persons in custody during the last year was 313; of whom 15 were recommitted prisoners. The governor says that the recommitments have since increased; that he does not think the discipline of the prison has produced any deterring influence on the criminal population of the prison, or of the neighbourhood; but that he can form no very positive opinion on that point.

Passes.

Passes are never granted. On the discharge of prisoners, a trifling sum is paid them; the amount depending on their character, and the distance which they have to travel to their homes.

Pardons.

No prisoners during the last year have been recommended for pardon.

Prisoners committed under the Revenue Laws.

Prisoners committed under the revenue laws receive no extra allowance.

Insane Prisoners.

There are no insane prisoners.

Expenses of the Prison.

See "Total Expenses of prison during the year ending Michaelmas, 1836," Appendix C, Nos. 22 and 23.

Evidence.

The evidence of the chaplain and surgeon is given under the heads, "Religious and Moral Instruction," and "Health."

Every part of this Report may be considered as evidence; the whole of the notes from which it has been prepared having been read over to the governor in the presence of the matron and turnkeys, and corrected from their observations.

Mr. Samuel Walker, Governor.

The prisoners communicate throughout the prison, and know what passes in it; and no doubt they corrupt each other. A robbery was once planned here, and afterwards executed. The convicted male classes, in going from their cells to their work, are often thronged in the passages in forming into file, and then they talk: and, when formed into file and marching to and fro, the whole of them cannot be seen by the officers, the passages being winding; and then they occasionally talk. They can, and do converse on the wheels, by words and by signs; they can do it as much as they like in the infirmaries; and at night in their cells, without being heard, provided they are not excessively noisy. Male prisoners of every class are often intermixed and sleep in the same gallery. Untried male prisoners and females of all classes converse as much as they choose in their respective day-rooms, so long as they refrain from improper language, and are not noisy. It is, indeed, the rule that no person shall talk; but I cannot say that it is enforced, except with the convicted male classes: if we were to enforce it rigidly with the other prisoners, it would lead to continual punishments. The convicted male classes watch all opportunities for conversing: the other classes have sufficient opportunities, and need not watch for them. The language of the women is frequently most obscene. Young prisoners and first offenders must in every way become demoralized by it, especially when we have a very bad set. Those who work on the wheel are left by themselves for several hours in the course of the day, and sometimes in idleness, without an officer to overlook them; but even when the officer is present, communication may and often does take place between them, in such a manner, that it is impossible to detect it. Monitors cannot be depended upon; they are partial, fearing some prisoners and favouring others. They are sometimes threatened by the prisoners; even the turnkeys themselves have been threatened by them. There is great difficulty in getting good wardsmen: they must be rewarded by extra food, or by being exempted from labour; and even then, I do not think they are to be trusted. We do not allow these advantages: we prefer doing the work ourselves so far as we can, in order to avoid them as much as possible. The present wardsman of class No. 1, has been in office four months, and has not made a single report.

The punishments are not sufficient to enforce silence and to enable us to maintain a strict discipline; and the officers are too few. In winter, when the prison is crowded, it would require twelve male and female turnkeys at least to perform the duties properly. The multifarious demands upon the turnkeys' time withdraw them much from the prisoners. They have to assign prisoners to their different classes, to examine the cells, to attend to the outer gate, to attend the nurse who is a prisoner, backward and forward with provisions and medicines to the sick in the infirmaries; to arrange the bedding, and see that it is properly made, aired, shaken, washed, &c.; to dress and undress prisoners received and discharged; to attend to their own personal wants; to attend the surgeon and chaplain daily; to attend the mill-house and customers there, and where one is employed at least two hours daily; to attend the magistrates whenever they visit the prison, or re-examine the prisoners; to attend the magistrates of the division who hold their sessions here once every fortnight, to attend the quarter-sessions twice a year, the assizes once a year, and our own sessions at Abingdon with the borough prisoners: both are absent together at the same time at breakfast and dinner; and the average time during which each is withdrawn daily from the prisoners, is about three hours and a quarter; and then of course the latter are under no supervision. A great number of officers are absolutely required. The silent system requires constant watching, and is irksome and painful. Two prisoners cannot be trusted together without being continually watched. If both my turnkeys should be sick at the same time, I could not possibly enforce it to any extent whatever. I have experienced inconvenience in this way: the chief turnkey was ill some time ago, and I was obliged to do part of his duties and to neglect my own. In some measure the silent system may prevent contamination, but I think not much.

The labour of the tread-wheel greatly reduces the physical strength of the prisoners after four or six months' continued practice. The surgeon often relieves them for a few days; but they practise a variety of deceptions to get off their work; there are seldom complaints on meat days, except after dinner. The wheel works by the hour; it is most irregular; it stops two or three times a day, and then of course the men are idle, and we have no mode of recording its revolutions. The punishment is unequal, and more severely felt by some prisoners than others; but no distinction is made as to the amount of labour required, unless the surgeon interposes when he finds a man sinking, and sees the absolute necessity of relieving him.

The bulk of our prisoners are agricultural labourers, and are very ignorant. The best informed are the least depraved. Few improve by the imprisonment: the greater number become more corrupt; although, I think, less so than when they associated more freely. They are not much better for the religious instruction they receive; but I have no doubt they would improve if a better system were introduced, and they could be visited by the clergyman separately in their cells.

ABINGDON COUNTY HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

Governor's Return, showing the Number of Escapes made and attempted.*

July 5, 1832.

J. S., a prisoner for the assizes, on a charge of pig-stealing, made an attempt to escape from his cell, (but did not succeed,) by making a hole under the sill of the window, during the night, which was discovered the next day; I ordered him to be ironed, until the visiting magistrates had seen him, who ordered him to be confined in a solitary cell for his offence for three days.

S. WALKER, Keeper.

June 18, 1835.

J. T., a prisoner for trial at the next assizes, on a charge of horse-stealing, attempted to make his escape from the airing yard of No. 1 ward, by getting on the top of the railing†, fronting the grand-jury room window, from thence to the top of the partition wall, adjoining the boundary wall, merely by driving a bit of iron in the wall, used as the poker for No. 1 ward, and the help of the broom belonging to the same. I had been watching him nearly all day, and part of the preceding night, from my bed-room window, up to four o'clock P.M. when it occurred. I now ordered him to be ironed and close confined, and informed one of the visiting justices of what had happened, who ordered him to be continued in irons until the 20th, when the visiting justices examined into the circumstances, and ordered him to be continued in his cell until the assizes. S. WALKER, Keeper.

May 9, 1836.

R. W., a prisoner for trial at the next assizes, on charge of horse-stealing, having made an attempt to pull a hole through the wall, and having threatened to get away the first opportunity, I have directed him to be kept alone in No. 2 ward for the present. S. WALKER, Keeper.

May 17, 1836.

The prisoner W. has again been damaging the cell he sleeps in with a view to escape, having loosened the bedstead and the stones carrying the same, which were leaded down; he proceeded then to break away part of the frame of the window: reported him to one of the visiting justices, who has ordered every necessary restraint to be put on him. S. WALKER, Keeper.

June 12, 1836.

The prisoner W.‡ has made another attempt to escape from another cell, in consequence of which I have reported the same to the Rev. N. Dodson, visiting justice, who has directed sufficient personal restraint to be applied to prevent the possibility of escape, or further damage to the prison; in pursuance of which order he has been ironed every night, but to no purpose, as he gets off both screw irons or handcuffs; this was continued eight days, but finding it of no avail, I have since directed two convicted prisoners to sleep with him in his cell. S. WALKER, Keeper.

July 8, 1836.

W. P., a prisoner under examination for felony, does considerable damage to the wall of his cell in attempting to escape; he is put in irons and reported to the visiting justices, who direct him to be continued therein so long as he remains under examination; at the expiration of his imprisonment, I am directed by the visiting justices to proceed against him for the damage so done.

S. WALKER, Keeper.

* There have been only five escapes in twenty-five years. The last was in 1824, eight years before my appointment.

† The iron railing here spoken of has since been taken away, and the grand-jury room window secured with a part of the iron railing in the frame.

‡ The prisoner W. proved to be a man who had escaped from Dorchester county gaol 18 months since, and had never from that time been heard of. His name is E S. B.—S. W.

AYLESBURY COUNTY GAOL AND HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

1. Site, Construction, &c.

Description.
Inspection.
Day Rooms.
Sleeping Cells, &c.
Soil, &c.

This is the common gaol and house of correction for the county of Buckingham, and is under the jurisdiction of the sheriff and visiting justices of that county. It occupies a long, narrow, piece of land, running backwards from behind the county-hall in the town of Aylesbury, in which are held the assizes and sessions. A part of the building called the Old Gaol has been built upwards of 100 years; the bridewell, or house of correction, above 50 years; and the part called the New Gaol about 14 years; but alterations and repairs have been making, from time to time, in all parts of the building, for the last thirty years: the construction, consequently, has not been upon any uniform plan, and is extremely irregular and inconvenient. There are no means of private inspection, except so far as it is afforded by gratings in the doors, and that the keeper's house has a window looking into the Old Gaol. The passage, near the entrance, leading down to the several wards, is overlooked by two windows of the office of the clerk of the peace in the county-hall, and by two windows of the White Hart inn, which adjoins the prison, and the garden of which is separated from it by a boundary wall of the height of 15 feet. The Old Gaol yard is also overlooked by the windows of the judges' apartments and other rooms in the county-hall. Although these circumstances, and the construction of the building, rather tend to insecurity, it is stated that only one prisoner has escaped during the last fifteen years: it appears that he got over the boundary wall by means of a wall connecting it with the chapel, which has been since sunk, and spikes placed on it. The prison is in a fair state of repair, and the new part of it is fire-proof, but not the Old Gaol. It contains 20 day-rooms, 2 work-rooms, 12 airing-yards, keeper's house and office, turnkey's lodge, chapel, infirmary, and offices, and will accommodate 133 in separate sleeping-cells, or apartments, and from 200 to 250 with several sleeping together. The greatest number of prisoners at any one time in the last three years was 220. The cells in the Old Gaol, including five condemned cells, are of the dimensions of seven feet by five; those in the ward called the Datchet (used chiefly for misdemeanants and persons detained for bail) eight feet by seven; in the New Gaol there is a large room fitted with separate sleeping berths, divided by a thin partition, and with iron gratings in front, of the dimensions of seven feet by three; and the rest of the sleeping-rooms (with the exception of a few in which the prisoners sleep without any divisions) are also fitted with similar sleeping berths, of the dimensions of about six feet by three, varying from 6 to 13 in a room, according to the size of the room. The prisoners are locked into these berths or sleeping-lobbies at night; but of course there is nothing whatever in their construction to prevent talking, or other communication from berth to berth. There are dark cells for the purpose of punishment, which are insufficiently ventilated, and all the separate cells are close. The sleeping apartments are complained of as being cold in winter, and the condemned cells are affected by damp. The prison stands on a clay soil, and has good drainage, by a sewer, to the river. The locality is considered healthy. There is no space for extension, except at the back end of the buildings, towards the river, where there is a piece of garden-ground belonging to the prison, which might be used for building, if required.

2. Discipline, Management, &c.

System.

The system is that of association by day for the untried, and, for the convicted, labour in association by day, and separation in cells, or berths, at meal-times, and, as far as practicable, at night. Prisoners occasionally sentenced to solitary confinement are kept in a modified state of separation, the effect of which the keeper thinks to be reformatory.

Classification.

The classification of the Gaol Act was, at the time of our visit, not adhered to in several particulars. In the first place, there were eleven prisoners convicted of felonies, and sentenced to transportation, associating, in the Old Gaol, with 13 prisoners committed for trial at the assizes, and three who had been acquitted on the ground of insanity. Prisoners convicted of felony and of misdemeanor, and vagrants, were on the wheel and in the mill-house together. Boys, before and after trial, and summarily convicted, were associated together in one ward. And lastly, eight women, of whom four were for trial at assizes, two were convicted of felony, one (deranged) was for want of bail, and one a vagrant, were placed in one room without any attempt at classification.

Association before Trial.

The prisoners in the Old Gaol, consisting of those for trial at the assizes, of convicts under sentence of transportation, and of insane persons, to the number of 27 in all, as above, had the use of three day-rooms and a yard, and mixed with each other without restriction. Among the former class were persons charged with offences of the most different descriptions: for example:—

T. B., charged with wilful murder, who was afterwards convicted and executed. This man anticipated his sentence, and his conduct had every appearance of penitence. He complained much of the annoyance he had often received from the bad language of other prisoners. When he first came in he was disposed to confess his guilt to any one, but the other prisoners endeavoured to persuade him not to do so; he, however, avowed it fully to the chaplain, but made up his mind to plead not guilty, believing that he might conscientiously do so.

The prisoners under sentence of transportation were also convicted of offences, differing, if not in legal guilt, yet materially so in their nature and circumstances, for instance:—

|---|---|

| J. D. . . . | Receiving part of a stolen sheep. |
| G. B. . . . | Stealing rabbits. |

Association of Convicts for Transportation.

Some of these convicts had been sentenced to transportation at the last Michaelmas sessions, and had been in custody for upwards of four months since their sentence. Others having been sentenced at the last Epiphany sessions had been in custody above six weeks. It would have been very desirable if they could have been earlier removed, as their continuance in a gaol, otherwise crowded, must always tend to the subversion of its discipline. We made particular inquiries of these convicts, to ascertain whether they knew anything as to their future condition, or of the colonies to which they were about to be transported; but we found them without the least knowledge on the subject. Most of them, however, said they should prefer being transported, though they knew so little about it, to remaining in the house of correction at hard labour for any length of time.

The insane prisoners will be noticed under another head. See the evidence of one of them (C. L.), Appendix A. who has made himself very useful in keeping order in the ward, though not employed as a wardsman.

Association in New Gaol.

In the wards called the New Gaol, intended for convicts, but, from the crowded state of the prison, appropriated at the time of our visit to prisoners before trial, we found 26 committed for trial at the assizes, having the use of two day-rooms and one yard. The following selection from these will show how indiscriminate must be associations in this way, whether as regards moral or legal distinctions, viz.:—

|---|---|
| J. K. . . . | Burglary. |
| T. R. . . . | Manslaughter. |
| W. C. . . . | Stealing a duck. |
| J. B. . . . | Stealing an ash-tree, value 1*s*. 6*d*. |
| C. B. . . . | Fraud. |

The prisoners thus associating together, having no employment, except two or three who plait straw, indulge in loose and vicious conversation, and are often heard to swear and talk indecently. They play at idle games, such as ball and marbles, and their habits are in all respects inconsistent with a decent state of preparation for trial, or the commencement of a steady course of life after transportation.

Datchet.

In the day-room of the ward called the Datchet we found three prisoners for want of bail, and one summary conviction for assault. This ward is also used as a place of reception for prisoners on their first admission. On unlocking the sleeping-cells, between four and five o'clock P. M., before the locking up, we found in one cell two prisoners committed for trial for sheep-stealing, and one for stealing corn. The two former had been admitted on the evening before the last, and the latter the day before the day we saw them, at four o'clock P. M., and the surgeon had not yet visited them, although two had been admitted nearly 48 hours. They slept in one bed. In another cell we found one committed for sheep-stealing, one summary conviction, and one vagrant, all of whom had been admitted the day before, and had not been seen by the surgeon. They had slept in one bed, and the vagrant was lying in bed in the day-time for want of clothes. In another cell we found three summary convictions, admitted the day before, who had slept in one bed, and had not been visited by the surgeon.

In consequence of the crowded state of the gaol, the untried prisoners were sleeping three in a cell, and in the same bed, in several instances. They were thus placed together without regard to classification, for example:—T. P., for stealing an axe, was sleeping with T. R., for manslaughter, and G. S., for robbing a van. They complained of vermin in their bed. J. G., for sheep-stealing, had been sleeping with two vagrants.

T. J., for burglary, had slept five nights in the Datchet, in the same bed with T. C., for stealing peas, and no other prisoner in the cell. They complained of the bed being so full of vermin they could not sleep; and that they only had small bits of blankets, instead of proper bedding.

The untried have full opportunities of conversing at night, when they sleep in the large rooms divided into lobbies, and are said often to talk, as well as sing. The governor, however, can hear any noise at night in the Old Gaol wards. The untried, as well as those committed for want of sureties, and those under sentence of transportation, have their meals in their respective day-rooms.

Convicted.

The convicted male prisoners, who are confined in the house of correction department, are separated at night, in the lobbies, or berths, in which they sleep, and also have their meals. These lobbies are fixed in opposite rows down each side of the room, so that the prisoners in them can see and converse with each other. We found two prisoners in one lobby, in several instances, at the time of dinner. The only use of these lobbies appears to be that they confine the prisoners, as it were, in cages, so as to prevent their coming in contact, but are otherwise no check upon association or mutual corruption.

Silence enforced.

Silence is stated to be the rule of the house of correction, but it is very feebly enforced; so loosely, indeed, that, according to the concurrent testimony of prisoners and officers (see Appendix A), the prisoners have no difficulty in talking, and do in fact communicate at all times, whether during labour on the wheel, whilst waiting in the mill-house, at meals, at night, or in going to and from chapel. In the subjoined list of 31 punishments inflicted in the year 1836 (Appendix C), not one appears for mere breach of silence: the conclusion from which is, that the mere act of speaking is not here considered an offence, as in those prisons where the silent system is rigidly conducted.

On Sundays the convicted prisoners are locked up in their cells, except during Divine Service, and about an hour for exercise.

Labour.

The corrective labour consists in a tread-wheel, fixed in the mill-house, and applied to grinding corn, and to raising water, for the use of the town. The profits are applied to the credit of the county. The wheel is one of the large cylinders, on the old principle, and without any compartments. It affords work for 12 men outside, and 18 inside; and the number of working hours varies with the season. The height of each step is 17 inches, and about 60 steps are taken in a minute; but there are no means of ascertaining the precise amount of labour performed. Wheels of this description are much inferior to those on the new, or Cubitt's, principle, as the prisoner's position upon them is very awkward, and he rests himself upon his arms, and hangs on the wheel. There are usually two turnkeys in the mill-house; but there is such a want of room, and the wheel is so sunk and inconveniently placed, that it is quite impossible for them to keep silence, or to see all the prisoners, either on or off the wheel. The labour is disliked, but not nearly so much as solitary confinement.

Other Employments.

Prisoners are also employed at a hand-pump, and as wardsmen, and in various menial services about the prison, such as painting, bricklaying, gardening, and cleaning the prison and county-hall. The number so employed at the time of our visit was 26 (see Appendix B), being 15 per cent. upon the whole number of criminals, male and female, then in custody. The wardsmen have extra diet for their services. The keeper has no great confidence in them, as they seldom report, and thinks it would be better to hire additional officers to be in the prison by day, who might be had for 14*s.* or 15*s.* a-week. From the evidence of the wardsman, P. M. (see Appendix A), it appears that he has been threatened by prisoners, and that they have said they would league together, and report something untrue of him. And this is a treatment which wardsmen receive not unfreqently.

Female Prisoners.

Of the eight women, who, it has been stated, are kept in association in one ward, without any classification, three were employed in washing and mending, and the others had no regular employment; but an instructress in needle-work attends once a-week. They slept together, five in one room, and three in another. Hester Sheriff, a female prisoner, who had been confined for want of sureties, with the rest, for seven months past, was in a state of derangement, though harmless.

The female ward has not the requisite accommodation for either classification or separation. It is distinct from the male wards, and the only opportunities of the male and female prisoners for seeing each other are in going to, or coming from, chapel, and when the male prisoners bring coals into the female ward. On these occasions, however, the matron, or her female servant, is always present.

Visits and Letters.

Prisoners before trial are allowed to receive visits daily from 12 to 2, in the turnkey's lodge, and in his presence. Debtors' visitors are received in a room in their own ward. Prisoners in the house of correction only receive visits by a magistrate's order. It is stated that all parcels, &c., brought by visitors are searched; but it would seem that this is not performed very strictly, for a book of an improper kind, which we found in the basket of a prisoner, was brought by a visitor, and had escaped detection. (See Evidence of J. C.) Letters are not allowed to be received or sent by any other prisoners than debtors without the keeper's inspection.

Money.

The money of prisoners in the house of correction department is taken away from them on admission, and accounted for on their discharge. Debtors and prisoners before trial retain their money for the purpose of purchasing provisions. A practice is stated to prevail of prisoners leaving their money at a public-house before their admission, in order that they may obtain an allowance, as having no money, on their discharge, or, perhaps, to avail themselves of it for purchasing tobacco, &c., whilst in prison. See the turnkey's evidence.

Tobacco.

The prisoners before trial, and under sentence of transportation, smoke and use tobacco, as well as the debtors, these not being prohibited from it. Tobacco is not allowed in the house of correction; but it not unfrequently finds its way there, being introduced, according to the turnkey, by the coal-men, who bring it from the debtors, or the Old Gaol. The evidence of the prisoner J. H. shows that pipes are used for smoking by convicted prisoners, which, in some instances, have been thrown over from the adjoining yard of the White Hart inn.

Newspapers and Books.

The debtors read newspapers, but they are not permitted to those on the criminal side. The books in use are generally under the chaplain's direction, but the prisoner C. L. said that he had had books (not religious) without the chaplain's knowledge. In the possession of a convict, aged 18, under sentence of transportation, we found a book, intituled "Authentic Memoirs of that wonderful Phenomenon, the Infant Roscius; in which is interspersed a variety of Theatrical Anecdotes, and a Criticism on his Performance."

Gaming.

The prisoners in the Old Gaol ward have been found playing with dice, and they constantly play at marbles, and also at ball. Convicted prisoners are not allowed such diversions; but, on entering a day-room in the house of correction, we found two convicted prisoners playing at ball; and, on inquiry, we were told that it was not uncommon to detect them in it. Cards have been found in the debtors' apartments. See the turnkey's evidence.

Debtors.

There were six debtors in custody at the time of inspection. Five of them occupied a common day-room and three sleeping-rooms; and one occupied a separate room, by his own desire. The debtors' ward is locked up by the turnkey at nine o'clock, but they are not obliged to go to bed till they please. The amount of the various debts was very small. Being allowed to find themselves, and to receive visits and letters, and being unrestricted as to books, newspapers, and tobacco, there is scarcely a rule which the debtors could violate, except that which prohibits gaming; and that appears not to have been strictly regarded. The debtors have sometimes thrown over into the house of correction articles of food, which they did not themselves stand in need of.

3. Religious and other Instruction.

Chaplain.

The chaplain (Rev. Frederick Cox) has held that office for three years. He resides at Walton, near Aylesbury, and is perpetual curate of Upper Winchendon, five miles distant. He reads daily prayers selected from the liturgy, and occasionally expounds the Scriptures, sometimes at half-past 8 A. M., and at other times about noon; after which he remains in the prison for two hours, or more, visiting and conversing with the prisoners, as he thinks desirable. He does not make it a rule to visit all prisoners under punishment, but sees them occasionally, as well as others. He keeps a journal, but not a character-book. In the event of his absence, he procures the aid of another clergyman to officiate for him. He performs Divine Service twice on Sundays, with one sermon, and administers the Holy Communion four times in the year. No list is kept of absentees from chapel. The debtors are not obliged to attend, but some of them do so. The keeper and matron attend on Sundays, but not on the week-days, when three turnkeys attend, including the clerk. The chapel is not sufficiently on the radiating plan to give the officers a good view of the prisoners. The prisoners have been known to communicate in chapel, but not very often.

Chapel.

Books.

The prisoners are supplied with Bibles, Prayer-books, and Tracts of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, under the direction of the chaplain.

Instruction.

There is no provision for the regular instruction of adult prisoners; but one of the turnkeys acts as schoolmaster to the boys, teaching them reading in their ward for about half an hour a-day. The chaplain superintends the schoolmaster, and usually attends in the boys' ward twice a-week. The magistrates consider that to give regular instruction to the convicted would interfere too much with the corrective discipline. This objection, however, would not apply to the untried, who stand greatly in need of some occupation, and whose general state of ignorance may be inferred from the fact that, of 193 prisoners committed for trial in the year ending at Michaelmas last, 67 could neither read nor write, 56 could read only, 43 could read or write imperfectly, and only 30 could read and write well.

4. Health.

Surgeon.

The surgeon resides in the town, and it is stated that he, or his son (also a surgeon), attends, in general, daily, and always when sent for, and examines prisoners before they are removed from the Datchet, or reception-ward, into their proper ward. The attendance of the surgeon would, however, seem not to be so regular as it ought, for, as already stated, we found prisoners, who had been waiting in the Datchet, three in a cell, for two days, without the surgeon having visited them. He does not visit prisoners under punishment, unless they are reported sick.

Infirmary.

There were four patients in the infirmary at the time of our visit, and there are seldom more. The infirmary is not under any particular regulation as to silence or otherwise. The patients are under the superintendence of a nurse, who is a convicted felon, under sentence of hard labour.

Sickness.

The cholera prevailed in this prison, as well as in the neighbourhood, to a considerable extent; but it is generally more healthy than many prisons having as many inmates. The number of infirmary cases in the year ending Michaelmas last was 41, or 6 per cent. upon the total number confined; and the number of deaths 6, or 87 per cent. The greatest number of sick at one time in that year was 11, and the average number of days which each invalid remained on the sick list, 23. The most prevalent complaints are said to be low fever and diarrhœa. Scurvy does not appear.

Diet.

The daily allowance of food to prisoners maintained by the county is as follows:—

| Prisoners Convicted and sentenced to hard Labour. | Prisoners before Trial and those not sentenced to hard Labour. |
|---|---|
| Monday, 1 lb. bread, and 1½ pint gruel. | Monday, 1 lb. bread, and 1½ pint gruel. |

the prisoners' presence. The cost of diet per head per annum in the year to Michaelmas last is stated by the keeper at £31. 18*s.* 9*d.*, but this is so high that we can scarcely think the statement correct. The cost of extra allowances in the year, by order of the surgeon, amounted to £97. 7*s.* 11*d.* It does not appear that the above dietary combined with tread-wheel labour, even for periods exceeding six months, has usually an injurious effect on the prisoners' constitutions, but, on the contrary, some improve in appearance after having been at hard labour for long periods. The cause of this, as compared with a different result in other prisons, would probably be found to lie in the comparative lightness of the labour and larger proportion of meat diet in this prison; but we hazard with diffidence an opinion on so difficult a point.

Prisoners maintaining themselves.

Debtors, and other prisoners before trial, or for bail, not receiving the county allowance, are allowed to provide themselves with food, not exceeding a day's supply at a time, and with two pints of beer, for which 2*d.* per pint is paid. Wine and spirits are only permitted by order of the surgeon, but attempts have been made to introduce spirits clandestinely on several occasions. Prisoners receiving gaol allowance are not permitted to buy provisions. It is stated, however, that the prisoners before trial sell articles of food to each other, so as easily to defeat this regulation. There is no restriction as to the nature or quality of the food purchased. In estimating the cost per head of prison diet, the proportion of prisoners finding themselves, ought, of course, to be taken into consideration.

Clothing.

There are two woollen prison dresses—a check dress for convicted felons, and plain dress for summary convictions. They are made in the town, and no difference is made in summer and winter. The prisoners frequently destroy or injure their clothing, and are punished when detected.

Bedding.

From the complaints of prisoners it would seem that the supply of bedding is not sufficient, and that some of the beds are infested by vermin. The prisoners are, however, very apt to tear the blankets. The straw of the mattresses is changed every three weeks, and the bedding is washed or warmed once a-month. It is not aired in the yards in winter.

Washing, &c.

Improper charge on Prisoners.

The whole of the prisoners' linen is washed in the prison: when there are not female prisoners enough for this service, other women are hired to assist. The floors of the rooms, which are mostly of oak, are washed, or dry-scrubbed, several times a-week. The supply of soap and combs was deficient at the time of inspection. The practice of requiring the prisoners to pay 3*d.* each for an earthenware pot is highly improper; the proceeds are stated to go to the woman who sells them, and not to the turnkey. The walls of the prison are lime-washed several times a-year, and it appeared generally clean at the time of inspection. We could not discover any local circumstance unfavourable to health.

5. Prison Punishments.

Punishments.

The Return, Appendix C, states the particulars of 31 punishments inflicted in the course of the year 1836. The number inflicted in the year to Michaelmas 1836 was 23, being a proportion of only 3·35 per cent. to the total number confined in the year. All the punishments were upon the convicted. Eight prisoners were privately whipped, pursuant to their sentences, in the last-mentioned year. The instrument of whipping is a cat-of-nine-tails. The number of lashes is not defined, but is usually from 30 to 40. The keeper is present, but not the surgeon.

The solitary cells, as a punishment, are stated to be much disliked.

6. Officers.

Officers.

The following is a list of the officers, with their salaries and emoluments.

The resident officers are, the keeper, matron, clerk, and one turnkey. There is no night-watchman attached to the prison, but the turnkeys who reside out of it are alternately in the prison at night; so that there are two turnkeys within at night.

Keeper.

The keeper (Mr. James Sherriff) is 50 years of age, and has held the office for 23 years. He gives security as gaoler to the sheriff. He has the means of hearing, and partially inspecting, the prisoners in the Old Gaol, from his residence; but he does not visit the cells at night, and does not appear to visit every part of the prison daily. He supplies trifling articles, such as broth, &c., for the sick, and wardsmen's dishes, for which he is repaid by the county, and the amount of his bill for which, in the year 1836, was above £50: he does not appear to be otherwise concerned in supplying the prison. He keeps a regular journal, and exhibits it at the sessions.

The matron is the wife of the keeper. She superintends the female prisoners, with the assistance of her female servant, and, without the presence of one of these, male officers do not enter the female prison.

Books.

The prison books are as follows:—

Keeper's Journal.
Chaplain's Journal.
Surgeon's Journal.
Prisoners' Description Book.
Calendar Book for Assizes and Sessions.
Account Book of Extra Expenses for the Sick and Wardsmen.
Visiting Justices' Book.
Several petty Account Books.

7. Miscellaneous.

Population of Prison.

The total number of prisoners in custody at the following periods was—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 23d February | 1835 . . . | 160 |
| „ | 1836 . . . | 176 |
| „ | 1837 . . . | 172. (See Appendix B.) |

The total number committed in each of the three following years, ending at Michaelmas respectively, was—

|---|---|
| 1834 . . . | 702 |
| 1835 . . . | 584 |
| 1836 . . . | 600 |

and the greatest number in custody at one time in each of the same years was—

|---|---|
| 1834 . . . | 220 |
| 1835 . . . | 170 |
| 1836 . . . | 185 |

Juvenile Offenders.

The number of offenders under the age of 17, in the year to Michaelmas 1836, was 41, being 6 per cent. upon 686, the total number confined in that year. The officers state that the characters of these boys are usually very bad, and that the discipline of the prison by no means improves them. The plan of keeping all the boys together appears to be erroneous, for it is beyond doubt that they corrupt each other. Want of instruction, poverty, and disunion in families, are stated as the main causes of juvenile delinquency.

Recommittals.

The number of prisoners in the last-mentioned year who had been previously committed is stated at 34, being 5·66 per cent. upon the total number committed (600). We fear, however, that, except as relates to those who have been previously in this prison, the above number is very far from expressing the truth.

Insane Prisoners.

There were three male prisoners in custody at the time of our inspection who had been acquitted on the ground of insanity, and were detained in the Old Gaol, among the prisoners before trial. Their names were C. L., committed for murder, and acquitted at the Lent assizes 1825, who had been 12 years in custody; J. B., committed for maliciously shooting, and acquitted Summer assizes 1828, 8½ years in custody; and T. S., committed for murder Lent assizes 1836, one year in custody. The county receives an allowance of 7*s*. per week from the parishes to which these unfortunate men belong, for their maintenance; but they were only allowed the ordinary gaol diet, without meat, of prisoners not at hard labour. There was also a woman, H. S., in the female prison, in a state of derangement, who had been seven months in custody, for want of sureties to keep the peace.

Summer Assizes.

The Summer assizes being held at Buckingham, it is necessary to remove the prisoners thither for trial, and the accommodation at the latter town is stated to be exceedingly bad, the prisoners being placed all together in a room in the town gaol, where they are obliged to sleep upon straw, and in a most disorderly manner.

Allowances on Discharge.

Small sums of money are paid on their discharge to destitute prisoners, viz., 2*s*. 6*d*. if the distance of their abode is above 15 miles, and 1*s*. if under. A practice has prevailed of prisoners leaving their money at a public-house before admission, so as to obtain the allowance intended for those who are wholly destitute.

Military Prisoners.

There are very few military offenders here; when there are any, the usual allowance of 6*d*. per day is paid by the War Department, and the prisoners receive the ordinary gaol diet.

General Observations.

From what has been stated it will be seen that the discipline of this prison is very lax—the system of association tending to mutual corruption—and the rule of silence scarcely at all enforced. The irregular and defective construction of the building, and the narrow limits within which it is confined, are obstacles to improvement, which greatly discourage any present hope of remedying the evils noticed. Plans of partial alterations have been projected, such as that of converting the day-rooms into sleeping-rooms, by fitting them up with small lobbies, like the present bed-rooms: but we submit that the adoption of any such temporary and partial schemes would be inexpedient, because they afford no prospect of permanently reforming a vicious system. The reform of such prisons as this can only be effected upon an enlarged and uniform plan of separate confinement, and a sound and vigorous system of discipline.

We beg reference to the subjoined extracts from evidence (Appendix A) taken to illustrate the general state of the prison, and the other Appendices, B and C.

rate cell on the ground floor. Prisoners sentenced to transportation, who are in an adjoining day-room, come in to us now and then. I employ myself in basket-work with straw—it is sold in the town. I supply myself with meat, tea, beer, &c., and receive gaol allowance. There are two wardsmen for the three day-rooms in the Old Gaol-yard. I have sometimes heard bad language and swearing—I try to stop it. The governor comes in once or twice a-week. The minister comes in once or twice a-week. The wardsman now and then reports, but very seldom. We are allowed to talk quietly, but not to make a noise. We talk of all sorts of things. I can read and write. There is a man for murder in our yard, who expects to be executed. I have known prisoners stealing each other's bread and other things. The chaplain comes twice a-week and talks to us for about half an hour, especially to those under sentence of transportation, and to B., the murderer. The prisoners like being all together. I use tobacco, and so do the rest, including those under sentence of transportation. I have sometimes had other books than religious ones, without the knowledge of the chaplain. My friends sometimes send me newspapers. Visitors are received in the office, and the turnkey stands by. My insanity was brought on by drinking. I was a cooper, at Vauxhall. My health is now very good. The bread is served out in the morning for the whole day. The two wardsmen are under sentence of transportation, and were so employed before trial."

J. C.
a Prisoner.

"I am in the Old Gaol under sentence of transportation for life. I was sentenced for killing a sheep. I am aged 18. I used to assist my father, who is a carrier. I have been in gaol before for stealing wood. I was sentenced at last January sessions, and was here six weeks before trial. I have always slept separate the whole time. We are allowed to talk in the day-room. We play at marbles sometimes—we play at ball also. The prisoners take each other's bread. I smoke sometimes as well as the others. We are allowed to do it—we are allowed to have things from our friends, such as bacon, &c.; we are allowed to get beer if we can. The chaplain comes in to us once or twice a-week. I was in liquor when I killed the sheep. I know nothing about the place where I am going. The surgeon visited us one day last week. I can read a little. The book called "Memoirs of the Infant Roscius," found by the Inspector, was sent me by my sister. My father brought me the book in a basket which was not examined."

P. M.
a Prisoner.

"I am wardsman in the Old Gaol. I am under sentence of transportation. I have been wardsman since my trial at the October sessions, when I was sentenced for horse-stealing. I was taken 26th August, and was three weeks in Wycombe Gaol, since which I have been in this prison. I sleep separate on the ground floor. I have half a pound of meat twice a-week, and once a-week a wardsman's dish of about a pound of meat. I have to clean and keep order in the day-room. The cells are washed once a-week, the outer floor twice. Prisoners make their own beds, and wash in the yard. There is not always soap. There is not any now. We are not allowed combs. Towels are allowed. Each prisoner has to buy an earthenware chamber-pot in coming in, for which he pays 3*d.* to the turnkey, Mr. H. None in this yard have been shaved since Saturday. A prisoner from the House of Correction generally shaves us twice a-week. I find it not easy to keep order. I have reported about five times. The prisoners have sometimes threatened they would all hang together, and report of me something untrue. I have heard bad language and swearing, and have often threatened to report. I have once reported a prisoner for it to the parson. He comes in once or twice a-week. The governor comes in sometimes three times a-week. The turnkey is in and out. I have known prisoners stealing each other's victuals. A pint of beer may be had, and tobacco. About half of those now in this yard smoke. Those who have money to buy sell to the others. A woman comes to the gate with things. I have heard singing at night, but not often. The cells up stairs are very cold: the snow has beat through the windows. I don't know anything of the place I am going to. Most prisoners say they would rather be transported than be imprisoned at hard labour for a term here. They say so because they don't know what transportation is. Prisoners under sentence of transportation mix as they please with those before trial. I have seen the women going to chapel, but I believe the male prisoners scarcely ever communicate with them. No one comes round at night, but the governor could hear if there was any noise."

W. W.
a Prisoner.

"I am a prisoner in the New Gaol, committed for trial at the assizes for poaching. I have been 11 weeks in prison, partly in this ward, and partly in the Old Gaol. I have been wardsman about three weeks, and sleep up stairs in a room with ten others. I never reported a prisoner. Sometimes they begin singing—sometimes I have heard bad language, which I have stopped. They talk about their time, and hoping to get off. I have known them take each other's bread. I was two months in this prison before for ferreting. The prisoners' friends send them things. Those who have lend to the others. Some have beer and tobacco,—several smoke. They sometimes sing at night, but I try to prevent it, and the turnkey could hear from without. The parson comes in about once a-week. We fall in line in the yard, and he tells us not to swear, and to think about another world. A good many do swear notwithstanding."

J. M.
a Prisoner.

"I have been in the House of Correction about nine weeks for poaching. I am wardsman of a room over 12 men. It is my duty to clean and keep order at meals. They have their meals in the cells. Some eat the whole at breakfast, the allowance is so small. They talk gently at meals, and then I don't report—only if they make a noise. They are locked up about five or half-past. They talk quietly to each other at night. No one comes in after locking-up; but the turnkey, who lodges by, could hear any great noise. The wheel is hard work. They sometimes speak to each other on the wheel. If the turnkey hears talking he stops the allowance. Some take the others' bread. I have never reported any prisoner."

J. H.
a Prisoner.

"I am a prisoner in the House of Correction. I was sentenced to three calendar months' imprisonment for fowl-stealing. I was five weeks in prison before trial—seven weeks since. I have been in prison before for an assault. I work at the wheel. The turnkey at the bottom cannot see the men at the top. We do talk on the wheel in a quiet way. We talk also at meals, and at night. In the Datchet, where I was when in prison before, there was bad talk and swearing—not so much where I am now. Some take the others' bread;—we do not get bread enough. It is given out in the morning, and we are so hungry, we sometimes eat it all up at once. The parson comes in to us at dinner once a-week, and inquires how we behave. I have seen some in the House of Correction with pipes in the morning. I saw them smoke last week. I have seen women coming out of chapel; at no other time. We can speak to vagrants, as well as others, on the wheel."

G. L.
a Prisoner.

"I have been seven weeks in prison in the boys' ward, aged 16. I was sentenced to two months, and hard labour, for stealing wood. I can read very little. My father is a labourer. I have six brothers and sisters. Since my mother died I have lived with my uncle. I took the wood to make a fire, having none. I sleep in a room with five others in little lobbies or berths. I worked for a month on the wheel. Now I am ward-boy. We are allowed to talk quietly, not to make a noise. Two boys are here for felony,—one of them is for housebreaking, and has been in prison twice before. They are for trial. Those on the wheel sometimes talk, but are punished if caught out. We have our meals in the day-room, all six together. At night we lay and talk quietly to one another. The chaplain comes in to us twice a-week. The schoolmaster instructs us boys, about half an hour a-day. When my mother died my father took a housekeeper, who was not kind to me. The turnkey comes in twice a-day, the governor about once a-week."

"I have been turnkey for four years, and reside in the prison. I unlock the prisoners in the morning. They work in the House of Correction before breakfast till 8 o'clock—then they have an hour for breakfast in their cells—then go upon the wheel from 9 to 12—then an hour and a half for chapel and dinner—then work till 5—then gruel—then lock up at half-past 5, or later, according to the time of year. At night, the governor, his son, and two turnkeys, are in the prison. I can get into the House of Correction, and listen outside, without being heard. The governor has a listening lobby for the Old Gaol. I sometimes hear noise at night. They will sometimes tell of each other. We change the wardsmen about. They can talk on the wheel, and whilst at dinner. In the gaol they are apt to play, and they play till they quarrel. Bates, on charge of murder, has complained two or three times of the bad language and swearing, and they have been punished for it. The prisoners tear the blankets to wrap round their feet. We wash and warm the bedding once a-month, and give clean straw for the mattresses every three weeks. The bedding is not aired in the yards. The governor goes round the gaol two or three times a-week. The prisoners help to clean the town-hall, and the prison generally. I am always by when visitors are received in the lodge. I think that tobacco is introduced into the House of Correction by means of those employed in carrying coals, &c., who get it from the prisoners in the Old Gaol. I have caught them playing at marbles, and sometimes dice, in the Old Gaol. Three years ago I found cards among the debtors. The restriction is to two pints of mild beer, which could hardly make them drunk. I once stopped a woman at the gate bringing in spirits. The errand-woman brings chamber-pots for sale. All prisoners are obliged to buy them if they have money. The price is 3*d*. They pay for nothing else. Before prisoners come into gaol, they often go with the constable to a public-house, and there they leave their money, and get it again when they go out. I have heard rumours of mutinous intentions, but they have never been executed. There is no watchman at night except the town watchman, who parades the town. There is a boy, W. P., now in the boy's ward for housebreaking, who has been twice in prison before, and will corrupt all the others. I think the best punishment for boys is whipping and solitary confinement."

SPRINGFIELD COUNTY GAOL AND HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

1.—Site, Construction, &c.

Description.

Wards and Cells.

This is the principal gaol of the county of Essex for the reception of male prisoners committed for trial, and is also a house of correction for male convicts. Debtors and female prisoners are not confined in this prison, but in the old gaol at Chelmsford. This prison stands on a slight elevation at Springfield, about one mile from the town of Chelmsford. It is a brick building on the radiating plan, and is said to have cost about £56,000. It was first occupied in October 1825, and is in a good state of repair. The building is, for the most part, fire-proof, being constructed with iron beams. The wards are surrounded by an inner wall 30 feet high, and the outer, or boundary wall, is of the height of 20 feet; the area within the boundary wall is 4 acres and 70 roods. The keeper and turnkey's residences, with the chapel, are in the centre, and the prison is divided into seven radii, each containing two wards. These 14 wards contain 14 day-rooms, 204 single cells of the dimensions of 8 feet by 6½, and 14 large cells of the dimensions of 14 feet by 8; there are besides 3 infirmary, 2 lazaretto, and 2 reception-cells; making, in the whole, accommodation for 225 in separate sleeping apartments. From the subjoined Return (Appendix A), which gives the number and dimensions of the cells and rooms throughout, it appears that the prison has capabilities for receiving 628 prisoners, sleeping more than one in a cell; and by placing three in a cell, and other arrangements, in case of emergency, it might be made to hold 1,151. The cells are in general close, and badly ventilated. The thickness of the partition-walls is 14 inches. The number of sleeping cells is sufficient for the separation by night of the average number, but the greatest number in custody for the last three years has been:—

and at the time of our visit the number of prisoners was 238. (See Appendix F.)

Inspection.

The means of inspection are very imperfect; they only extend to the yards, some of which can be seen from the windows of the turnkeys' apartments. The governor's parlour, or keeping-room, is under ground, so that he can only see the legs of the staffman, the top of the walls, and the sky. But he usually sits in the magistrates' room to write, from whence he can see the front gate, all the yard No. 1, and a part of yard No. 2, but no more. The windows of the day-rooms look towards the central buildings, and are without blinds, so that the prisoners in the rooms are able to watch the movements and approach of the officers.

Escapes.

There have been lately two escapes from this prison, viz.—J. M., who got out of the vagrants' itch-room, and scaled the boundary wall; and J. C., who escaped from his cell in ward No. 13, by deceiving the turnkey, and appears to have scaled both the inner and outer wall. The particulars of these two cases are detailed in the extracts from the Keeper's Journal (Appendix B). The court of quarter-sessions has ordered the dismissal of the turnkey, from whose neglect of the written instructions of the keeper these escapes occurred, in default of payment of the sum of £10 offered as a reward for the capture of C. Such occurrences, however, indicate not only negligence, but some degree of insecurity in the prison itself; and they show the impropriety of leaving any boards or poles about prisons, which may facilitate the scaling of the walls.

Soil, &c.

The prison is not overlooked by, nor does it overlook, any other building. The soil on which it stands is the plastic clay. The drainage is good, and we found the prison dry and clean. The locality is considered healthy.

2.—Discipline, Management, &c.

System.

This prison is governed by the provisional rules for the several prisons in the county of Essex, approved by His Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department in November 1836.

Classification.

Association of Untried.

The system is that of association for the untried, and of associated labour in silence, commonly called the silent system, for the convicted; with separation by night, in both cases, so long as there is room for it. The classification of the Gaol Act is observed, except in the infirmaries; but when the number of any one class is greater than the number of cells in that ward, the surplus number is placed in separate cells in another ward belonging to a different class. Each convicted prisoner has the number of his cell and yard marked on his back, as well as on his clothes and bedding. The subjoined Return (Appendix C) shows the classification by day, and the disposal of the prisoners by night, at the time of our visit. It will be observed that, exclusive of the infirmary, where four were together, three prisoners for trial on charge of felony had, in three instances, slept the previous night in one cell in yard No. 1; that three convicted misdemeanants had slept in the day-room of No. 2, and three untried in one cell in No. 14, viz. one on charge of housebreaking, and two on charge of stealing. The prisoners' clothes are taken out of their cells at night. The untried associate in considerable numbers. In the yard No. 13 we found 18 prisoners, committed for offences differing materially both in their nature and enormity, viz.—

The association leads to the ordinary results,—idle conversation, and sometimes bad language, swearing, and mutual corruption. The prisoners sell provisions to each other, and have been known to steal from each other. Any loud noise is punished if heard by the officers, and to this the return of punishments for breach of silence must be understood to relate, for strict silence is not required. The following are extracts from statements made to us on this point:—

W. G., a Prisoner.

"I am in yard No. 14. I was committed, for stealing silk, for trial at the assizes. I have been several times in prison before. I have heard prisoners swear. We often laugh and talk amongst each other. We don't take particular notice of the wardsman, because he is the same as another. We can see the turnkey coming. The prisoners sometimes call out from their cells at night. Cordery, who escaped and was brought back, has told me all about his being taken. I have escaped from Halsted Gaol."

G. B., Yardsman.

"I am a prisoner on charge of highway robbery, and have been seven weeks yardsman of No. 14. I have never reported a prisoner. I remember the prisoner G. making a great noise, using bad language, shoving the others about; he came through from the other yard to talk to some friends here; they talk about their offences, &c. The publican brings beer, each man is allowed to buy a pot."

W. P., Turnkey,

"I have been turnkey ever since this prison was occupied. I have heard swearing and bad language in the gaol-yard No. 1. The prisoners are allowed to spend to the extent of 2*s.* 6*d.* per week; they sell to each other; sometimes they steal each others' provisions; they find plenty of opportunities of talking to each other. I do not think the yardsmen are to be trusted; one prisoner does not like to tell of another. They play a game with chalk and buttons, which we prevent when we can."

Silent System.

Silence is prescribed for the observance of the convicted, by the 33rd provisional rule. In order to enforce it during labour, two staffmen (prisoners) are stationed in each tread-wheel yard, one of whom parades up and down by the wheel, and the turnkey is in and out occasionally. The staffman, however, does not look up to the wheel, and consequently does not always see the prisoners when they talk. That they do talk may be seen by any person who remains five minutes in the yard, and it is admitted by the governor and officers; but the governor's opinion is, that the communication is confined to matters of curiosity, and cannot extend to contamination. Be that as it may, the Silent System is, in this prison, very loosely enforced, from the want of a sufficient staff of officers, as well as of the means of inspection. The prisoners on the wheel are allowed to look round, and often loll upon it in a lounging way. When off the wheel they may walk round the yard in single file, three feet apart, or sit down to rest at stations 15 feet apart; but it is by no means uncommon for them to converse whilst walking. The governor admits very candidly that the prisoners do communicate, not only on the wheel and whilst walking the yards, but during washing, whilst at meals in their cells, in going to chapel, at chapel, and occasionally at night. He considers that it would be possible to enforce the system with much more rigour if an addition were made to the number of officers and to the means of inspection; as, for instance, by placing a turnkey's lodge at the end of each of the seven radii, so as to overlook two yards. At present the number of punishments is comparatively few; the total number inflicted in the year ending Michaelmas 1836 was 117, and in the six months ending 31st December 1836 it was 94.—See the subjoined Return (Appendix E), by which it appears that, in the said six months, only five tried prisoners were punished for what is called "breach of silence," one for "not walking the yard in silence," and one for "talking on the wheel." Those who are conversant with the working of the silent system in prisons where it is rigidly enforced, and are aware of the great number of punishments which are absolutely necessary to attain that end, will at once draw the conclusion that the System, as practised in this prison, is a very loose one. The statements made to us by prisoners whom we examined all confirm that conclusion. We extract the following:—

A. R., a Prisoner.

"I am a convicted prisoner in yard No 6 (tread-wheel yard). I am sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment for stealing linen, and have been three months in prison. We speak to each other on the wheel, and when we walk about the yard; the staffman does not take much notice of conversation unless it is very loud. We can talk at washing; we can speak to each other at dinner-time in our cells, and do so; we can talk at night, and often do so when locked up for the night. Those who have been several times in prison talk of this and that, and what they have done. I have often heard talk about getting into people's houses, and how they have done it; it learns one to do what one would never have thought of. They plan what they will do when they get out. I have heard them say, "I'll make somebody pay for this." They talk of making up their time in prison by making others pay for it. The allowance is not sufficient; many eat up their whole allowance for breakfast. I once had a loaf of bread stolen from me, but could not find out who it was. M., a prisoner, stole half a loaf from an old man named P.; he was not punished. The staffman below the wheel cannot hear and see everything. The turnkey comes round to the cells at dinner-time, but does not stay long."

R. H., Staffman.

"I have been staffman in yard No. 6 for three months. I am convicted of felony. I have only once reported a prisoner. I prevent their making a loud noise, but I cannot prevent their talking quietly. They talk by night as well as by day, but I cannot distinguish who it is."

J. B., a Prisoner.

"I am a prisoner in yard No. 3 (boys' yard). I was convicted of stealing honey, and was sentenced to four months' imprisonment, which expires next Friday. We speak in a quiet way whilst walking the yard, and at other times; they talk about what they have done before they came in. I have had two loaves stolen from me, and many others the same."

J. S., a Prisoner.

"I am a prisoner in yard No. 3, aged 14. I have been 10 months in prison. Was sentenced for housebreaking. We talk quietly to each other. I know what the other lads are in for. I have known such a thing as bread being stolen from each other by prisoners."

Solitary Confinement.

Solitary confinement is used in this prison as a punishment, by sentence of courts, to a considerable extent, 76 prisoners having been so sentenced in the year ending Michaelmas 1836. Such sentences rarely exceed one month at a time, and are sometimes apportioned so that the separation takes place partly at the beginning, and partly at the end of the term of imprisonment. The treatment in solitary confinement is regulated by the provisional rules, which provide that prisoners sentenced for 14 days shall be confined in their cells for the whole period, and those for one month shall pass the first seven days in their cells, and be afterwards allowed to walk the passages. The rules, however, allow so much exercise in the yards as may be prescribed by the surgeon as requisite for health. The small size and bad ventilation of the present cells render them scarcely fit for separate confinement, even for the short periods mentioned; but there is space within the boundary wall, within which new cells of the requisite size might be constructed. The crank machine is used in the cell, when the prisoner under separation is sentenced to labour. The keeper exercises a discretion in occasionally placing in separate cells boys whose contamination is apprehended, or prisoners under examination.

Labour.

The hard labour consists in eight tread-wheels, one crank pump, and three Richmond's crank machines for work in solitude. The tread-wheel labour varies from 6 to 10 hours a-day, and from 10,800 to 18,000 feet of ascent, according to the season. The crank-wheel is regarded as less severe than the tread-wheel; its ordinary revolutions are 1,000 per hour, so that the daily number performed by each prisoner varies from 6,000 to 10,000, according to the number of working hours. The physical effect of the tread-wheel labour will be adverted to under the head of "Health." The profits of the mill and shoe-making, the only productive kinds of labour, were only £151. 12*s.* 4*d.* in the last year, which were applied in aid of the county rate. The mill-house is situated in the tread-wheel yard No. 6, and has no access except through that yard; a circumstance which causes interruptions, and might afford opportunities of communication from without.

Employment as Wardsmen.

It will be seen by the subjoined Return (Appendix D) that, at the time of our inspection, 16 prisoners were employed as yardsmen and staffmen, and 11 in other menial offices, together 27, being 11 per cent. upon the whole number in custody. Prisoners before and after trial, and convicted of felony and misdemeanor, are indiscriminately selected for these services, according to their supposed qualifications for them, and as a reward for good conduct in prison. In the Return will be observed a prisoner committed on charge of murder, who has been insane, but now appears recovered, and is employed in the bakehouse. The prisoner C. S., described as staffman in the middle yard, we found keeping the keys of the two gates between the outer and the inner yard, a trust which ought not to have been reposed in any prisoner. The keeper has no confidence in the yardsmen in general; and, indeed, it would be strange if he had; for, besides the frequency of their overlooking the misconduct of prisoners, they are often guilty of misconduct themselves. The following are a few instances:—

1826, Sept. 15.—J. W., yardsman, detected in imposing upon prisoners; giving half an ounce of tobacco for a loaf; is oppressive, unkind to the sick, &c.

1828, Feb. 18.—Locked up W. R., assistant to the miller, for stealing flour from the mill.

1829, June 29.—W. C., yardsman of No. 2, guilty of extortion and other improprieties. It was proved that he bought and sold bread and beer of and to the prisoners, and also clothes; and in a box belonging to R. P. found 35*s.*, which, after much prevarication, was acknowledged to belong to W. C., and was the produce of his traffic.

1831, Nov. 6.—D., a prisoner employed in cooking, was detected conveying gruel to a solitary prisoner.

1832, Oct. 9.—Locked up J. C., employed in a domestic office, for receiving tobacco of a prisoner when first brought in, and concealing the same.

1833, Dec. 14.—Locked up T. S., yardsman of No. 6, for smuggling tobacco, and imposing on the prisoners by extorting money from them. J. S., the felons' barber, having assisted S. in his extortions, was put upon the tread-wheel.

1834, Feb. 3.—H., a prisoner employed in filling the beds with straw, obtained loaves from the prisoners employed in baking, which he conveyed into the prison concealed in the straw in the beds.

1836, Aug. 21.—Locked up several men employed in the bakehouse, &c.; two loaves of bread having been found in a pail of sand about to be given into yard No. 14.

1836, Nov. 20.—Locked up J. S. for gambling and stealing money from T. M., a prisoner in the lazaretto under the surgeon's care, whom S. attended as nurse.

1837, Jan. 5.—Locked up H. C. and J. S., yardsmen in Nos. 7 and 8, for throwing snowballs at each other, and neglecting to watch the men on the wheels.

Visits and Letters.

Visitors are admitted to see prisoners in the visiting-rooms near the entrance lodge, according to the provisional rules, reg. 18 to 24. The turnkey is present. The keeper exercises a discretionary power in case of pretended relationship, which it is not always possible to prevent. Visitors have been detected in bringing money to prisoners, concealed in all kinds of ways, viz. in soap, in the handle of a saucepan, in the buttons of waistcoats, in bread, in puddings, and in oranges. All letters, since the new rules, are inspected by the keeper, the propriety of which is strongly confirmed by an instance which once occurred in this prison of an attorney being detected in corresponding at the same time with two prisoners;—one the thief in his yard, and the other the receiver, placed for separation in the infirmary—in such a way that notes passed, in consequence, between the two prisoners, tending to defeat the ends of justice.

Money.

The provisional rules prohibit money to convicted prisoners, but allow the untried, maintaining themselves, to have such money as belongs to them, by instalments of 2*s*. 6*d*. per week. We find that money has lately been introduced into the prison, in violation of the rules, to some extent, through the instrumentality of David Mead, a turnkey, who absconded on the 2d January last with £4. 10*s*., belonging to a prisoner. This turnkey used to go to a public-house, and obtain the money which prisoners had desired to be sent there for them. The particulars of his misconduct are stated under the head of "Officers." It should also be noticed that in the year 1830 George Willis, the present miller, was charged before the visiting magistrates with conveying money to the prisoners, and deriving a profit to himself from such conveyance. The magistrates thought the charge established, and directed the discharge of the miller, but for the reason stated under the head of "Officers" he still remains in the service of the prison.

Tobacco.

The use of tobacco is prohibited by the provisional rules; but it has been frequently introduced both before and since their date. As much as a pound of tobacco a-day is stated to have been brought in by the said late turnkey, Mead; it has been occasionally introduced by visitors, and sometimes has been thrown over the boundary wall into the yards, though not very lately.

Gambling.

Cases of gambling have occurred in consequence of the introduction of money, as in the instance of the prisoner Slaughter, who was detected in it; but gaming cannot be said to be prevalent, although the prisoners in association amuse themselves by playing with chalk, buttons, &c. In December last the keeper found two packs of cards, and a cribbage-board, in the turnkeys' room, which he burned, as illegal.

Newspapers.

Newspapers are forbidden by the rules, and do not appear to be introduced, nor any books unauthorized by the chaplain.

Mutinous Attempts.

There seems to have been some disposition to mutiny in this prison, on more than one occasion. On 29th June 1832, C. J. M., a prisoner in No. 14, gave information that it was arranged by the rest of the prisoners to seize the governor and turnkey when inspecting the prison, and the question was discussed as to the legality of the gaoler shooting a prisoner. On the 19th December 1833 eighteen convicts conspired to escape, by breaking open the pew doors in the chapel, taking the keys away, and proceeding to the gate, seizing the porter, and letting themselves out. These occurrences have made the keeper feel the necessity of being constantly prepared against an attack.

3. Religious and other Instruction.

Chaplain.

The chaplain is the Rev. John Hickley Lewis. He is 30 years of age, and resides about two miles from the prison. He is also chaplain of the old gaol at Chelmsford. He reads prayers, selected from the Liturgy, in the chapel daily, at a quarter before nine, then proceeds to Chelmsford gaol, and afterwards returns here, when he goes round and visits the prisoners for an hour or two. He sees all the prisoners who are in solitary confinement, or under punishment, several times in the week. The morning and evening services of the church of England are performed on Sundays, when a sermon is delivered. The Holy Communion has never been administered in this prison, except to convicts under sentence of death. The chaplain keeps a journal, but no character book. The chapel is too small, having been originally built for 60 prisoners, and not having been altered since: as more than 300 sometimes assemble in it, it is not only crowded in a disorderly way, but often very offensive, especially in hot weather. The inspection is also imperfect; and the officers' seats are so placed that all the prisoners can see and watch the officers, and could, if they pleased, drop anything from the gallery upon their heads. They have thrown stones into the governor's pew on two occasions. The prisoners have to pass from their respective yards through the middle yard, and in their way pass other yards, by which means communication can be readily kept up.

Chapel.

The prisoners are occasionally detected in communicating during chapel, as well as in the way to it. A list of absentees from the chapel is kept daily, and shown to the chaplain, who inquires into the cause of absence. The keeper, and two or three of the turnkeys, attend chapel regularly; but, on Sundays, the keeper is in the habit of going round the prison to examine the cells, &c., during divine service, so that he is not present the whole time.

Books.

The books are under the entire supervision of the chaplain, and consist of Bibles, Prayer-books, and tracts selected from the publications of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

School.

One of the turnkeys on the establishment is employed as schoolmaster, and is engaged in instructing prisoners for about four hours a-day. Prisoners before trial are taught in classes in their day-rooms, and the convicted assemble in the chapel in classes of from three to about twenty each. They are taught reading and spelling, and occasionally writing on slates. During school the prisoners have opportunities of talking, and sometimes converse.

Effect of Instruction.

The great majority of prisoners being confined for terms of two and three months, and under, there is not sufficient time for the instruction to produce, in general, any moral effect.

4. Health.

Surgeons.

There are three surgeons, practising in Chelmsford, who are appointed to attend the prison in rotation, in alternate years. The provisional rules require the surgeon to visit the prison twice at least in every week, and oftener if necessary, and see every prisoner—to keep a journal—and, upon notice from the keeper, to attend to examine prisoners on admission before they are passed into their wards. We regret, however, to be obliged to state, that the attendance of the surgeons of this prison appears to have been by no means regular for some time past. The surgeon in rotation had, we found, only attended ten times between the 3rd of January and the 12th of February last, (the time of our visit,) having delegated his duties to a youthful assistant, whose qualifications for so important an office were very doubtful. It is the practice to make out a sick-list, containing the names of such prisoners as say they wish to see the surgeon; and the surgeon visits those whose names are on such list, but no others, whether in solitary cells or otherwise. Nor is it the custom to send for the surgeon immediately on the admission of a prisoner, so that he is passed into the ward without medical examination. On going through the keeper's journal for several years, we have found instances from time to time recorded, indicative of negligence on the part of the surgeons, and that, in consequence, the keeper has been obliged to exercise a discretion, in cases of sudden illness, and of punishment, which does not properly fall within the limits of his duty. The surgeon for the present year has not kept the journal in the form required by the visiting justices, but has merely signed his name on the occasion of his attendance.

Infirmaries.

The infirmaries are placed in the angles of the front boundary-wall, and are consequently remote from the rest of the prison. Silence is not enforced, and the only supervision is that of the nurse, a prisoner, with occasional visits of a turnkey. We found three sick prisoners in the infirmary, and one in the adjoining lazaretto-room, under sentence of transportation, but unfit to be removed on account of a peculiar complaint in his face.

Sickness.

Scurvy.

We found 31 prisoners on the casual sick-list, and a short time previous about 70 had been affected by the prevailing influenza. In the year ending Michaelmas 1836 the proportion of cases of slight indisposition to the whole number in confinement was 35 per cent.; that of infirmary cases 8·48 per cent.; and of deaths ·34 per cent. The most prevalent disease is one deserving very serious attention, inasmuch as it is clearly the result of hard labour for too protracted periods, with inadequate diet,—namely, scurvy, or Purpura hæmorrhagica. This disease may be described to be a state in which the blood dissolves, and the serum, which is the vehicle for transmitting the red particles, separates and deposits itself elsewhere. The constitution is in a condition of decay, and, as the first symptoms of it, the gums become swelled and spongy, and the legs are cramped and painful, with red spots appearing on them. The disease usually appears after several months of tread-wheel labour, the period varying according to the constitution of the prisoner; and it very rarely happens that a prisoner can stand the wheel for 12 months, or even nine months, without his health suffering. The scurvy will generally yield to a more nutritious diet, and to tonics and acids, but, after an interval, it will often break out again in the same patient. It first appeared in this prison in the year 1826; in 1827 it prevailed to an alarming extent; and it has continued, more or less, to affect the prisoners down to the present time. We saw several prisoners having the symptoms above described at the time of our inspection. We regret to be obliged to add that cases have occurred in which it is too plain that this disease has been mistaken by the medical attendants. We have carefully perused a mass of documentary evidence, which we thought it right to call for, consisting of journals, post-mortem examinations, &c., and which leave no doubt in our minds upon this head, and upon the real nature and causes of the disease. The great length of these documents alone prevents us from appending them to this Report.

Diet.

That the scurvy in this prison is attributable to the combined effect of hard labour, with inadequate and insufficiently-varied diet, is further evident from the fact of no such disorder existing in the old gaol at Chelmsford, which is damp, and in local respects less healthy than Springfield, but where there is no tread-wheel labour. The Springfield diet was increased after the great prevalence of scurvy in 1827, and is now fixed, by the provisional rules, at 1½ lb. of bread daily, with a quart of gruel; after one month's confinement, another 1½ oz. of oatmeal in the gruel, or 2 oz. of boiled rice; after three months a pint of meat soup, instead of the extra oatmeal or rice, three times a-week; and for prisoners actually engaged in hard labour, an extra allowance of 4 oz. of bread and 2 oz. of cheese. The provisional rules comprising the dietary table are publicly affixed about the prison. The cost of the diet per head per annum is stated at £4. 6*s*. 10*d*., or 1*s*. 10¼*d*. per week. For the dietary table, see Appendix (A).

Prisoners supplying themselves.

Prisoners before trial, not able wholly to maintain themselves, are allowed, in addition to the gaol allowance, to receive provisions from their friends, or to purchase to the amount of

Clothing.

2*s.* 6*d.* per week. They may purchase as much as a quart of beer per day. It appears that the extra eatables are not only given, but often sold, by prisoners to each other, or exchanged for tobacco. The misconduct of the late turnkey, Mead, in assisting the prisoners to obtain money, led to various abuses of this description.

The cost of the prison clothing and bedding together are returned at £2. 14*s.* 9*d.* per head per annum. There is only one woollen dress, purchased from a London clothier; with a distinction by stripes for felons. There is no variation in summer, except that stockings are then not worn. The prisoners are always punished when detected in destroying their clothing or bedding; and it occurs not unfrequently. The following are instances:—

1830.
April 10. Locked up D. W. for cutting his bed.
13. Ditto R. T. cutting trousers.
15. Ditto S. S. cutting a blanket.
1831.
April 9. Ditto W. S. and W. B. destroying clothing.
14. W. P., a prisoner about to be discharged, was detected destroying county clothing, and was taken before the visiting magistrates, who sentenced him to be whipped in the presence of the other prisoners, which was done this morning.
July 2. Locked up A. S. for cutting the buttons off jacket and waistcoat.
1832.
Jan. 5. Ditto W. J. for destroying bedding.
June 28. Ditto J. D., J. Y., W. F., J. R., and H. C., for cutting blankets.
1836.
May 14. Ditto M. O. and W. N. for destroying a hat belonging to another prisoner.
July 5. Ditto F. W. for cutting the county clothing.

Bedding.

Each prisoner is supplied with a straw mattress, two blankets, and a rug. Some years ago apprehensions were entertained that the stone bedsteads were not healthy; but a number of prisoners being examined on the subject, their testimony (which we have seen) was almost unanimous that they preferred stone to iron bedsteads, as being warmer. The bedding is aired in the yards in fine weather, but not through the winter.

Washing.

Every prisoner washes his own shirt in the yard. There are washing-places in the yards for four prisoners at a time: soap, towels, and combs are allowed; but the latter are generally broken and dirty.

The prison is whitewashed several times a-year; the rooms and cells are washed frequently, according to the weather. The prison appeared generally clean at the time of inspection.

5. Prison Punishments.

Punishments.

The number of punishments inflicted in the year ending Michaelmas 1836 was 117, or about 10 per cent. upon the whole number in confinement in the year; a very small proportion, compared to that in some other prisons where the Silent System is in force. The nature of the offences and punishments will be found in the annexed Return (Appendix E).

The instrument of whipping is a cat-o'-nine-tails. On a late occasion (17th Jan. 1837), when a prisoner was whipped with 50 lashes, pursuant to his sentence, the surgeon was sent for by the keeper, but did not attend, sending "his compliments to the keeper, and hoped he could do without him." The prisoner's father being waiting at the gate to receive him on his discharge, the flogging was not postponed, and was thererefore performed without the surgeon's presence.

6. Officers.

Officers.

For a list of the officers, and of their emoluments, we beg to refer to the Appendix (A); and, for a description of the duties performed by them, to the subjoined statement (Appendix G), obtained from the keeper.

Keeper.

The keeper is Mr. Thomas Charles Neale, who has governed this prison from the time of its erection. He gives security to the sheriff to the amount of £3,000. He is also keeper of the old gaol at Chelmsford, about a mile from Springfield, and is consequently obliged to devote a portion of his time to the service of that gaol. This arrangement is highly improper as regards this prison, and contrary to law, as regards Chelmsford gaol, which has thus no resident keeper.

The keeper, three turnkeys, and porter, reside in the prison, with one of two turnkeys who reside out of it, but perform the night-duty alternately, and two watchmen, for the staff at night. The principal turnkey does not reside in the prison. We submit, however, that, in a large prison like this, it would be desirable that he should do so, as the occasional absence of the keeper with convicts for transportation, &c., is unavoidable.

Misconduct of Turnkey.

The misconduct of David Mead, lately one of the turnkeys, who absconded the 2nd January last, with money belonging to prisoners, has been the cause of great irregularities for some time past; he having been in the habit of introducing money, tobacco, and provisions, in violation of the rules, and having actually proposed to two prisoners to join him in committing a robbery. The particulars of this case are contained in the keeper's statement (Appendix I).

The magistrates, considering that they had no power to punish this man for breach of duty, issued a warrant against him for fraud upon the prisoners. He, however, effected his escape, and, if he should be taken, there is some doubt whether an indictment will lie against him; consequently, it is probable that he may escape punishment altogether.

Miller.

The case of George Willis, one of the turnkeys, and employed as miller, requires remark. In the year 1830 charges were preferred against this officer by the keeper, for conveying money to the prisoners, and deriving a profit to himself from such conveyance. The charges were investigated by four visiting magistrates, who, upon the evidence of four prisoners, determined that the charges were established to their satisfaction, and directed that the miller should be discharged. He was, however, befriended by a magistrate, since deceased, who, contending that the testimony of the prisoners ought not to have been received, and that the Court of Quarter Sessions alone had power to dismiss an officer, prevailed upon the other magistrates to rescind their order of dismissal, and the miller has remained in the service to this day.

Power of Dismission.

This case appears to show the necessity of there being some more summary power of removing officers than that vested in the Court of Quarter Sessions by the 25th section of the Gaol Act, 4 Geo. IV. The provisional rules for this prison, indeed, enable the keeper to suspend an inferior officer until the next meeting of the visiting magistrates.

The turnkey who suffered the escape of the prisoners Monk and Cordery was ordered by the court to pay the reward of £10 offered for the recovery of the latter, who was retaken, or to be dismissed; and he has, we understand, paid the penalty and retained his situation.

Books.

The several books kept in the prison are specified in the following list:—

1. A receiving-book.
2. A description-book.
3. Roll-book.
4. Separate jurisdiction accounts.
5. Number, distribution, and daily employment of prisoners.
6. Governor's journal.
7. Chaplain's journal.
8. Surgeon's journal.
9. Sick-list.
10. Absentees from chapel.
11. Prisoners' friends' visit-book.
12. Magistrates' visit-book.
13. Letter-book.
14. Order-book for repairs, supplies, &c.
15. Governor's order-book.
16. Account of coals issued.
17. Account of clothing.

7. Miscellaneous.

Population.

From the Returns (Appendix F) the total population of the prison appears to have been—

|---|---|
| On 13th February 1835 . . . . . | 277 |
| „ 1836 . . . . . | 233 |
| „ 1837 . . . . . | 238 |

The total number committed in the course of the last three years has been—

|---|---|
| Year ending Michaelmas 1834 . . . | 1,309 |
| „ 1835 . . . | 1,171 |
| „ 1836 . . . | 1,012 |

Insane Prisoners.

At the time of our inspection there was a prisoner, George Risby, committed 7th August 1834, on charge of murder, who had been insane, but was stated to be no longer so, and had no appearance of insanity. He was employed as baker and cook. There was also an idiotic prisoner, John Aldham, aged 20, confined in yard No. 12, for want of bail to keep the peace. He appeared to be an unfit subject for a prison; but, as he cannot find sureties, he is likely to remain here, perhaps, for years.

Recommittals.

The proportion of persons previously committed to the whole number committed, in the year ending Michaelmas 1836, is returned at no less than 49 per cent.

Juvenile Offenders.

The proportion of offenders not exceeding the age of 17, in the same year, was 10·56 per cent.

Military Prisoners.
Smugglers.

The usual allowances of 6*d.* per day for military prisoners, and 4½*d.* per day for smugglers, are received; and, if the latter are sentenced to hard labour, the Board of Customs allows 6*d.* per day.

Debtors.

Debtors are not confined in this gaol, but exclusively in the old gaol at Chelmsford.

Means of Improvement.

So long as the Silent System is professed as an instrument of corrective discipline in this prison, it will be obvious, from what has been stated, that it ought to be enforced with far greater rigour than at present, and that an addition to the number of officers, and to the means of inspection, will, for such purpose, be indispensable. If a system of extended separation be introduced, a very considerable alteration and enlargement of the prison must be anticipated. Considering the bad state of the old gaol at Chelmsford, and the probable necessity of soon discontinuing it, an opportunity may, before long, present itself of erecting a new county prison for the individual separation of prisoners.

We beg to refer to the Appendices to this Report.

No. 18.—Dietary.

The soup is made of two ounces of meat to the pint, with half a pint of peas and a sufficient quantity of pepper and salt to each gallon.

The gruel and rice is made according to the prison rules.

No. 19.—Tread-wheel labour.

There are gyrometers attached to the wheels, but they are not now in operation. The calculations are made from observation and numerous experiments made for the purpose in the course of several years, compared with Bale's sliding scale for tread-wheel labour.

The velocity of the wheels is subject to variation, and depends on the quantity of corn with which the miller feeds the stones.

The velocity is also affected by the number and weight of the prisoners employed; but this is in a great measure provided against by having regulators, which can be attached to two of the wheels, so that two men, or three boys, will perform the same number of revolutions as a larger number of men, but great precision cannot be attained even by these means.

No. 20.—Scale of Crank-labour.

There is also a crank-pump for supplying the prison with water, at which 18 men can work; but the revolutions are very irregular, depending on the number, the strength, and the inclination of the prisoners. The highest number of revolutions in a day, recorded by the gyrometer, is 16,275 in 10 hours. The cranks are 7 feet 9 inches each in the clear. There are also two capstans, at each of which 32 men can be employed when not sentenced to hard labour. The greatest number of revolutions in 10 hours, recorded by the gyrometer, is 1,918.

The distance which each man travels will, of course, vary with the distance at which he works from the centre of the capstan; the radius from the centre to the end of each bar, is 7 feet 11 inches; the diameter of the drum-head of the capstan, 2 feet 10½ inches. Four men can conveniently work at each bar, and there are eight bars to each capstan. One man can turn either of the capstans with ease; they are connected with the tread-wheel flies, and are not applied to any useful purpose.

APPENDIX (B).

Extracts from Keeper's Journal, as to Escape of Prisoners Monk and Cordery.

Feb. 2d.—Left the prison at 5 A. M. with nine prisoners for Portsmouth in the van.

Feb. 4th.—Returned by the Chelmsford coach this evening, and was informed that J. M. had escaped from the prison.

He had the itch, and was placed in one of the rooms intended for vagrants with that disease. Being a convicted felon, he ought not to have been removed from his cell, as it is well known to be the practice to keep convicted felons in their cells until they are cured. W. Marson, the turnkey, in whose custody the prisoner was, should not have removed him, at least without my special order. J. Dean, an assistant turnkey, attended the surgeon, and removed M. into the room, supposing he was doing right. During the night between the 1st and 2d instant he broke a window-frame, which enabled him to force his way between some iron bars at the window; he then got into the yard, and was able to open the door of the room, which was bolted on the outside, but not locked, as it ought to have been by H. James, whose duty it was to have locked that door on that night.

Having opened the room door, he dressed himself, and procured in the room some pieces of boards, which had been old steps of the tread-wheels, with which he succeeded in scaling the outer wall.

J. L. and J. B., two other prisoners, were confined in the same room with M., and say they called out but could make nobody hear. Hand-bills were published and persons went to look for the prisoner, but without success.

Feb. 5th.—About half-past 8 o'clock this morning Mr. Pearson, the first turnkey, informed me that J. Cordery, a prisoner for trial for sheep-stealing, was not to be found. On inquiry, James Dean states that he saw C. at locking up last night, at about half-past 4 o'clock, and he afterwards saw him in his cell; that he (Dean) went up stairs and locked up the prisoners; that as he came down he locked up C.'s cell, and said " good night," and heard him cough, and saw him move in bed, as he thought, but has now no doubt that it was another prisoner in that cell, and he must have locked up an empty cell up stairs.

That C.'s hat was on the floor, with his smock-frock thrown over it, so that it appeared to be a bundle of clothes as large as usual, placed in the passage, opposite to the cell door, which induced Dean to suppose that he was stripped and in bed. The probability is that he slipped out and hid himself in the privy until it was quite dark, and then watched an opportunity and got round between the walls, and scaled the boundary wall, as M. had done before.

Sent W. Marson to Walthamstow, Dagenham, and Stapleford Abbott, and H. James to Witham, Colchester, and Cambridge; wrote to the Right Honourable Lord Rayleigh, to Bow-street office, &c., &c.

Feb. 7th.—George Saunders, a labourer, near the gaol, informed me that on Friday he saw a coal carter from Broxted, who told him that J. M. was then in Fennel wood, and had been frequently seen, and had been seen to go to his father's at Brick End; and that he had last year lived three months in the same wood. I immediately ordered a fish van and a pair of horses, and at 5 o'clock in the evening started with intent to search the wood, if the information should prove to be correct. The party consisted of myself, W. Pearson, J. Parchment, H. James, T. French, W. Newman, Gosling, Stevens, Weatherly, and G. Saunders; we stopped at the Star inn, Dunmow, to make inquiry, and Mr. Holmes, a master baker, confirmed the report, and gave some useful information which was to guide us in our search. On arriving at ————————, I sent a party with a guide to M.'s father's house, at Brick End, having ascertained that George Monk had been seen to go into his father's house, and William Prior, the guide, had seen J. M. and George together in the wood, when George brought victuals to his brother. The party returned, bringing the father and his son George; but they had refused to open the door, and it was necessary to make a forcible entry at the window; they are a desperate set of people. As there was no charge could be substantiated against the father, James not being found in his house, I let him go home, but brought George home with me. We reached the gaol at 3 o'clock on Wednesday morning.

Feb. 8.—Took G. M. to Mr. Bartlett's office, where he was examined before R. C. Haselfoot and J. Boggis, Esqrs., who committed him for re-examination on Tuesday next.

Feb. 13.—J. C., who escaped on the 4th instant, was brought back by Thomas Brunt, of the Metropolitan Police, T 98. He took the prisoner in consequence of seeing the description which I had sent by Mr. Marson, one of the turnkeys, to the police office, Mile End. The prisoner says Marson was twice so close in pursuit of him that he had great difficulty in escaping, and had to jump out of a two pair of stairs window. I asked him how he got out of the prison: he said, " I sneaked out;" which he explained by saying that he made up his bed to appear as if somebody was in it; and he climbed on to the wall by the assistance of some pieces of board; but that he could not let himself down, but fell from the top of the wall, and lay for two hours unable to move.

APPENDIX (G).

Employment of Officers.

24th February 1837.

The officers belonging to the prison were the following:—

- Mr. T. C. Neale, governor.
- W. Pearson, first turnkey.
- J. Parchment, turnkey.
- W. Marson, ditto.
- J. Dean, assistant.
- S. Hoy, porter.
- H. James, shoemaker.
- D. Rust, watchman.
- G. Willis, miller.
- W. Springham, schoolmaster.
- J. Gutteridge, night-watchman.

From 12 to 2 o'clock the following distribution of the officers had taken place:—

The Governor was sent for to attend the magistrates at Chelmsford relative to an insane prisoner.

W. Pearson was in the visiting cells, attending to the visits of prisoners' friends.

J. Parchment was engaged in the cook-house, preparing the prisoners' dinner.

W. Marson was at Chelmsford, having two prisoners in custody for examination,

J. Dean had another prisoner in custody, who was sent for after Marson arrived at Chelmsford.

S. Hoy was at his station at the front gate.

H. James was with the shoemakers in the day-room in No. 11.

D. Rust was with a gang of prisoners engaged in cleaning some cells, and removing stones, &c., at Chelmsford gaol.

G. Willis had gone home to dinner.

W. Springham was at his post in the chapel, teaching the prisoners.

J. Gutteridge was not on duty in the day-time, being only a night watchman.

There were eight prisoners brought into custody in the course of the day; six were received by Mr. Pearson while attending the visits.

The Governor is of opinion that the number of officers is totally inadequate to the duties required, if every duty is to be properly and promptly performed; for while engaged in one duty, another must necessarily be neglected; for example: when the officers were thus distributed, and just before J. Dean was sent for, the chaplain arrived, and was going round the prison; Dean was obliged to leave him, and the inspection of the prison by the chaplain was interrupted. The solitary prisoners, four in charge of W. Pearson, and other four in J. Dean's custody, must be neglected until they were at liberty to attend to them.

The Governor is of opinion that there can be no check over the prisoners to prevent their destroying clothing, or doing any act contrary to the prison rules.

There are nine gaol deliveries in the course of the year, i. e. two assize, four quarter-sessions, and three adjourned sessions; when, besides the interruption to which the discipline is ordinarily subject, is superadded the numerous circumstances of attending the court, removing the prisoners, admitting attorneys, &c. &c.; and the Governor states that at times the prison is not left with sufficient force to render it safe if the prisoners were prepared to take advantage of the absence of the officers.

The ordinary duties of the Turnkeys are as follows:

W. Pearson, first turnkey, has charge of Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4; keeps the number-book, extra allowance-book, and list of absentees from chapel; attends visits, makes out the daily morning return of the number and distribution of the prisoners in custody; constantly attends to the business within the prison, has charge of solitary prisoners, on duty constantly two days and one night. Relieved by W. Marson.

J. Parchment has charge of Nos. 9, 10, 11, and 12, and solitary prisoners; attends to the cooking of the gruel and soup, cuts up and issues the extra allowance of bread and cheese; has charge of the provisions, and issues soup and coals to the prisoners; on duty two days and one night, off one evening until half-past 10 o'clock. Relieves the porter at the front gate.

W. Marson has charge of Nos. 5, 6, 7, and 8; classes the prisoners and makes out the roll-book, the discharge-list, the conviction-list, makes out the daily evening return of the number of prisoners in custody, attends at the shire-hall with prisoners for examination, also at the assizes and sessions, and proves in court the former convictions of prisoners; two days and one night on duty. Relieved by W. Pearson one night.

J. Dean has charge of Nos. 13 and 14; keeps the receiving-book and the description-book, makes out the calendars and numerous returns, regulates the number at work on each wheel, and keeps the account; makes out the sick-list, and attends the Surgeon and the shopkeeper who supplies the prisoners with provisions; attends the shire-hall with prisoners for examination, and at the assizes and sessions.

W. Springham attends as schoolmaster; has charge of the store-rooms and all the bedding and clothing, attends to the dressing of the prisoners and keeping their clothing and bedding in good order.

H. James, the shoemaker, teaches six prisoners at a time to make and mend shoes for prisoners; has charge of the prisoners' own shoes, and supplies them with county shoes; assists at locking up the prisoners, being stationed with the key in the front yard. Attends at the post-office every morning for letters.

D. Mead, assisted in locking up convicted felons; required to see the cells, passages and day-rooms cleaned, the beds made, the cell pots emptied and cleaned, the windows opened every morning.

D. Rust, watchman, has charge of all working tools, &c. and attends prisoners at work between the walls. Is the messenger to send out when necessary.

SAMUEL HOY, porter, attends the outer gate; is two days and one night on duty; relieved one evening by J. Parchment, from locking up till half-past 10 o'clock.

DAVID MEAD, an assistant turnkey, was sent to the printer's, at Chelmsford, with the continuation of the calendar, on the afternoon of the 2d January 1837, and did not return. The printer sent for the calendar in the evening, and it was thus discovered that the continuation had not been delivered, and the calendar would not have been printed in time for the sessions, if this discovery had not been made.

The following statement was made by the governor:—On the 4th January, Joseph Slaughter applied to the governor, stating that Mead had received a sum of money for him and had absconded with £4. 10*s*. On inquiry it appeared that Slaughter, who was a convicted misdemeanant, employed as a yardsman, said to Mead, "Do you think, Mr. Mead, that the governor will let me send another letter home?" He replied, "Oh, if you write it and give it to me, I'll put it in the post for you.'"

Slaughter wrote the letter, directing that some clothes and money should be sent to the Three Cups public-house, near the gaol. Mead applied for them, and obtained possession of the clothes and money, and took some of the clothes and all the money away with him. At another time Slaughter had been detected gambling, for which he knew he should be punished: he therefore asked Mead to take care of some money for him, so that it should not be found if he was searched; and, in point of fact, Mead informed Slaughter, and other prisoners, when he knew a search was ordered, by which means they were always enabled to secrete such articles as they knew would be seized if discovered.

Mead brought in tobacco and provisions; he asked Slaughter and Cordery to join him in robbing Mr. Coates, a respectable coal merchant, whom he pointed out to them, and whom he supposed came from Maldon to Chelmsford every Saturday evening by a very lonesome and dull road. He had received 2*s*. from another prisoner which he should have delivered to the first turnkey, but he absconded with 1*s*. 9*d*. of that sum; and, as the magistrates considered that there was no other case which could be instituted, a warrant was issued for fraud, but he has not been taken.

CHELMSFORD GAOL AND HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

1. Site, Construction, &c.

Chelmsford Gaol and House of Correction.
Description.

This prison is the sheriff's gaol for debtors, and also a gaol and house of correction for female prisoners. It fronts the street of the town of Chelmsford, and one side is bounded by the river Chelmar. It is an old building on an irregular plan, having been erected upwards of 60 years since, and no material alteration having been made in it for 30 years. It was formerly used also as a county gaol and house of correction for male prisoners, but in 1825 they were transferred to the new prison at Springfield. This gaol is capable of containing 85 prisoners in separate sleeping apartments, and about 300 with more than one sleeping in the same room. The number and dimensions of the several rooms are stated in the Appendix; in addition to which there are the apartments in the keeper's house, which, by permission of the magistrates, he lets, at certain fixed rates, to such debtors as can afford to pay for them. The accommodation, such as it is, would be more than sufficient for the separation by night of all prisoners committed, the greatest number in custody at any one time in the last three years having been 74.

Insecurity.

The sleeping cells are, however, not all used, being mostly damp, and being built like ovens, without any ventilation, except a small aperture above the door. There are 12 wards, including the infirmary, each having a day-room and airing-yard. The access to several of the wards is very inconvenient, as they can only be entered by going through other wards, and there are no means whatever of private inspection. The prison is out of repair in many parts, and the gravel in the yards out of order. It is not fire-proof. The prison is insecure. On one occasion a prisoner escaped by pulling the bricks out of the roof of his cell, by which means he got into a room above the cell, and out of a window in the roof of the building. Another prisoner escaped from his cell by the same means, and got into a room above, and attempted to break through the roof, but was detected. The brick foundation has been rendered so soft by damp, that prisoners have worked their way through it, and could do so now. Two of the yards, Nos. 10 and 11, are overlooked by the windows of adjoining houses, with which communication is perfectly easy; and the boundary wall being only of the height of 14 feet, there is every facility for escape. The prisoners have been detected in throwing stones against these windows. The circumstance of the windows of the rooms in the keeper's house inhabited by the master-debtors, fronting the street, also tends to insecurity, for baskets have been lowered from them to the street, and it was lately found necessary to remove a male debtor to another part of the prison, in consequence of his exposing himself improperly at one of these windows. The drainage is imperfect, and the privies in a bad state. A privy in ward No. 10 was particularly offensive, and tainted the air in the bed-room in which five female vagrants and three children were sleeping to a degree perfectly noxious and destructive of health. This privy has been in the same state for some years, and we desired the keeper to call the immediate attention of the Visiting Justices to the impropriety of allowing any prisoner, and much more young children, to sleep in so noisome a place. Some of the rooms are so damp as to be unfit for habitation, and the walls and floors are more or less affected by damp throughout the building. The prison is liable to inundation from the river. On one occasion the overflow of the river was so great, that the water rose to the height of 22 inches in the cells in ward No. 8—of 24 inches in ward No. 9—and of three feet in the women's infirmary; and the prisoners were obliged to be removed up stairs. A similar flood may be anticipated again at any heavy fall of rain; considering which, as well as the publicity of the situation, fronting a street of great thoroughfare, and overlooked by other houses, the locality appears ill suited for the purposes of a prison.

2. Discipline, Management, &c.

Divisions.

This prison is governed by the provisional rules approved by His Majesty's Secretary of State for the several prisons in the city of Essex. Its inmates have been already stated to consist,—first, of female criminals; and, secondly, of debtors. These occupy distinct divisions of the prison, and ought not even to see each other. The female yards may, however, be seen from the debtors' windows, and especially from a balcony at the back of the keeper's house, in which the master-debtors are in the habit of walking. The debtors also see the female prisoners in their way to, and whilst in, chapel. Notes have been thrown over to the female yards by the debtors, but not lately. The classification of the female prisoners was not exactly conformable to law. In the yard No 11, for instance, convicted misdemeanants and vagrants were placed together; and in the yard No. 3 there were five women committed for trial for felony; one on charge of murder, and acquitted on the ground of insanity; and one convicted of felony, employed as nurse to attend on the insane woman. The distribution of the prisoners at the time of our inspection is stated in the Return (Appendix B). The female criminals associate by day, both before and after trial, unless when working at the crank-machine—that labour being performed in solitude. The testimony of the female officers, and of several prisoners examined by us, concurs in the fact that bad language and swearing is not uncommon, and that the more decent young women are corrupted by association with bad characters. The magistrates appear to be sensible of this, and occasionally order the separation of young women, to save them from contamination. We found a servant girl (S. W.) aged 19, convicted of robbing her master, who had been confined in a separate room for nearly nine months, by desire of her master, one of the county magistrates. The separation appeared to have had a very favourable effect upon her disposition, and she expressed herself grateful for it. Her room was, however, so near the yard, that she said she was often annoyed by the bad language and quarrelling of the other women; and she knew there was one prisoner in the yard of very depraved character. The women sleep some in separate cells, others several in a room together. Silence is not enforced, except so far as to prevent any great noise or disturbance. Visitors are received, under the regulations prescribed by the Provisional Rules, at the gate of the female turnkey's apartments, in her presence; and all letters are inspected by the keeper, or matron. The employment consists of washing and needle-work, and of the crank-machine for hard labour, which a woman is made to turn 3,000 times as a day's task. The latter is much disliked, but there are not wheels enough to employ all that are sentenced to labour. Shirts are made and mended here for the male prisoners in Springfield gaol. The use of money is allowed to females before trial, to the extent of 2*s.* 6*d.* per week, pursuant to the Provisional Rules. Tobacco is rarely introduced, but snuff is allowed to some women by order of the magistrates.

Male Criminal.

There is one male prisoner on the criminal side, whose case is somewhat extraordinary, viz. D. A., who has been an inmate of this prison for 22 years. He was committed on 16th January 1815, for want of sureties to keep the peace towards his father, and was retained in this gaol as a sweeper and cleaner when the other male prisoners were removed to Springfield. He is now above 50 years of age, and appears perfectly content with his situation. He has the extra diet, including 6 ozs. of meat per week, and also 9*d.* per week for his services, which consist of cleaning the chapel, and other parts of the gaol. He cleans the front windows of the keeper's house, outside the gaol, and has occasionally been sent upon errands, by himself, into the town, not being suspected of any inclination to leave his quarters. The confidence reposed in this functionary has, however, lately been much shaken, for the reason stated in the following extract from the keeper's journal:—

"3d August 1836. On going round Chelmsford gaol I found two debtors, J. P. and W. F. in the house of correction yard of 6 cell, where they ought not to be at any time; they said they had gone there to see the old man, meaning D. A., whom I found in his cell drunk. J. P. said, in answer to a question as to how he got drunk, 'he had it amongst us all,' meaning the debtors. I removed D. A. to Springfield prison, and locked him in a refractory cell for being drunk. He told Mead the turnkey that he thought he must have drunk two gallons of beer, but refused to tell who gave it to him." The magistrates afterwards ordered him back to Chelmsford gaol, on the governor's application.

Debtors.

The treatment of debtors is prescribed by the 16th Regulation, contained in the Provisional Rules. At the time of our visit there were nine debtors receiving county allowance, and occupying a ward in the gaol, comprising seven rooms; and five master-debtors (including one female), occupying private rooms hired by them in the keeper's house.

"Poor" Debtors.

The "poor" debtors were sleeping, in two instances, two in one room, which is prohibited by the Gaol Act, as much in the case of debtors as of any other prisoners. They associate at pleasure without restriction. Upon examining some of the debtors, we find that they have heard swearing and profane talk among their associates; that more beer has been introduced than the quart per day per man allowed by the rules; and that spirits are occasionally brought in by friends. "I have known more instances than one," said J. R., a prisoner, "of friends bringing in a bottle of gin, and I have seen prisoners tipsy since I have been here." The turnkey confessed that he did not usually search the bundles and parcels brought by the debtors' visitors, but thought it very likely that spirits were brought in, as he had seen several of the debtors a little flush. The same prisoner, J. R., stated that he had played at whist, and that whist and other games at cards were often played in the winter evenings. Another of the common debtors (S. K.) said that the association with so many was very disagreeable. "They use," said he, "very bad language—they get hardened and dissatisfied, and think every body their enemy." This discontented spirit leads to quarrelling, and the general laxity of discipline must obviously have a depraving tendency. Newspapers were in use by several debtors. The common debtors are not confined strictly within their own ward, but sometimes come into the keeper's house and visit the master-debtors.

Master Debtors.

The master-debtors live comfortably, having the means of cooking, &c., in the house, and their rooms being mostly large, with a cheerful view into the street. The prices of the rooms are fixed by the magistrates, and painted on the doors. The net profit derived from them by the keeper is stated, in the year to Michaelmas 1836, at £26. 6*s.* One of the debtors complained of the charge being too high; but, however this may be, it is most objectionable that the keeper should receive any emoluments of such a description, as the relation of debtor and creditor is one which it is dangerous to permit to subsist between a gaoler and his prisoner.

Female Debtor.

There was one female debtor at the time of our visit. When she was committed last summer, she was placed, according to the usual practice, in a room in the male debtors' ward, there being no distinct division for female debtors, and used to receive visits from male debtors, and associate with them freely in the yard. It was stated to us that she had been seen exposing herself indecently in her bed-room in the presence of the male debtors, and that on one occasion she mounted a ladder and danced on the leads for the amusement of the male prisoners. After a time, the magistrates, perceiving the impropriety of her situation, ordered her to be removed to the female infirmary, when she hired a large room in the keeper's house, looking into the street, at the rent of 8*s.* per week. After her removal she mixed with the male debtors on the balcony, and received occasional visits from them in her room. . . . Her debt was about £19, and she was living at an expense of from 25*s.* to 30*s.* per week; keeping a servant, who attended constantly upon her.

Former Male Criminals.

Before the removal of the male criminals to Springfield in October 1825 there was a tread-wheel for hard labour; but, from the association, want of inspection, and imperfections of the building, it was difficult to preserve order among the prisoners. The keeper related to us that the turnkey had overheard a pig-stealer, who slept in a room with four others, instructing another with great minuteness how to steal a pig—an instance, among many, of the mischievous effects of association. The following extracts from the keeper's journal will give a notion of the state of discipline before the male criminals were removed:—

1822.

Sept. 10.—W. W., a convicted felon, employed in the shoemaker's shop, was detected stealing a large quantity of leather.

Oct. 16.— –. N., the yardsman on duty at the tread-wheel in the felons' yard, had allowed some of the men for trial to get on the wheel to relieve those who ought exclusively to work on it.

,, 18.—The magistrates ordered N. to work on the tread-wheel for one week.

,, 28.—The prisoners were singing on the tread-wheel, and Y., the yardsman, would not tell who they were until he was threatened to be locked up, when he named several.

1823.

May 24.—M., the yardsman, put on the wheel for allowing two men to be absent when they ought to have been at work.

Nov. 8.—The proper complement of men not on the wheel; and C. T., alias J. B. (formerly a man in respectable circumstances as an auctioneer, &c., in Cheshire), who was the yardsman, jumped off the wheel on the governor entering the yard.

March 16.—Locked up W. S. and W. W. for playing at dice; the box was made of a piece of an old shoe, and the dice were square pieces of wood with the dots burnt in.

April 9.—W. S. was detected playing with dominoes of the same manufacture as the above-mentioned dice.

,, 28.—J. P. locked up for cutting the tops off a pair of new stockings, with which he had been supplied last week.

Sept. 7.—The prisoners in their cells kept up a correspondence by whistling, which seemed perfectly intelligible to them, as we judged by the manner of responding.

1824.

March 23.—The prisoners in chapel communicated a plan for them to "strike" working on the tread-wheel, which was carried into effect.

,, 26.—The convicts under sentence of transportation proposed to seize the turnkey in the chapel, "douſe him," take his key from him, open a door which leads into a garden, and escape over the wall. The governor heard the conversation, and the prisoners were secured.

Aug. 30.—J. P. was tried before a court composed of prisoners. W. J. as judge, and — G. as sheriff. There was a jury, &c. The offence, asking for a mallet to beat his oakum; sentenced to be beaten with a leather strap, which was done; but, on complaint made by P., the judge and sheriff were put under arrest.

Oct. 4.—J. L. attempted to stab Mr. Neale, the knife bent against his ribs, but being blunt no wound was made.

1825.

March 13.—Sunday. A plan was discovered by which some of the prisoners intended to escape during the time of divine service.

May 27.—J. L. attacked Mr. Neale with a broomstick; but the latter, being rather too expert as a swordsman, broke L.'s head with his cane, and disarmed him.

,, 28.—L. was punished with 50 lashes by order of the visiting magistrates, and in the presence of one of them he threatened to kill Mr. Neale within two years.

N.B.—He did afterwards come to Chelmsford, as was supposed for that purpose; and he was then transported for robbing a workhouse.

3. Religious and other Instruction.

Chaplain.

The chaplain is the same as at Springfield. He reads daily prayers selected from the Liturgy, and performs divine service twice on Sundays, with one sermon. He administers the Instruction. Chapel. Books.

Holy Communion about once a-month; and it is usually received by some of the debtors, with the matron and officers. He keeps a journal, but not a character book. He gives his advice and instruction to the prisoners as occasion requires, and the matron, under his superintendence, also instructs the female prisoners as schoolmistress. The debtors are required to attend chapel, unless prevented by illness. The male and female prisoners see each other in chapel, and on their way to it. Females of different classes have opportunities of communication during chapel. The chapel is damp, inconveniently situated, and badly arranged. The prisoners are supplied with Bibles, Prayer-books, and tracts of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, under the superintendence of the chaplain.

4.—Health.

Surgeons.

The surgeons attending this prison are the same as those at Springfield, to the report of which prison we beg to refer, with the observation that the duties of this gaol, being lighter, are comparatively better attended to. The rules not absolutely requiring medical examination before the prisoner is passed into the ward, this important precaution is seldom taken. There are two rooms, in No. 5 and No. 11, used as infirmaries, as occasion requires. There are no special regulations relating to infirmary patients; consequently, they converse as others do. There were seven women sick at the time of our visit; two of them were in bed in their cells, which are unfit for sick persons, as they have no ventilation, except by a small aperture above the door, or by the door itself, which opens directly into the yard. The cases of slight indisposition, exclusive of debtors, in the year ending Michaelmas 1836, were 67, or about 50 per cent. upon the whole number of females in confinement (133); the infirmary cases about 6 per cent. on the same; and the deaths 75 per cent. Before the removal of the male criminals, and whilst tread-wheel labour was used, symptoms of scurvy, such as discolouration of the legs, &c., appeared; but the disease has never shown itself since the prison has been appropriated to its present inmates, viz. females and debtors, who do not work at the wheel—a fact which tends strongly to prove that scurvy does not proceed from causes connected with the locality even of a very low and damp prison. The general proportion of slight indisposition among the females in this gaol is 15 per cent. higher than that of the males at Springfield, but that of infirmary cases 2½ per cent. lower.

Infirmaries. Sickness.

Diet.

The diet is according to the provisional rules, which are publicly affixed in the prison.—See Report on Springfield. The cost per head per annum is stated for this prison at £2. 11*s*. 2¼*d*.

Prisoners supplying themselves.

The "poor" debtors supply themselves to the extent of 2*s*. 6*d*. per week, in addition to the county allowance, or receive such articles as their friends may send them; and a few of the female prisoners before trial do the same. Although the rules authorize the search of all baskets, parcels, &c., brought in by the debtors' visitors, the search is not regularly made, and beer has been introduced in greater quantities than the quart per head per diem allowed. The debtors also obtain spirits occasionally, and it has been already noticed that debtors have been seen drunk in several instances. The case mentioned of D. A., who confessed to have had two gallons of beer from the debtors, when he was found intoxicated, is a proof that beer must be consumed to a much greater extent than the rules permit.

Clothing and Bedding.

The cost of clothing and bedding is estimated at 18*s*. 10¾*d*. per head per annum. The prison clothing is the same all the year round. The bedding is occasionally aired in the yards in summer, but not in the winter.

Washing.

The female prisoners wash their own linen, but the debtors' washing is generally done out of the prison. The rooms and cells are swept daily, and washed weekly. The prison is frequently lime-washed, and appeared tolerably clean at the time of inspection; but the dampness is unfavourable to the operations of washing and cleaning.

5.—Prison Punishments.

Punishments.

The number of punishments inflicted in the year ending Michaelmas 1836 is stated at 14, or nearly 10 per cent. upon the whole number in confinement. They consist entirely of solitary confinement, there being no whipping used in this prison.

6.—Officers.

Officers.

A list of the officers, with their salaries, is given in the Return No. 2.

Keeper.

The keeper, Mr. Thomas Charles Neale, does not reside in this gaol, but at Springfield prison, about a mile distant, of which he is also keeper. The emoluments which he derives from this prison are the rents of furnished rooms, and certain fees from debtors; which amounted together, in the last year, to £33. 18*s*. 6*d*. He undertook the charge of this prison to save expense to the county, as a temporary arrangement, about two years since; it having been in contemplation to abolish this prison altogether: he gives security to the sheriff for the custody of the debtors. He appoints a deputy, who acts as chief turnkey and book-keeper, and resides in the gaol; the journal is, however, kept by Mr. Neale, who is, in all respects, the responsible keeper, and visits the prison, in general, daily, or every two days. It appears to us indispensably necessary that a resident gaoler should be appointed to this prison in compliance with the provisions of the Prison Act.

The deputy-keeper, turnkey, matron, and under-matron, are resident; and there are two watchmen at night.

7.—Miscellaneous.

Insane Prisoner.

There was one insane female (Elizabeth Rockliffe) in custody for the murder of her child, and who had been acquitted on the ground of insanity. We found her in the same room with five untried prisoners, and one convicted felon who acted as nurse. This woman afterwards committed suicide; having been left, during chapel-time, in the care of another prisoner, who happening to leave her for a short time, the unhappy lunatic took the opportunity of hanging herself from a piece of wood fastened to the wall. This occurrence is one among many proofs of the impropriety of a prison for the custody of lunatics.

Population of Prison.

The total population of the prison (debtors included) at the time of inspection, and for two years previous, was (Vide Appendix C)—

15 February 1835 . . 50
Ditto 1836 . . 40
Ditto 1837 . . 44

The greatest number in custody at one time, in the three last years ending at Michaelmas respectively, was—

1834 . . . 74
1835 . . . 58
1836 . . . 55

And the total number committed in each of the same years was—

1834 . . . 245
1835 . . . 248
1836 . . . 191

Recommittals.

The proportion of recommittals (27) to the whole number committed to the criminal side of this prison, in the year ending Michaelmas 1836 (120), was 22 per cent.

Juvenile Offenders.

The proportion of prisoners under the age of 17 (22), to the whole number of criminals confined in the above year (134), was about 16 per cent.; the whole of the latter (except one) being females.

Incapability of Improvement.

It would be quite superfluous to attempt to suggest here any specific plans for the improvement of this prison. It is built upon a plan so irregular, and so entirely at variance with the present improved notions of prison construction, that its adaptation to the objects of a good prison would be quite impracticable. The building is moreover so much affected by damp, and the site so ineligible, that it appears very desirable that the magistrates should pursue the plan which it is stated that they have already had in view, viz.—the abolition of this prison, and the making of arrangements for the custody of the prisoners in some other place.

ILFORD HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

1. Site, Construction, &c.

Ilford House of Correction. Description.

This is a House of Correction for the county of Essex, and here are also confined prisoners for trial at the assizes and sessions for the county, and the central criminal court. It is situated three-quarters of a mile from the town of Ilford, on the London road. It is a new brick building on the radiating plan, and was completed in the year 1831, at the cost of about £7,000. It appears in a good state of repair and is fire-proof, with the exception of the chapel. It is surrounded by an inner wall of the height of 18 feet, and an outer boundary wall of the height of 23 feet. The Keeper's house stands at the entrance, and on each side of it, adjoining the boundary wall, are the prison bakehouse, brewhouse, washhouse, and other offices. The position of these buildings tends to the insecurity of the prison; for, on the 2d of January 1833, James King, a convicted felon, got out of the infirmary at night, and, by mounting the roof of the brewhouse, escaped over the boundary wall. This is, however, stated to have been the only escape. The prison comprises ten wards, besides the male and female infirmaries. Five of the wards have day-rooms of the dimensions of 14 feet by 13 feet each. The number and dimensions of the sleeping-cells are :—

Wards.

26 cells, 8 feet long by 6½ feet wide.
2 do. 11 feet 3 inches do. by 8 feet do.
11 do. 12 feet 8 inches do. by 6½ feet do.
3 do. 14 feet do. by 13 feet do.

6 rooms in the infirmaries.
48 Total number of sleeping apartments.

The height of the sleeping cells varies from 8 feet 2 inches to 9 feet. The thickness of the partition walls is about 14 inches.

The number of sleeping apartments is therefore not sufficient for the separation by night of the ordinary number of prisoners. The greatest number in confinement at one time was,

Year ending Michaelmas 1834 - 66
Do. do. 1835 - 48
Do. do. 1836 - 53

And at the time of our inspection, there were in custody 62. There being no hard labour in the House of Correction at Newport, prisoners are often committed hither from Epping, Harlow, and other places on that side of the county, which was not contemplated when this prison was built.

The cells are close and need ventilation. The windows in general will not open, and many of them are broken and out of repair.

Inspection.

The yards may be inspected from the windows of the Turnkey's house and chapel, which stand in the centre of the building. There are holes in the cell-doors with external sliding shutters, most of which are out of order. Beyond these very limited means there can be no private inspection.

Soil, &c.

The prison stands on a gravelly soil, and we found it dry and tolerably clean. It does not overlook, nor is it overlooked by, any other building. The locality is considered healthy.

2. Discipline, Management, &c.

Classification.

From the increased number of male prisoners, it has been found necessary to appropriate to them the wards Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, intended for females, and to place the latter, who seldom exceed three or four, together in the infirmary, without regard to classification. We found in one room in the female infirmary three women, none of them sick, one of whom was a convicted felon, another summarily convicted for turnip stealing, and the third a vagrant. In the day-room of ward No. 2 we also found an unclassified assemblage of male prisoners, viz.: one committed for trial, one convicted felon, and two summarily convicted. The reason assigned, however, for the mixture in the latter instance was, that these prisoners were recovering from indisposition, and were placed in this, as a convalescent room, for the benefit of a fire. In the day-room of No. 8 we found a convicted felon picking oakum, a prisoner committed that morning for trial on a charge of felony, a misdemeanant (a stage coachman) for negligent driving, and a Crown debtor for an Excise penalty. These were nominally in confinement in separate cells: they were then assembled for the purpose of being shaved. Prisoners are usually separated by night, to the extent that the number of separate cells will permit; and they are also confined in their cells by day, except during treadwheel labour, divine service, exercise, or instruction. Day-rooms are not generally used as such, except by order of the surgeon, for prisoners requiring the warmth of a fire; and the prisoners take their meals in their cells. Those employed in oakum picking, or at the crank-wheel, or having no employment, consequently pass the greater part of the day in their cells. It is the rule also for prisoners committed for trial or examination to remain during the day in their sleeping-cells, with the liberty of exercise in the yard at appointed times. On Sundays all the prisoners are locked up the greater part of the day. We found that in a room, in ward No. 5, six had slept the previous night in two beds, three in a bed; one of them was a notorious character, named D., who had been three times in prison, and who, the wardsman doubted not, had corrupted others; and that, in a cell in the same ward, two prisoners, viz., J. R., aged 21, and H. H., aged 14, had been sleeping together for five nights in one bed, without any other prisoner in the cell, contrary to the Gaol Act. The bed was upon a raised stone, and the boy, H., said that the other prisoner used to pull the clothes off him. The same boy also said that he had previously slept two in a bed, in a cell in ward No. 9, with a prisoner named G., aged about 19. In ward No. 6 we found that four prisoners had slept the previous night in one room, three of them in one bed on the floor; also that two prisoners, viz., W. R., aged 18, and D. B., aged 14, had been sleeping together in a cell, without any other person, for upwards of a month. The former was convicted of stealing rope, the latter of house-breaking. In ward No. 8 five prisoners had slept in one room the previous night, four of them in the same bed, on the floor; and it was stated to us that as many as five had lately slept together here in one bed for a week. In one of the rooms of the male infirmary, three sick prisoners had slept the previous night in one bed.

Separation.

Association by night.

According to the evidence of several prisoners, those sleeping in the same room are apt to "lark," as it is termed; to talk of their former adventures; sometimes to arrange to meet each other after discharge; and bad language is stated to be by no means uncommon. A Turnkey watches outside at night; but neither the Keeper nor Turnkeys are in the habit of Ilford House of Correction.

Association of untried.

regularly visiting the cells at night. The untried prisoners in custody at the time of our visit were thus disposed of:—

One for the sessions was in his cell in ward No. 1; another prisoner for the sessions also slept in this ward, but was removed during the day-time to the day-room of No. 2, for the benefit of the fire, where he was with others; one just brought in for trial at the assizes was, with others, in the day-room of No. 8; a boy, under examination for felony, was in his cell, in No. 9; one for trial at the sessions, and another for the assizes, were in their cells in No. 10, with the doors open, so that there was no impediment to their associating with each other. Thus, although we were informed that it was the rule to separate the untried, it is not so in practice, and the way in which the prisoners were dispersed about the prison in different wards was very irregular.

Silent System.

The 33d of the Provisional Rules declares, that "if any convicted prisoner shall endeavour to converse, or to hold intercourse with any of his fellow-prisoners, or any other person, he shall be deemed guilty of a disobedience of the rules of the prison, and be treated accordingly." The prisoners notwithstanding continually converse on the wheel, and have also opportunities of talking whilst at washing (which they do four at a time in the yard); in going to and from the cells to take their meals; and in going to and from chapel. As the treadwheels will not hold more than 28 persons at a time, there is, in general, a considerable proportion of prisoners off the wheel, who take opportunities of talking to each other whilst standing about the yards, as they are not compelled to keep certain distances from each other. We found a number of prisoners in the treadwheel yard No. 5, talking together on the stairs in their way from their cells, where they had been dining, into the yards. They are not forbidden from looking round, so that all those on the wheel turn their heads, if any one enters the yard. The necessity for several prisoners sleeping together, of course would frustrate the effect of silence by day, however rigidly enforced; but the discipline, in this respect, is so lax, that the rule above cited is continually violated. The Keeper, indeed, stated that he had punished 28 prisoners in the course of the year 1836 for improper conversation, by making them work at the crank-wheel in a solitary cell; but this is to be understood not for the mere act of speaking, but for noise or disorderly language. The subjoined extracts from evidence given by prisoners and officers show that conversation prevails to a considerable extent.

D. F., a Prisoner in Ward No. 5. (Treadwheel Yard.)

"I sleep with others; six in the room, and three in a bed. We lie and talk for a little time. We sometimes talk in the passages going to and from the wheel; we sometimes talk on the wheel; we ask each other what they came into prison for, and so on; some of them sing in the bed-room; we talk at washing in the yard. I have been once punished by having my bread and cheese stopped; it was for talking on the chapel stairs."

H. H., a Prisoner in Ward No. 5.

"I have slept five nights in a bed with J. R., and no other person in the cell; he pulls all the clothes off me; we sleep in one bed on a raised stone; my back was bare last night; no Turnkey came into the cell. When I first came in, I slept in No. 9 with a young man, G.; afterwards a little boy slept with me, and then I came here. I have been in Coldbath-fields prison; they are very strict there, much more so than here, for we often talk; we do not tell of each other. Some of them ask me how long I have got, and such questions."

J. D., Wardsman of No. 5.

"I have reported only one boy for disobeying orders. It is quite impossible to prevent talking, unless I report the whole wheel. The prisoners are mostly acquainted; they whisper as well as talk on the wheel; no doubt they talk at night, but not from cell to cell. Those who sleep together are apt to 'lark.' One of the six who sleep together is named D—tt; he has been three times in prison: I have no doubt he corrupts others. Many agree to meet on leaving prison. They dread separation, especially when their provisions are shortened. They send to their friends by other prisoners who are going out."

D. B., a Prisoner in No. 6. (Treadwheel Yard.)

"I have slept a month or five weeks with W. R. in one bed, without any other prisoner in the cell; he is for stealing rope: I am for housebreaking. We talk together; we tell riddles to each other. I know the names of all the prisoners in this yard; W. R. told me their names. This is the felons' yard. We are not allowed to talk, but some do talk notwithstanding."

J. F., a Prisoner in No. 6.

"I have generally slept in a bed with two others, and have slept with three others. We talk to each other. Solitary confinement is a much greater punishment than the treadwheel."

J. C., Wardsman of No, 6.

"I often catch the prisoners talking both on and off the wheel, but I have seldom reported, not once a week; I threaten them. I have been threatened by prisoners. A prisoner has wanted to fight me, and has stripped to fight. My duty is confined to hours of work on the wheel. The prisoners have no difficulty in communicating, though they have not time to say much. They appoint to meet each other on leaving, and send messages by each other to their friends: they are allowed to look round on the wheel. Those who have been in other prisons corrupt others. I am Schoolmaster. I think the boys are corrupted by other prisoners, for I find them more refractory after a time than at first. I have heard bad language in leaving the wheel and in going to the cells. We have several London thieves here."

L. D., a Wardsman.

"I am in and out of the yards as often as I can, but I am employed in baking two-thirds of the day. I often find the prisoners talking, and call out to them. I know they communicate both on and off the wheel. The other day in the wheel-yard I heard a prisoner call another a d——d fool, but I could not find out who it was: there have been instances of former prisoners meeting others at the gate on their discharge."

This evidence is not very consistent with the statement in the Gaol Returns for this prison for 1835, that "the Silence System is most strictly enforced."

Separation of Sexes.

We did not find that the male and female prisoners were in the habit of communicating; but the male turnkey takes the provisions to the female yard, without the presence of a female officer. He does not indeed enter the yard, but pours the gruel into the women's pots at the

I.
HOME DISTRICT.
County Gaols.
Essex.
Ilford House of Correction.

gate, and puts the bread through the bars, so that when the women come down to the gate for their food there is an opportunity of intercourse. The Turnkey also sometimes puts the usual questions to the female prisoners upon their admission, without the presence of the Matron. Male officers do not, however, enter the female prison, without the presence of the Matron or her female servant.

Labour.

The hard labour consists of the treadwheels in two yards, one of Richmond's crank machines for work in solitude, and the picking of junk into oakum, also in solitude. The treadwheel labour varies from seven to ten hours, according to the season, and from 10,080 to 14,400 feet of ascent. Oakum-pickers are required to pick from three to four pounds a-day: this kind of work is preferred to the treadwheel, as being less laborious.

Employment in Menial Services.

The following is the Keeper's Return of prisoners employed as wardsmen and in menial services at the time of inspection :—

RETURN of all Prisoners now employed in Menial or Domestic Services, &c., 11th February, 1837.

|---|---|
| J. W. . . . . | Silence man. |
| J. C. . . . . | ,, |
| J. N. . . . . | Tailoring and cleaning. |
| W. F. (convicted of felony) . | Gruel man and cleaning. |
| B. E. . . . . | Cleaning and gardening. |
| J. H. . . . . | Wood-cutting and cleaning. |
| C. S. . . . . | Mat-making. |
| J. W. . . . . | Whitewashing. |

The women are employed in washing, needle-work, and oakum-picking; but the number of female prisoners is often insufficient for the service of the prison, and the Keeper, therefore, occasionally obtains a removal of females from Chelmsford Gaol, by applying to the Clerk of the peace; whereupon the Court of Quarter Sessions sentences certain females, upon conviction, to this House of Correction.

Visits and Letters.

The Provisional Rules, Nos. 18 to 24, relating to the admission of visitors and letters, appear to be observed. The Turnkey is always present, and searches the visitor in case of suspicion. A list of visitors is kept. Notwithstanding the precautions taken, visitors are said sometimes to gain admission improperly, under pretence of relationship.

Money.

The prisoners' money and other articles are taken from them, and accounted for pursuant to the third Provisional Rule. The untried are allowed to have any money belonging to them by instalments of 2*s.* 6*d.* per week, which are paid to the Turnkey, and he procures the required supplies. It does not appear that the Turnkey derives any advantage from such purchases at the expense of the prisoners; but the impropriety of a Turnkey being so employed is obvious.

Newspapers.

Newspapers are prohibited by the 36th Provisional Rule, and do not appear to be introduced; nor books, except by authority of the Chaplain.

Tobacco.

Tobacco is prohibited by the 37th Rule. Prisoners are, however, very prone to secrete tobacco on all parts of their bodies; so as, if possible, to evade search on their admission.

Gaming.

There does not appear to be any gaming carried on, so far as we could ascertain.

3. Religious and other Instruction.

Chaplain.

The Chaplain, the Rev. C. Lodge, resides at Ilford, and is 70 years of age. He has other duty at a neighbouring chapel. On the day of our inspection he did not attend, and divine service was not performed. The Keeper said he presumed the reason for his non-attendance was because the weather was rainy, or from indisposition, and that it had occasionally happened before that he had omitted to attend, without having appointed any other person to read prayers for him. Divine service is performed twice on Sundays, with one sermon. On the week-days the Chaplain attends to read prayers at uncertain times, varying from nine to twelve o'clock. After service he usually catechizes the boys, and visits those prisoners in solitary confinement who do not attend chapel. He remains in the prison from half an hour to an hour. The Holy Communion has not been administered for more than two years. The Chaplain's Journal is not in accordance with the 14th Provisional Rule, in regard to Chaplains, as it consists merely of one entry for the whole quarter, in this way : "Services regularly performed during the quarter according to the Rules and Regulations." It is signed, however, by the Chairman of the Sessions. No Character Book is kept. The Keeper and one Turnkey attend chapel regularly, but the Matron is occasionally prevented by weak health. The seats of the Keeper and Matron in the chapel are so placed that they cannot see the whole of the prisoners.

Books.

The books are selected by the Chaplain, and consist of Bibles, Prayer Books, and a few tracts of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

School.

The boys receive instruction daily in one of the day-rooms, from twelve to two o'clock. There is usually a class of five or six. The Schoolmaster is a convicted felon, who is also wardsman of ward No. 6. The boys are taught reading and spelling, and learn the Church Catechism and Collects.

Effect of Instruction.

The effect of this instruction is by no means reformatory, for the Schoolmaster states that he finds the boys more refractory after some time than at first, a circumstance which he attributes to their being corrupted by other prisoners.

4. Health.

Surgeon.

The Surgeon resides at Ilford, and attends twice or three times a-week, and oftener when required. He is not, however, sent for immediately on the prisoner's arrival, and consequently the prisoner is passed into the ward without surgical examination,—an improper and dangerous practice. The Surgeon visits prisoners under punishment, as well as others, upon report of sickness, but not otherwise.

Infirmaries.

Six male prisoners were sick in the infirmary at the time of our visit, besides several who

I.
HOME DISTRICT.
County Gaols.
Essex.
Ilford House of Correction.

were in a state of recovery from the prevailing epidemic. There is no regulation as to silence in the infirmaries, except in so far as the 33d Provisional Rule may be construed to require it. Silence, however, is not observed.

Sickness.

The cases of slight indisposition, in the year ending Michaelmas, 1836, were 16 per cent. upon the total number in confinement in that year; the infirmary cases 1·66 per cent., and the deaths none. No death has occurred in the prison since it was occupied. The most prevalent disease has been scrofula, or purpura hæmorrhagica, showing itself by swelled gums and spots and pains in the legs, in the same way as at Springfield Gaol, where it is more particularly noticed. There is, we think, little doubt that this disease is attributable to treadwheel labour, enforced for too long terms, together with an insufficient and little varying diet.

Diet.

The dietary of this prison consists of 24 oz. of bread and three pints of gruel per diem, with the addition to prisoners at the treadwheel of 4 oz. of bread and 2 oz. of cheese, on every day they work, and with the further addition, at the expiration of three months, of a pint of meat soup, three times a-week. The Provisional Rules, one of which prescribes the diet, are affixed in the several wards for the prisoners' inspection. See Dietary Table, Appendix, No. 18.

Prisoners maintaining themselves.

Some of the untried prisoners maintain themselves, or purchase articles in addition to the gaol allowance, pursuant to the Provisional Rules, to the extent of 2*s.* 6*d.* per week. They are permitted to have a pint of beer per day, which the Turnkey brings from a public-house.

Clothing.

Bedding.

There is one woollen prison-dress for both summer and winter. The only variety is, that the felon's dress is striped yellow. The prisoners are occasionally, though not often, punished for destroying their dress. The clothing and bedding are both purchased in London, and the annual cost of both together is stated at 1*l.* 13*s.* 5*d.* The supply of bedding was not sufficient for the number in custody at the time of inspection, and some of the straw mattresses were in a bad state. The bedding is aired in the yards in the summer, but not in the winter.

Washing.

The prisoners are not bathed on their admission in winter, but only in summer. They wash daily, several together in the yards. The combs were in a dirty state. The whole of the linen is washed in the prison. The rooms and cells were not very clean, not being regularly washed in winter, but in the summer they are said to be washed daily. The prison is lime-washed twice a-year, usually by the prisoners.

Punishments.

5. Prison Punishments.

The following is a Return made by the Keeper:—

ILFORD.

RETURN of all Punishments for Offences within the Prison, in the course of the year 1836, whether for breach of silence, or otherwise, stating by whose authority.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| J. B. | For breaking a quart | by Keeper. |
| G. J. | Stealing bread | ,, |
| T. B. | Refusing to work | ,, |
| J. C. | Ill behaviour in chapel | ,, |
| R. G. | Stealing from a prisoner | ,, |

This will appear to be a very small number for an annual population of some 340 prisoners; but, in addition to the above Return, it appears that 28 prisoners have been punished by making them work at the crank-wheel, and others by shortening their diet, of which no account can be obtained. Whipping is performed with a cat-of-nine-tails, in the presence of the Keeper, Surgeon, and convicted prisoners, two dozen being the ordinary number of lashes.

6. Officers.

Officers.

A list of the officers, with their salaries, will be found in the Appendix, No. 21.

The Keeper has had the management of this prison since its erection, and was formerly Keeper of the old prison at Barking. He visits all parts of the prison daily, but seldom the cells at night.

The Matron is the wife of the Keeper. She superintends the female prisoners regularly, unless prevented by illness, when her female servant attends them. The greatest number of females in this prison has been 11.

Both the Turnkeys reside in the prison, and keep watch alternately by night, outside the wards. The Turnkeys are employed by turns in baking, which occupies their time a considerable part of the day.

Account Books.

The books kept in the prison are specified in the subjoined list:—Visitors' book, chaplain and medical officers' journals, chaplain and medical officers' appearance books, keeper's description book, keeper's journal and index book, account book, turnkeys' receiving book, turnkeys' journal, daily journal of the disposal of prisoners, list of prisoners for re-examination, book for periods of detention, weighing book, book for extra allowances for food for prisoners at the mill.

7. Miscellaneous.

The committals to this prison have lately been on the increase. The number in custody was,—

|---|---|---|
| 11th February, | 1835 | 41 |
| ,, | 1836 | 47 |
| ,, | 1837 | 62 |

The total number committed was, however,—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Year ending Michaelmas, | 1834 | 411 |
| ,, | 1835 | 320 |
| ,, | 1836 | 339 |

Population.

The population consists principally of summary convictions, which appear as misdemeanors in the subjoined account.

Re-committals.

The number of re-committals is very considerable. In the year ending Michaelmas, 1836, it is returned at 273, being no less than 80 per cent. upon the whole number committed in that year.

Juvenile Offenders.

The number of offenders under the age of 17 is returned at 47 in the last-mentioned year, being about 14 per cent. upon the whole number committed. This proportion is much above the average. The Keeper states the increase of juvenile offenders to arise from the number of committals for petty trespasses and offences against the game laws.

Passes.

It is not the practice to give passes to discharged prisoners, but they receive small sums of money in proportion to the distances they have to travel.

Military Prisoners.

The 6*d.* per diem allowed for deserters by the War Office is paid to the prisoner, who finds himself with it. The Keeper remembers two instances of deserters committed to prison, as such, on their own confession; but who afterwards turned out not to be such. Of the one case he could not turn to the particulars, but in the other, the prisoner's name was William Mathison, who was discharged by order from the War Office, dated 18th September, 1832, as not belonging to the 93d regiment, from which he pretended to have deserted, The inducement to these impositions was the extra diet obtained with the 6*d.* per diem.

We beg to refer to the Appendix.

COLCHESTER HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

Colchester House of Correction.

1. Site, Construction, &c.

Description. Inspection. Wards. Cells.

This prison is a House of Correction for the county of Essex, and is appropriated almost exclusively to summary convictions. It however occasionally receives prisoners convicted at Assizes and Sessions, and those committed for further examination by the magistrates. It stands on rising ground, about half a mile from the town of Colchester, and there is no other building near it. It was completed and first occupied in February 1835, at the cost of about £7000. The prison is on the radiating plan, with the Keeper's house at the entrance, and the Turnkey's and Matron's apartments, over which is the chapel, in the centre. The inspection is, however, defective, for the whole of the yards cannot be seen from the windows of the central lodge, and there are no means of inspecting the day-rooms or cells, without going to them. The boundary wall is of the height of 18 feet, and between this and the inner wall of the same height, surrounding the wards, there is a space of land from 70 to 80 feet wide. There has not been any escape since the occupation of the prison. It is in a good state of repair. There are 10 wards, six of which were intended for male, and four for female prisoners. The accommodation thus provided for females is much greater than there has ever been occasion for, the greatest number of female prisoners at one time since the occupation of the prison having been only four (three of whom went out before night), and the total number of females confined up to the day of our visit having been only 25. We found the female wards unoccupied, there being no female prisoner in custody. Each of the wards has an airing yard, and six of them have day-rooms. The prison contains 44 separate sleeping apartments, of the following dimensions:—

10 cells, 12 feet 6 inches long, by 6 feet 6 inches wide.
2 do. 11 feet long, by 8 feet wide.
2 do. 8 feet long, by 7 feet wide.
26 do. 8 feet 6 inches long, by 6 feet 4 inches wide.
4 infirmary rooms, male and female.

Total 44

Soil, &c.

The height of the cells is 10 feet, and the thickness of the partition walls about 14 inches. The number of cells has hitherto greatly exceeded the wants of the prison, the greatest number in custody at one time having been only 20. The cells are close, and badly ventilated. The windows are, like those at Springfield, not suited for the ventilation of small cells. The prison is built on a strong loam, and has good drainage to the river. It was clean and dry at the time of inspection, and the locality may be pronounced healthy from general considerations, as well as from the small amount of sickness that has occurred.

2. Discipline, &c.

Classification. Association. Silence. Separation.

The classification we found to be according to the Act; but in the month of December last there were four prisoners convicted of felony who worked on the same treadwheel with misdemeanants summarily convicted. The day-rooms are not used, with the exception of one in which a prisoner confined for smuggling was employed separately in cooking. The prisoners take their meals in their cells, and are thus separated at meals, and by night, but associate together during labour on the treadwheel, at chapel, and whilst washing, or walking the yards. Prisoners who have been acquainted have asked to be allowed to sleep together, but it has never been permitted. The rules require silence, but it is not effectually enforced, there being only one Turnkey, who only comes occasionally into the two yards where the prisoners work at the wheels, and the Keeper is seldom in the yards but at locking or unlocking. Several prisoners confessed to us that they talked pretty freely on the wheel, whilst walking the yard, from cell to cell, during washing, or in going to chapel. Swearing and bad language is sometimes heard, and the prisoners are very apt to steal each other's bread if an opportunity offers. No prisoner was punished for mere talking in the course of the last year. The men on the wheel looked round, and lolled lazily upon it. There were no wardsmen or silencemen employed in the yards. Prisoners are occasionally sentenced to solitary confinement, Employment.

and are then treated according to the Provisional Rules in that behalf. Only two prisoners were so sentenced in the course of last year. The Keeper, however, sometimes exercises a discretion in separating boys to prevent their corruption.

The hard labour consists of the treadwheels, and a crank pump for raising water. The treadwheel labour varies from six and a half to 10 hours per day, and from 7,800 to 12,000 feet of ascent, according to the season, so that a prisoner confined in the summer months does 35 per cent. more work than he who is imprisoned in the winter. Prisoners are employed in cooking, whitewashing, and other menial services, as occasion requires. Treadwheel labour is stated to be disliked, but solitary confinement very much more so. There is no labour of a productive kind.

Visits and Letters.

Visitors are received either at the gate, or in the Turnkey's office, in the presence of the Turnkey; but only by a magistrate's order, and according to the Provisional Rules. Upon looking through the visitors' list, we found that 57 visitors were admitted in the year 1836—a very large number, considering that the total number confined in the year, to Michaelmas 1836, was only 127. One prisoner had received seven visitors, another four, and several more than one. Several instances have happened of persons having obtained visiting orders from magistrates under false pretences. A prisoner, N. F., lately received two visits at different times from two different persons, each calling herself his sister Elizabeth F. The Keeper was not aware of it until after she had gone away, when he found that she was an impostor, and came from Colchester, his real sister having previously come from West Mersea to see her brother. All letters are subject to the Keeper's inspection.

Money.

The money of the prisoners (being convicts) is taken from them, and accounted for on their discharge.

Tobacco.

An instance occurred in which tobacco was brought in by a smuggler, and buried in the yard; but there is no reason to believe that it is frequently introduced.

Newspapers.

Newspapers are not used, nor any books without the chaplain's authority.

Gaming.

There has been no case of gambling, and the prisoners being usually poor and of the agricultural class, it is not very likely to occur.

Separation of Sexes.

The female wards are quite separate from those of the males, and no instance of communication between them has hitherto occurred.

3. Religious and other Instruction.

Chaplain.

The Rev. J. W. Morgan has been chaplain of this prison, and of the former house of correction in Colchester Castle, for 20 years. He reads daily prayers selected from the Liturgy, and on Wednesdays and Fridays expounds the Scriptures. He performs divine service twice on Sundays, with one sermon. He resides at Colchester, and has other duty. The Communion is not administered. The Chaplain keeps a journal of his attendance, but does not make the entries very regularly. He does not remain long in the prison after chapel, but visits the prisoners in solitary cells, and any others whom he thinks desirable. The chapel is not well arranged, and the Keeper sits where he cannot see the prisoners. The Keeper, Matron, and Turnkey attend, and a list is kept of any prisoners who may be absent from sickness or other cause. The prisoners communicate in their way to and from chapel, and sometimes, though not frequently, during service.

Chapel.

Books.

The books used by the prisoners consist of Bibles, prayer-books, and tracts of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, selected by the Chaplain.

Instruction.

There is no regular instruction; there being few boys, and the terms of imprisonment being usually very short. In the year to Michaelmas 1836 there was only one prisoner confined for six months, and ten for three and under six months. No system of instruction, therefore, could be expected to produce in general any great moral effect.

4. Health.

Physician.

The medical attendants of the prison are a physician at Colchester, who is assisted by his son, a surgeon, and another assistant. One of these gentlemen attends three or four times a-week, and sees all the prisoners. The prisoners are, however, not examined before being passed into the wards, the medical attendant not being sent for immediately on their admission. There has been only one infirmary patient since the opening of the prison, and at the time of our visit there was not any sick prisoner. In the year ending Michaelmas 1836, the proportion of cases of slight indisposition to the whole number confined was only 8·66 per cent., with no infirmary case or death in the year. There has not hitherto been any case of scurvy, or other disease attributable to excessive labour or insufficiency of diet, the short periods of imprisonment under summary conviction operating favourably in that respect.

Diet.

The diet is that prescribed by the Provisional Rules (see Springfield), which are publicly affixed, and scales and weights are kept in case of application. See Dietary Table, No. 18. The cost of diet is high, being stated at £5 2*s.* 9¾*d.* per head per annum, or 1*s.* 11¾*d.* per week. The prisoners being all after conviction, with the occasional exception of those for examination, are not allowed to find themselves.

Clothing and Bedding.

The cost of clothing and bedding is estimated at £1 6*s.* 4½*d.* per head per annum. The expense of clothing a male prisoner in the drab woollen dress used is as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Jacket | £0 | 5*s.* | 3*d.* |
| Waistcoat | 0 | 2 | 8 |
| Trousers | 0 | 5 | 4 |
| Cap | 0 | 0 | 11 |

| Shoes | 0 | 4 | 3 |
| | £1 | 1 | 10 |

Washing, &c.

Stockings are not provided. The clothing is not changed by seasons. It is seldom destroyed by prisoners. The bedding is not aired in the yards in winter, but in summer once a-week.

The whole of the linen is washed in the prison, The cells are washed in the summer twice or three times a-week, but in winter not so often. The prison has been lime-washed from time to time since its erection, and appeared generally clean at the time of inspection.

Punishments.

5. Prison Punishments.

The following is the Keeper's return of punishments for offences within the prison in the last year, and up to the day of inspection:

Punishments within the prison since the 1st of January, 1836:—

Oct. 3, 1836, W. G.—Stealing prisoners' bread. Locked up four hours.
Oct. 4, 1836, J. T.—Refusing to walk round the yard. Locked up four hours.
Oct. 19, W. H. and T. W.—Refusing to walk round the yard. Locked up six hours.
Nov. 22, 1836, W. G.—Stealing bread. Locked up for the afternoon.
Jan. 11, 1837, W. P.—Refusing to walk round the yard. Looked up for the afternoon.
Jan. 19, 1837, W. W. and J. P.—Fighting in the yard. Locked up four hours.
Feb. 1, 1837, J. M.—Writing his name in his cell. Locked up four hours.

6. Officers.

Officers.

The officers consist of the Keeper, Matron, and Turnkey, whose salaries are stated in the Appendix.

Keeper.

The Keeper, Mr. William Parsle Smith, held that office in the former prison of Colchester Castle, and has been Gaoler in this prison for twenty-two years. He is 53 years of age. He does not visit the cells at night, and is not often in the yards, but is generally present at locking up and unlocking. He keeps a sort of journal, in which he enters the daily number of prisoners, but only one occurrence is noted in it in the last year, viz. "October 24.—Thomas Kemp, a vagrant, made an attempt to strangle himself." The Keeper's journal has not been exhibited at the Quarter Sessions, nor signed by the Chairman, as the law requires. The Keeper attends the Sessions at Chelmsford, whether he has any prisoners there or not.

Matron.

The Matron is the wife of the Keeper, and is 49 years of age. Her duties are very light, as there is seldom more than one female prisoner, and often none at all.

Turnkey.

The Turnkey usually sleeps in the prison, but is sometimes permitted to sleep at his own house with his family. There is no night watchman.

Books.

The books kept in the prison are stated in the following list:—Visiting Magistrates' Minute Book, Chaplain's Journal, Surgeon's Journal, Governor's Diary, Receiving Book, Description ditto, Sick Book, Absentees from Chapel Book, Prisoners Visitors' Book, Separate Jurisdiction Book, Book of Fines and Penalties, Receipts and Disbursements.

7. Miscellaneous.

Population of Prison.

The following is a list of prisoners in custody at the time of our inspection:

| Names. | Offences. | Sentences. | How employed. |
|---|---|---|---|
| N. F. | Smuggling | 12 calendar months | Whitewashing and cooking. |
| C. G. | Stealing Walnuts | 6 months | Treadwheel. |
| W. P. | Poaching | 2 calendar months | The same. |
| S. H. | Trespass | 2 months | Same. |
| S. B. | Same | Same | Same. |
| J. W. | Poaching | 6 weeks | Same. |
| C. P. | Same | Same | Same. |
| R. C. | Bastardy | 3 months | Same. |
| J. D. (Borough prisoner) | Vagrancy | 1 calendar month. | Same. |
| B. B. | Misdemeanor, furious driving | 1 month | Same. |
| S. S. | Misdemeanor, neglecting to pay fees | 6 weeks | Same. |
| G. L. | Poaching | 1 calendar month. | Same. |

The numbers at the following periods were:—

| | |
|---|---|
| 17th Feb. 1835 | 12 |
| do. 1836 | 10 |
| do. 1837 | 12 |

The greatest number at one time in the last two years, ending at Michaelmas respectively, was:—

|---|---|
| 1835 | 16 |
| 1836 | 15 |
| and on 31st Dec. 1836 | 20 |

The total number committed in each of those years was:—

| | |
|---|---|
| 1835 | 107 |
| 1836 | 115 |

I. HOME DISTRICT.

County Gaols.

Essex.

Colchester House of Correction.

Recommittals. The proportion of persons previously committed in the last-mentioned year appears to have been about 50 per cent. on the whole number committed.

Juvenile Offenders. The proportion of offenders under 17, in the same year, appears to have been about 10 per cent. upon the total number in confinement.

Contract with Borough. The borough of Colchester contracts for the maintenance of its convicted prisoners in this house of correction; paying, for the whole cost of maintenance, a sum equal to double the amount of the ordinary rations of food.

It appears by the visiting magistrates' book that they have held seven regular meetings in the course of the last year, and that one interval elapsed from the 18th of March to the 10th of June, without any recorded visit. A single magistrate, however, looks in occasionally without entering his visit in the book.

Military Prisoners. The usual sum of sixpence per head is allowed by the War Department for soldiers, and they receive the ordinary prison diet.

It is much to be regretted that the greater number of the cells are of so small dimensions (8 feet 6 inches, by 6 feet 4 inches), and all of them are so badly ventilated, as to be unfit for a system of separation by day.

We beg reference to the subjoined Returns contained in the Appendix.

HALSTEAD HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

Halstead House of Correction.

Site, Construction, &c.

Description.

This is a House of Correction for the county of Essex, and is appropriated chiefly to offenders summarily convicted, vagrants, and prisoners under examination. It is an old building on an irregular plan, having been erected in the year 1782. Some alterations were made about five years since. It stands very low, upon the bank of a stream running into the river Colne, and faces the public street of the town of Halstead. It adjoins the Angel public-house, from which one side of the prison can be overlooked. The boundary wall on the side towards the public-house is 10 feet high, but that on the other side towards the meadows is only eight feet high. The inner wall surrounding the wards varies from 12 to 20 feet in height. The prison is very insecure, not merely from the defects of the building, but from the staircases fixed up the sides of the walls, and from privies, &c. being fixed against them externally, the roofs of which form convenient landing-places for a descent. It is also quite easy to get over the boundary walls, and to escape round their abuttals on the side of the rivulet. No less than six prisoners have, in fact, escaped within the last three years, viz.

Insecurity.

Escapes.

J. F., F. H., and R. G.—On 17th April, 1834, these three, who were sleeping in one cell in ward No. 4, broke through the wall into the day-room, and from thence got through the window into the yard, and then escaped by scaling the wall. F. H. was never recaptured, R. G. was afterwards taken, and J. F. was taken for another offence.

J. H. (for want of bail), on 25th Sept. 1834, escaped over the low wall in coming round from chapel to his ward No. 7. He was retaken.

J. D. (on charge of felony), on 5th Nov. 1834, escaped from yard No. 4. by climbing the wall from the staircase, walking along the top, and then descending on the side by the river.

W. G. (on charge of felony), on 11th January, 1837, escaped in the same way from yard No. 7. He was, however, retaken on the 27th, and we found him in custody at Springfield.

Inspection.

The prison is not fire proof and not insured. From its construction there is no central inspection, but the yards Nos. 1, 2, and 3 can be partially seen from the back windows of the Keeper's house, and there are apertures in the walls surrounding the yards, through which they may be looked into from the passages behind. Some of the wards are approached through others, and the internal arrangements are in many respects inconvenient. The wards are eight in number, and contain five day-rooms and 35 sleeping cells, the dimensions of which are stated in the Return, Appendix B. The number is insufficient for constant separation by night, the greatest number at one time in the last three years having been 64. The size of the cells, it will be seen, varies from 7½ feet by 5 to 13½ by 7½, and their height varies from 8 to 10 feet. None of the cells are sufficiently ventilated, and some of them have no ventilation at all but by a hole made through the door. Three sleeping cells in ward No. 2, whose dimensions are only 7½ by 5 feet, and also three cells in No. 3, the dimensions of two of which are 13 feet by 7½, and of one 7½ by 6 feet, have privies opening into each of them, which cast up an offensive smell, and completely poison the air in so small and close places. The prisoners stated that the smell is at times so bad that they can scarcely bear it, and they are constantly obliged to throw water down for purification. Yet, in these filthy holes, we learned that prisoners had been sleeping three in one cell for more than a fortnight together during the last winter. The drainage is very bad, and the sewer to the river can only be cleansed once a week, when the water has been allowed to run out. The whole prison, and especially the Keeper's house, is affected by damp, arising from the low and marshy soil on which the buildings stand. The site indeed appears ineligible in every respect.

2. Discipline, &c.

Classification.
Association.
Separation.

The classification is according to the Gaol Act, except that in one ward we found misdemeanants summarily convicted mixed with those committed for acts of vagrancy.

The untried, of whom the proportion is small, are allowed to associate. Prisoners remanded for further examination are, however, often ordered by the Magistrates to be kept separate. We found a boy, on charge of house-breaking, separated, under such circumstances, in ward No. 4. There was no other prisoner in the ward, but the boy was confined entirely to the day-room, it not being deemed safe to allow him to walk in the yard. The boy could not read or write: the solitude for a few days appeared to have made a considerable impression upon him, and he was crying bitterly. There were also two boys convicted of felony confined separately in their cells, and employed at the crank-wheel. One of them (J. E.) was sentenced to three months' imprisonment, and the last month in solitude. Before he was separated he had slept in a cell with two other prisoners. Whilst in separation, he took exercise in the passage, not in the yard; but he was in the habit of going down for his bread, and for other purposes, when he used to talk to other prisoners. He did not attend chapel; had no books whatever; and said that neither the Chaplain nor Surgeon had visited him since he had been in separation.

Silence.

The Rules require Silence, but it is in practice very little observed, there being only one Turnkey, who cannot be constantly in the yards; the inspection being imperfect, and the yardsmen not trustworthy. The convicted take their meals in their cells, and sleep separately when the number of cells suffices; but during the past winter they have slept three in a cell in many instances; sometimes in separate beds, and at others two or three in a bed. The testimony of several prisoners examined by us concurs in the fact, that they talk on the wheel; whilst walking the yard; at washing; in going to and from chapel; and from cell to cell. Swearing and bad language are occasionally heard. A yardsman told us, "that a prisoner (D.), who went out the Monday previous, used often to swear and talk indecently; that he was a blackguard sort of a fellow, and used to d—n him (the yardsman) when he spoke to him civilly; that D. was a very quarrelsome fellow, but he (the yardsman) never complained to the Turnkey till after D. was gone." The reason why he did not complain was evidently because he was afraid of the prisoner D. The Silent System may justly be called a farce in such prisons as this. Only twelve prisoners are stated to have been punished for disorderly conduct in the whole of the year 1836, and the frequent necessity of prisoners sleeping together would of course counteract any good effect of silence by day, even if rigidly enforced. On Sundays, the prisoners are locked up the whole day, except during divine service, and half-an-hour for exercise, mornings and evenings. On Saturdays, the treadwheels are stopped at three o'clock in the afternoon, in order that the prisoners may be shaved.

Employment.

There are treadwheels in two yards, Nos. 2 and 3, and crank-wheels for labour in solitude. The hours of treadwheel labour vary from 7 to 10, and the number of feet of ascent from 8,960 to 12,800, according to the season; being a difference of 30 per cent. Prisoners are also employed as yardsmen, and in cleaning and menial services, and female prisoners in washing and cleaning, in the prison and Keeper's house.

Visits and Letters.

Visitors are admitted at the gates of the yards, or in the Keeper's office, in the presence of the Turnkey, by Magistrates' orders. No list of visitors is kept, but the Keeper supposes that about 20 were admitted in the course of last year. All letters are inspected by the Keeper.

Money.

Prisoners for examination, or before trial, if they have money, are allowed to receive it by instalments of 2*s.* 6*d.* per week, or to receive provisions from visitors. All money taken away from prisoners on admittance is accounted for on their discharge.

Tobacco.

Prisoners have occasionally been detected in using tobacco, but not very lately. It is prohibited by the Rules.

Newspapers.

Newspapers do not appear to be introduced, nor any books without the Chaplain's authority.

Gaming.

The prisoners are for the most part very poor; there is no reason to suppose that gambling is practised.

Separation of Males and Females.

The female ward is distinct from those of the males. The males, however, see the female prisoners as they go in and out of chapel, as the females pass the men's yards, No. 2 and 3, in their way to chapel. But it would be possible for them to go through the Keeper's house to the chapel, so as to avoid being seen by the men. The female ward is never appropriated to the use of males, even though there may be no female prisoners in custody.

3. Religious and other Instruction.

Chaplain.

The Chaplain (Rev. G. M. Fowke) resides at Halstead, and has no other clerical duty. He reads daily prayers selected from the Liturgy, and on Sundays performs divine service twice, with one sermon. The hour of his attendance for daily prayers is uncertain, but not later than noon. The Holy Communion is never administered. The Chaplain keeps a journal of attendances—no character book. He goes round the prison once a-week, and converses with and instructs the prisoners as he finds occasion, remaining in the prison for about an hour. On his weekly inspection, he states that he visits the prisoners in solitary confinement. If unavoidably absent, he procures the assistance of another clergyman. A list of prisoners absent from chapel on account of sickness, or solitary confinement, is kept. The Keeper, Turnkey, Matron, usually attend. The prisoners occasionally talk in chapel, the arrangement of the pews being unfavourable for the officers' inspection. The women usually enter chapel after the men, who consequently can see them coming in. The chapel is in the front of the prison, under the same roof as the Keeper's house. It is close, and badly ventilated.

Instruction.

The prisoners are stated to be supplied with Bibles, prayer books, and tracts of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, selected by the Chaplain; but we found that, in more than one instance, prisoners who could read had not had the use of any book at all.

Books.

There is no schoolmaster, or systematic instruction; but the Chaplain gives casual instruction in reading to juvenile offenders, and some others. Considering that a prisoner is very rarely confined here for more than three months, and the great majority of them for less than two, it could not be expected that if even there were any regular instruction, any favourable moral effect would in general result from it.

4. Health.

Surgeon.

The surgeon resides in Halstead, and attends occasionally, and when sent for, but he does not attend to examine prisoners on admission, before passed into the wards, nor does he regularly visit those in solitary confinement, unless reported sick. Silence is not required in the infirmary.

Sickness.

At the time of our visit, there was only one prisoner sick, who had the itch. The proportion of sick to the total number confined in the year to Michaelmas 1836 was:—cases of slight indisposition 8 per cent, infirmary cases 5·44 per cent; deaths none. The average number of days during which each invalid remained on the Sick list during the last year was fourteen. The dampness of the building has probably tended to produce ague, several cases of which have occurred, but scurvy has not appeared, the periods of confinement being in general too short to affect the constitution.

Diet.

The diet is that prescribed by the Provisional Rules, (see Springfield,) which are publicly affixed in the prison. The cost appears high, being stated at £6 3*s.* 6*d.* per head per annum, or 2*s.* 4½*d.* per week. See Dietary Table, Appendix A, No. 18.

Prisoners finding themselves.

Prisoners before trial, or under examination, receive provisions from friends, or buy to the amount of 2*s.* 6*d.* per week. They are allowed to purchase a pint of beer a day.

Clothing and Bedding.

The annual cost of clothing and bedding per head is stated at £1 13*s.* 6*d.* There is no prison dress; and the Keeper therefore buys second-hand clothes for such prisoners as require them, which he charges in his accounts. The prisoners sometimes destroy their clothes, and are punished when detected. The bedding appeared to be dirty, and out of order. It is aired in the yards in summer, but not in winter.

Washing.

The whole of the prisoners' linen is washed within the prison. The rooms and cells are washed as the weather permits—not always daily. The building is lime-washed annually, but it wants painting in several places. It was not particularly clean: the prevalence of damp and the bad state of the drainage were very observable.

5. Prison Punishments.

Punishments.

The only Return of punishments for the last year which we could obtain from the Keeper was as follows:—"The number of punishments from 1st January to 31st December, 1836, was 12, for being disorderly." The punishments consist principally in locking up in dark cells. No prisoner has been whipped during the last year. Whipping, when performed, is in the presence of the surgeon, with a cat-of-nine-tails: the ordinary number of lashes being 24.

6. Officers.

Officers.

The number of officers, and their salaries, is stated in the Appendix, No. 21. The Governor and Matron are the only resident officers, the Turnkey residing in the town, and sleeping at his own house. He leaves the prison at 8 P. M., and comes in the morning at the time of unlocking.

Keeper.

The Keeper, Mr. George Wright, was appointed in 1827, and is 53 years of age. He states that he is daily in all parts of the prison, and occasionally visits at night. He is obliged to attend the magistrates' petty sessions, sometimes three or four times a week. He keeps a sort of journal, but few occurrences are entered in it.

Matron.

The Matron is 70 years of age, and appears unfit for active duties. Her labours are, however, not heavy, for in the course of the three years ending 31st December, 1836, the number of female prisoners committed was only 52, and the greatest number at any one time five. At the time of our visit there were not any female prisoners in custody.

The number of officers is, we think, insufficient for the preservation of discipline, especially considering the want of means of inspection, and the frequent unavoidable absence of the Keeper in attending prisoners.

Books, &c.

The only prison-books and accounts are as follows:—Receiving-book, number-book, day-book, journal, and some small books, submitted to the Visitors every quarter, such as sick, diet, money to prisoners on their discharge, clothing book, &c., &c.

7. Miscellaneous.

Population of Prison.

The number in custody at the following dates was:—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 18 February, | 1835 | 11 |
| Ditto | 1836 | 13 |
| Ditto | 1837 | 18 |

The greatest number at any one time in each of the three years to Michaelmas 1836 was:—

|---|---|
| 1834 | 64 |
| 1835 | 50 |
| 1836 | 38 |

And the total number committed in each of those three years was:—

|---|---|
| 1834 | 388 |
| 1835 | 259 |
| 1836 | 230 |

I.
HOME DISTRICT.

County Gaols.

Essex.

Halstead House of Correction.

Recommittals.

The proportion of recommittals to the number committed in the year ending Michaelmas 1836 (230) appears to have been no less than 50 per cent. The Keeper said that he continually recognised his prisoners as old acquaintances, besides those who had previously been confined elsewhere.

Juvenile Offenders.

The proportion of offenders under the age of 17 upon the whole number confined in the last-mentioned year (257) was 12·45 per cent. The number of juvenile offenders in custody is sometimes 10 or 12; seldom more.

Military Prisoners.

The usual allowance of 6*d.* per diem is paid for deserters, but there are rarely any in custody, and scarcely ever any smugglers.

Visiting Justices.

There is at present no visiting justice within seven miles of this prison; but there are four meetings of the visiting justices in the year to pass the accounts: one of the magistrates is stated to look in occasionally.

General Observations.

This House of Correction is only twelve miles distant from that of Colchester, and is one of six Houses of Correction for the County of Essex. The system is so lax, that it is idle to suppose it has any deterring effect, and the bad construction of the building renders it wholly inapplicable to the purpose of separate confinement, and scarcely to that of a rigid discipline of silence. The dampness and insecurity of the prison are also serious evils, and the filthy arrangement of the sleeping-cells, being also privies, deserves strong censure. The prison is improperly situated: either a new building should be erected on a more fit spot in the neighbourhood, or it should be abolished, and the prisoners transferred to some other House of Correction.

We beg to refer to the Appendices to this Report, marked A, B, and C.

NEWPORT, ESSEX, HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

1. Site, Construction, &c.

Newport House of Correction.
Description.

This prison is one of the six Houses of Correction for the county of Essex, and stands in the high road in the town of Newport, distant 24 miles from Halstead House of Correction, and about three from the town gaol of Saffron Walden. It is a very old building, having existed long before its enlargement about 60 years since, and is in indifferent repair, the floors being rotten in several places. It is not fire-proof. It is not very secure, but there has not been any escape since the year 1828, when two prisoners, E. B. and J. S., escaped from one of the day-rooms by getting over the paling of their yard, only eight feet high, and making off by the back gate of the premises. There are no means of inspection, the plan being an irregular one. The wall of the inner yard is 20 feet high, and the outer boundary wall 14 feet. There is a space of about an acre and a half on two sides of the prison, used as garden ground, upon which the present building might be extended.

Newport House of Correction.

Number of Rooms, &c.

The prison is not overlooked by other houses. The Keeper's house stands in front, and the number and dimensions of the prison apartments are as follow:—

Ground floor, one day-room, 45 feet long, 17 feet wide, and 8 feet 9 inches high;
one room, 17 feet long by 6½ wide, same height;
one day-room, 16½ feet long, 14 feet wide, and 9 feet high;
one sleeping-room, 14 feet long, by 10 feet wide, same height;
one large, and two small airing-yards.
First floor, one sleeping-room, 21 feet long, 17 feet wide, and 7 feet high;
one do. 15½ feet long by 13½ feet wide, same height;
two do. 13½ feet long by 10½ feet wide, and 7½ feet high;
one do. 10½ feet long by 9½ feet wide, same height.

The prison might thus contain nine prisoners in separate rooms. The greatest number in custody at any one time in the last three years was 16.

Soil, &c.

The soil is gravelly and dry, but the drainage seems to be indifferent, as the privies are offensive. There are two privies up stairs, much too near the sleeping-rooms. There is no ventilation of the sleeping rooms beyond opening the windows; but the rooms are large, and tolerably airy unless too crowded. The site of the building is considered healthy.

2. Discipline.

Discipline.

There is no regular system of discipline, nor any hard labour or employment, except in gardening, or little jobs of cleaning, &c. about the premises. The prisoners associate in the daytime, without being required to keep silence, and frequently sleep several in a room at night. Males and females are, however, kept in separate wards, and boys are sometimes locked up separately to prevent their contamination. Prisoners under examination are also separated from the convicted as much as possible. The prisoners often sleep two in a bed, and the Keeper admitted that, in some instances, two male prisoners had slept together in one room, without a third, contrary to the Gaol Act. About six visitors are stated to have been admitted last year. They see the prisoners from the window of the Keeper's house in his presence. Letters are only allowed under the Keeper's inspection. If the prisoners have money on their admission, it is taken from them and accounted for on their discharge.

Visitors.

Punishments.

Punishments are very rare, and none have been inflicted for a year past. Only two prisoners are stated to have been whipped in the course of the last seven years, which was done by the constable without the presence of the Surgeon.

3. Religious and other Instruction.

Chaplain.

The Chaplain (Rev. D. G. Monk) is also vicar of Newport, where he resides. He reads prayers selected from the Liturgy daily at 8 A. M., and performs divine service twice on Sundays, with one sermon. The Holy Communion is not administered. The Chaplain keeps a journal of his attendance, and, in case of his unavoidable absence, prayers are read by the Keeper's nephew. There being no chapel, the large day-room is used for that purpose, in which all prisoners, male and female, assemble together.

No Chapel.

Books.

There is no regular instruction; but Bibles, Prayer-books, and spelling-books are occasionally furnished to the prisoners.

4. Health.

Surgeon.

The Surgeon resides at Saffron Walden. He attends when sent for, and occasionally looks in at other times. He has no regular salary, but is paid according to his services. There is not any infirmary. The proportion of sickness is small, having been only 4·40 per cent. upon the whole number confined in the year to Michaelmas last. Only one death has occurred within the last ten years.

Sickness.

Diet.

The diet consists of one pound and a half of bread, and three pints of oatmeal gruel per diem, and an additional pint of oatmeal gruel per diem after one month's imprisonment. These articles are supplied by the Keeper, at the following prices:—

Gruel, including salt, 1*d.* per head per diem.
Flour at 8*s.* 11*d.* per bushel, or according to market price.
Allowance for baking bread, 2*s.* 8*d.* per bushel.

The dietary table is not affixed in any part of the prison.

Prisoners maintaining themselves.

Prisoners under examination are allowed to find themselves with provisions, or to purchase to the amount of 2*s.* 6*d.* per week, including a pint of beer a-day.

Clothing and Bedding.

There is no prison dress, and prisoners are not usually supplied with any clothing. The supply of bedding is scanty; it is aired in the yards in summer, but not in winter.

Washing.

The prisoners' linen is all washed in the house. The rooms are washed daily in summer, and twice a-week in winter, and the prison is limewashed at least once a-year. It appeared clean at the time of inspection.

5. Officers.

Officers.

The only officers are the Keeper and his wife, who acts as Matron, as stated in Return in the Appendix.

Keeper.

The Keeper, Mr. John Mead, has held that office for ten years, and is 47 years of age. He is frequently obliged to be absent in attending the magistrates, and in conveying prisoners to Chelmsford or Halstead. On those occasions his son-in-law, or nephew, takes charge of and sleeps in, the prison. He keeps no journal of any kind, but merely an account-book of expenses and register of prisoners. Besides the allowances for victualling the prisoners before-mentioned (and which are, of course, illegal), the Keeper charges in his accounts several petty items, such as 10*s.* per quarter for shaving the prisoners. When he attends the sessions he receives 12*s.* per diem for his expenses, and is allowed, for removing prisoners, 10*d.* per mile for one, 7*d.* per mile for two, and 6*d.* per mile for three or more, besides 5*s.* per day and 2*s.* 6*d.* per night for his own maintenance, and 1*s.* for that of the prisoner.

6. Miscellaneous.

Population of Prison.

We found only two male prisoners in custody, and the number seldom exceeds six or eight at a time. The greatest number at one time in each of the three years to Michaelmas last was—

|---|---|
| 1834 . . . . . | 79 |
| 1835 . . . . . | 58 |
| 1836 . . . . . | 89 |

and the total number committed in each of those years was—

| | |
|---|---|
| 1834 . . . . . | 79 |
| 1835 . . . . . | 58 |
| 1836 . . . . . | 89 |

Of the 89 committed in the last year, 35 appear by the register to have been committed for examination, and 54 under summary convictions.

Recommittals.
Juvenile Offenders.

The re-committals in the last year appear to have been in the proportion of 15 per cent. to the total number committed, and the juvenile offenders, under 17 years of age, in the proportion of 3·29 per cent. to the total number confined. The returns in regard to the former are, however, little worthy of credit.

General Observations.

This prison is useful as a receptacle for offenders remanded for further examination by the magistrates, who sit once a fortnight in petty sessions at Saffron Walden and Bishops Stortford. Prisoners are also occasionally sent hither to prevent their communication with associates in Springfield. But it is wholly unfit for the purpose of a house of correction, either for persons summarily convicted, or others; having no means of hard labour, or any corrective discipline.

HERTFORD COUNTY GAOL AND HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

1. Site, Construction, &c.

Description.

This prison is the common gaol and house of correction for the county of Hertford, and is under the jurisdiction of the sheriff and visiting justices. It stands on the high road, a little out of the town of Hertford, and is an oblong building, of an irregular construction. It consists of four principal divisions, viz. the gaol, a very old building; the house of correction, erected in 1790; a ward called the Borough Gaol; and another appropriated to a female prison. The keeper's house is at the entrance of the gaol, and there are altogether 12 wards, in 4 of which there are tread-wheels, 12 airing-yards, 8 day-rooms, and the following number of sleeping-cells, viz.:—

Wards.

Cells.

|---|---|
| Gaol . . . | 10 Cells, 16 ft. long, by 12 ft. wide. |
| | 5 Ditto, 11 ditto, by 7 ft. 6 in. ditto. |
| | 1 Ditto, 15 ft. 9 in. ditto, by 13 ft. 6 in. ditto. |
| | 1 Ditto, 17 ft. ditto, by 13 ft. 6 in. ditto. |
| | 1 Ditto, 20 ft. 6 in. ditto, by 13 ft. 6 in. ditto. |
| Debtors' Yard . . | 8 Ditto, 16 ft. 6 in. ditto, by 12 ft. ditto. |
| | 2 Ditto, 10 ft. ditto, by 12 ft. ditto. |
| Bridewell or House of Correction | 26 Ditto, 8 ft. ditto, by 6 ft. ditto. |
| | 22 Ditto, 8 ft. ditto, by 5 ft. ditto. |
| | 2 Ditto, 6 ft. ditto, by 5 ft. ditto. |
| Infirmary Yard . . | 3 Ditto, 12 ft. ditto, by 6 ditto. |
| Borough Gaol . . | 4 Ditto, 12 ft. ditto, by 8 ft. ditto. |
| Women's Yards . . | 4 Ditto, 12 ft. ditto, by 8 ft. ditto. |
| Total . . | 89 Cells or Rooms. |

This accommodation is insufficient for the separation by night of even the average number in custody, and wholly inadequate to the case of any extraordinary influx of prisoners, such as that at the time of our visit, when the number in confinement was 171. The cells in the old gaol are very close, having no proper ventilation, and those in the house of correction, although they have pipes, are also close. The latter cells are damp, and the prisoners complained of the cells being cold in both divisions of the prison. The house of correction cells are in double rows, opening into each other, and divided only by a nine-inch wall and a two-inch door, so that the prisoners can talk through with ease. The other partition walls are of the thickness of 14 inches. The building is somewhat out of repair, and the expenses of repairs for the last five years have been considerable, having averaged 329*l.* per annum. The floors of the day-rooms and the brick pavement in the yards are out of order. The prison is not very secure, and the walls of the house of correction are so thin that on one occasion the prisoners broke through them; there has not however been any escape for the last twelve years. There is a small space of garden ground between the buildings and the boundary wall, but not sufficient for any considerable extension of the wards. The height of the boundary wall is 16 feet 6 inches. The prison is not fire-proof, and not insured. The only means of inspection are, that the back windows of the keeper's house overlook the gaol-yards, and the upper part of the mill-house overlooks the house of correction. The prison is not commanded by any other buildings, and there is a considerable space of open rising ground behind it. The soil is damp, and the drainage is so bad that it does not carry off the water, and the yards have been at times quite flooded in consequence. From the bad state of the drainage the privies are out of order, and cast a most offensive smell, particularly in the old gaol, where they adjoin some of the sleeping-cells, which are otherwise too close. The prison is situated about half a mile from the County Hall, in which the Assizes and Sessions are held, and its locality is in that respect convenient, and is considered healthy.

Insecurity.

2. Discipline, &c.

Rules.

By the Rules, Silence is required to be enforced upon prisoners after trial. Tobacco is prohibited. Convicted prisoners are not permitted to receive visits or letters for the first six months, except under pressing circumstances, and by a magistrate's order. Day-rooms are to be discontinued. The chaplain is to reside within the borough of Hertford, and to devote his whole time to the prison. The punishment of whipping is to be defined. A turnkey is to be allotted to each division in which prisoners work; and a schoolmaster is to be appointed.

System.

The system of management may be described to be;—for the untried, association by day in the yards and day-rooms, with separation by night when there are cells sufficient; for the convicted, association in silence during the hours of labour, with separation at night and during meals, when the number of cells is sufficient; otherwise, association at those times. Prisoners sentenced to solitary confinement are kept in a state of modified separation in their cells, with exercise in the yards, and intercourse with the chaplain and officers.

Classification.

The classification directed by the Gaol Act we found violated in almost every ward. In the gaol yard No. 1, a prisoner committed for trial for a misdemeanor was in the same yard with 20 others committed on charge of felony. In gaol yard No. 3, several prisoners committed under the Vagrant Act were in the same yard with others summarily convicted of misdemeanors. This ward, although part of the gaol, was appropriated to convicted prisoners, for want of Hertfordshire.

Hertford County Gaol and House of Correction.

room in the house of correction. In Gaol yard No. 4, we found an assemblage of prisoners of almost every description. Two for trial on charge of felony (one of them sick), three tried and sentenced for misdemeanors, two untried for want of sureties, one summary conviction for misdemeanor, one as king's evidence, and one remanded for further examination. In each of the four yards of the house of correction we found some prisoners convicted of felony, others summarily convicted of misdemeanors, and also vagrants, kept in the same yard and working together. In the female prison, women before and after trial were placed together, although there are two distinct wards.

Association of Untried.

By reference to the list of prisoners, Appendix B, the particular persons and offences classed together will be at once seen. The keeper's excuse for the disregard of classification, was the crowded state of the prison; which might be a sufficient reason for appropriating a part of the gaol to convicted prisoners, but not for mixing them together in so many wards in the way described. We notice the neglect of classification, however, rather as a violation of the existing law, than on account of any importance attached to it in itself.

The prisoners confined together for trial were committed for the most opposite kinds of offences, and there appeared to be as much difference among them in point of character. The following, for instance, were in the gaol yard No. 1:—

R. B., burglary.
T. L., (aged 15), stealing two sheep.
W. C., stealing a rabbit-trap.
E. P., night poaching and assaulting keeper.

In Gaol-yard, No. 2:—

G. G., an unnatural crime.
J. G. (aged 14), stealing two sovereigns and silver.
T. B., night poaching and maliciously shooting.

In the Female Prison, No. 1:—

A. R., obtaining goods by false pretences.
S. W., stealing billet-wood.

There are, of course, in such a system of association, abundant opportunities of contamination, especially as regards the boys. A schoolmaster instructs such of the untried as are willing to be taught for a part of the day; but they have still much idle time on their hands, and consequently play at tossing halfpence, chucking buttons, and such amusements. It has been under consideration to provide the untried with the means of profitable employment, such as mat or mop-making, but no decided step towards this has yet been taken by the magistrates.

Silent System.

It is endeavoured to enforce silence by three turnkeys, whose duty it is to watch the prisoners in four wards; wardsmen or staffmen are not employed for this purpose. When the prisoners are off the wheel, they are required to keep at the distance of two yards from each other. They are not punished for mere breach of silence, but reprimanded, and if the offence is frequently repeated, are treated as refractory, and locked up. Of 56 punishments stated to have been inflicted in the year 1836, 26 only may be construed to be applicable to breach of silence, viz. those for being disorderly, noisy, and refractory, a small number compared to that of the whole of the convicted prisoners in the course of the year, which probably exceeded 500. The meals are taken in the sleeping-cells. The presence of the turnkeys prevents the prisoners holding any lengthened conversation; but the turnkeys have sometimes occasion to leave the yards, and even when they are in the yards the prisoners find opportunities of asking each other questions, and talking in a casual way. The evidence of officers and prisoners confirms the fact of talking being carried on in the yards and on the wheel, and they can also communicate whilst washing, and on the way to chapel. We heard talking in two instances, in one of which a prisoner was showing another a pair of ear-drops which he had in his possession. But even if silence could be strictly enforced by day, the effect of it would be destroyed by the facility of talking from one sleeping-cell to another, the cells being divided, as was before stated, by only a nine-inch wall and a two-inch door. In these cells, a prisoner has been overheard reading to the man in the next cell. Moreover, at the time of our visit, about one-third of the convicted prisoners were sleeping together several in a room, from the deficiency of cells in the house of correction.

Association by night.

The whole of the untried, and about one-third of the convicted, were sleeping several together in a cell at the time of our visit, and for the most part three in a bed. Some slept on the floor, for want of bedsteads. The rooms in which more prisoners than one slept at night, were—

An open balcony surrounds the cells in the first floor of the gaol, into which they open. A watchman parades the yards and balcony the whole night, and usually enters the several rooms and cells with the turnkey at 10 o'clock. This, however, can be but an inefficient check against talking when several prisoners are placed in the same room.

Labour.

The corrective labour consists of four tread-wheels, which contain 8 prisoners each at a time. The working hours vary from 6½ to 9½, according to the season, and the number of feet of ascent varies of course in proportion. The following is the scale of tread-wheel labour:—

The treadmill grinds the flour for the use of the prison, and also for hire. The profits of the latter in the year ending Michaelmas 1836 were 103*l.* 9*s.* 5*d.*, which were applied to the credit of the county. The labour is rendered more severe by the prisoners being obliged to wear shoes with thick wooden soles. There is no crank-wheel in use. When the tread-wheels are not filled by convicted prisoners the untried are allowed to work at them, and to receive the increased diet of the house of correction; and they are in general willing to be so employed, for the sake of the diet; so that the situation of the convicted prisoner is considered preferable to that of one before trial.

Menial Services.

At the time of our visit, 9 male and 7 female prisoners were employed in various menial services about the prison. None of the prisoners are employed as wardsmen or monitors, or are otherwise placed in authority over the others, except as nurses to the sick.

Female Prisoners.

There were 11 female prisoners in custody at the time of inspection. Ten of them occupied the two wards in the female prison; and one having a peculiar disease, was placed by the surgeon's order in a separate ward, used as a kind of lazaretto, near the entrance of the gaol. The convicted women were employed in washing and mending the prison bedding. The classification of the Gaol Act had not been regarded, for the alleged reason of want of room. One woman convicted of felony we found had been for some weeks in the ward of the untried for this reason. The matron stated, that when she had occasionally to deal with the more depraved class of women, they were very difficult to manage; and that one such, was sufficient to corrupt all the others.

It does not appear that there is any systematic communication between males and females; but male prisoners bring coals into and remove dust from the female wards, which might afford an opportunity for intercourse; and instances have been known of meat having been thrown over into the female prison by the male cook in the adjoining yard, in which the prison cooking-house is situated.

Visits and Letters.

Prisoners before trial and debtors are allowed to receive visitors daily; but the convicted are prohibited by the rule before mentioned from receiving them for the first six months, except by a magistrate's order under pressing circumstances. Prisoners before trial see their visitors from the grated window of the governor's kitchen, and the convicted at the door of the house of correction, both being in the presence of the turnkey. Any baskets or parcels brought by visitors are searched. The keeper exercises a discretion in refusing the admission of visitors under suspicious circumstances. All letters to or from prisoners are inspected by him.

Money.

The money of the convicted is taken from them on their admission, and accounted for on their discharge; but the untried are allowed to retain a small sum in order to purchase provisions. There is not however any limited amount in this respect.

Tobacco.

Tobacco is prohibited by the late Rules, but the debtors are still allowed to use it. The officers state that they have frequently detected prisoners with it, and that they are much inclined to secrete it about their persons on admission. It does not appear, however, that any punishment for the use of tobacco has been inflicted within the last year.

Newspapers, &c.

The debtors take in newspapers, and as their parcels are seldom searched, have the opportunity of reading miscellaneous books; but it does not appear that the prisoners on the criminal side obtain newspapers; or books, except those authorized by the chaplain.

Gaming.

An instance occurred in the course of the last year in which two convicted prisoners were detected in gambling, and punished; but as most of the prisoners are very poor, it is not a frequent occurrence. The untried are however apt to play at idle games, such as chucking buttons and the like, to fill up their time.

Debtors.

The cells of the debtors' ward, and the open balcony round them, look into the gaol yard No. 4, so as to give an opportunity of communication with the prisoners there. The brick paving of the debtors' yard is very damp, and the drainage bad. There were six debtors in custody at the time of our visit for debts of small amount, with one exception, in which the debt was 2870*l.* There being 10 cells in the ward, each of the debtors might have slept separately; but in two instances we found that two debtors were sleeping in one cell, without a third person. In one of these instances, however, the two debtors were brothers. The debtors are not restricted in regard to money, tobacco, newspapers and books, and those not receiving gaol allowance may provide themselves with eatables, and a pint of wine or a quart of beer per diem; but not with spirits, except by order of the surgeon. Visitors are permitted daily, with the restriction that none but relatives can remain more than an hour, or be admitted twice in the same day. Bundles and parcels for debtors are liable to be searched, but the search is not generally made.

3. Religious and other Instruction.

Chaplain.

The chaplain (Rev. C. U. Bury) resides within the borough of Hertford, as required by the Rules, and has no other preferment. He reads prayers selected from the Liturgy and expounds the Scriptures every morning at 10 o'clock, and performs Divine service twice on Sundays, with one sermon. He does not administer the Holy Communion. In case of his unavoidable absence, he finds another clergyman as a substitute. After daily prayers, the chaplain remains for several hours in the prison attending the prisoners in private, including those under punishment. He keeps a journal, but not a character-book. An account of the chaplain's duties is subjoined (Appendix D), and our impression of the manner in which he performs them is very favourable; but however faithful may be a chaplain's labours, they must always be more or less in vain whilst association and communication by day and night prevail to so great an extent as in this prison. The chapel is an oblong room, divided into seven pews on the ground floor, and without a gallery. Four of the pews were intended for the gaol, two for the house of correction, and one for the female prisoners; but from want of room it is impossible to classify the prisoners properly in the pews. The reading pulpit and officer's pews are placed in a side gallery opposite to the prisoners, but from the construction of the pews the prisoners cannot all be seen. The chapel is not properly ventilated; and, when full, the air is so offensive as to be scarcely endurable for the period of Divine service. No written list is kept of absent prisoners. They are occasionally detected in talking in chapel, but not often. Three prisoners were punished for misbehaviour in chapel in the last year. The debtors attend occasionally, but are not required to do so. The keeper seldom attends chapel on the week-days, and on Sundays he is in the habit of going round the prison during a part of the time of Divine service. The matron never attends chapel, and the principal reason she assigned was, that there being no distinct seat for her, she should be obliged to sit in the same pew with the female prisoners. Three turnkeys are usually in attendance.

Chapel.

Books.

The prisoners are supplied with Bibles, prayer-books, and tracts of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, under the direction of the chaplain.

Schoolmaster.

A schoolmaster, as one of the officers, is engaged at a salary of 16*s.* per week, for the purpose of instructing the untried prisoners. He is engaged in the gaol for six hours daily. The instruction is not compulsory, but most of the untried are found willing to learn. The chaplain superintends, and is in the habit of giving small sums of money, as rewards, to encourage diligence in learning.

Instruction.

The convicted are not instructed, not even the boys. The chaplain has been desirous that some provision for their instruction should be made; but the magistrates have considered that it would interfere too much with the corrective discipline. In the case of prisoners sentenced for short terms, intimidation should be the main object of imprisonment, and much moral good can be rarely effected by instruction in reading; but exceptions should be made in the cases of prisoners sentenced for terms of sufficient length to afford a reasonable hope of their moral improvement. It appears proper in all cases to instruct juvenile offenders.

The state of elementary instruction among the prisoners may be judged of by the keeper's Return, that of 613 committed in the year ending Michaelmas last, 380 could neither read nor write, and only 12 could read and write well.

The female prisoners do not receive any kind of instruction. The chaplain does not visit them, from the want of a private room, and the necessity for the matron's presence.

4. Health.

Surgeon.

The surgeon resides in the town of Hertford. He attends and sees every prisoner on Mondays and Thursdays, and comes at other times when sent for. He does not examine prisoners before passed into their wards, but inspects them on his next visit after their admission, and also sees prisoners under punishment when on his general visits. In so large a prison as this, the surgeon's attendance ought to be at least daily, and the duty of examining prisoners on admission ought to be strictly enforced.

Infirmaries.

There are no especial rules for the infirmaries, and silence is not observed in them. The preservation of order is entrusted to the prisoner employed as nurse. We felt it our duty to call the attention of the visiting justices to the improper position of a privy opening into the male infirmary, and are glad to understand that they have since directed its alteration.

Sickness.

There were six infirmary patients at the time of our visit, three of whom were affected with scurvy, and had exactly the same symptoms as were observed at Springfield, viz., purple spots and contractions of the legs, and swelled gums. This disease does not appear until after a prisoner has worked for about six months on the wheel; but it rarely happens that a prisoner so works for eight months without his constitution being affected by it. The surgeon attributes it to continued hard labour, with insufficiency of and want of variety in the diet. A considerable number of prisoners (56 at one time) were lately afflicted by the prevailing influenza; but the state of health in general is favourable, as compared with that in other prisons. In the year ending Michaelmas 1836, the cases of slight indisposition were 9 per cent. upon the total number confined, the infirmary cases 1·49 per cent., and there was no death. The greatest number of sick at one time in that year is stated to have been 7.

Diet.

The gaol allowance is 24 ozs. of bread daily, and nothing else. The house of correction diet for prisoners at hard labour is—

|---|---|
| Sunday,Tuesday,Thursday, | 32 ozs. of bread. |
| Monday,Wednesday,Friday,Saturday, | 32 ozs. of bread,1½ pint of soup,1 pint of milk-porridge. |

The soup contains 6 oz. of meat without bone, in a quart, with rice and onions. The weekly diet thus consists of 224 oz. of bread, 6 pints of soup, and 4 pints of milk porridge; but this, Hertford County Gaol and House of Correction.

though apparently good fare, is found scarcely adequate to preserve the health of a prisoner at hard labour for six months. The dietary table is affixed in the prison as a part of the rules. The cost of diet is stated at 5*l.* 8*s.* 2*d.* per head per annum, or about 2*s.* 1*d.* per week. Untried prisoners and debtors are allowed to be supplied by their friends, or to buy provisions, with no specific restriction, except that they are not to lay in more than a day's supply at a time. They may purchase a quart of beer, but not wine or spirits without the surgeon's order. Upon an average of the last five years, the amount of extra allowances ordered by the surgeon appears to have been 19*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*

Prisoners maintaining themselves. Clothing. The prison dress is made of linen or duck, which is manufactured in the neighbourhood. A strong jacket of this substance costs 7*s.*, and a frock and trousers 6*s.* 2*d.* It is not varied by seasons. Shirts, stockings, and shoes are also supplied to such prisoners as need them. They not unfrequently damage their clothing and bedding, and are punished when detected. Only one prisoner appears by the Return (Appendix C) to have been punished for this offence in the course of the last year. The keeper states the cost of the clothing and bedding to be at the rate of 2*s.* per head per annum, which, if correct, appears very low. Bedding. The rugs for the beds cost 2*s.* 9*d.* a-piece. Straw mats are placed under the bedding in winter to save its wear. The supply of bedding was insufficient for the number of prisoners in custody as the time of inspection. It is aired in the yards in summer, but not regularly in winter.

Washing. The prisoners are not uniformly put into the bath on admission; only such as are dirtier than common. They wash daily in their yards several at a time, and are supplied with soap, towels, and combs, but the latter were in a bad state. A part of the linen is washed in the gaol, and part out of it; the latter portion is received and distributed by the turnkey. The day-rooms and cells in the gaol appeared dirty; but we were informed that they were washed three times a-week, and oftener in the summer. The prison is lime-washed twice in the year.

5. Prison Punishments.

Punishments. A list of the particular offences and punishments in the year 1836 is given in the Return, Appendix C. In the year ending at Michaelmas last, the number of punishments is stated at 50, being 7·31 per cent. upon the total number in confinement in that year. Of these 50, 23 were inflicted upon convicted, and 27 upon untried prisoners. Of the 56 punishments stated in Return, Appendix C, 32 were upon the convicted, and 24 upon the untried. The punishment of whipping is not defined, as the rules require, but the keeper states that the number of lashes is from 30 to 60. The instrument is a cat-o'-nine-tails. The surgeon is not in the habit of attending floggings. In the year ending at Michaelmas 1836, 21 persons were privately whipped in this prison pursuant to their sentences. In regard to boys, the officers say that whipping does them more good than any other punishment.

6. Officers.

The gaoler, matron, and one turnkey, are the only resident officers; but there is a night-watchman who parades the yards and balcony, and visits the cells nightly at 10 o'clock in company with a turnkey.

Keeper. The keeper, Mr. William Wilson, has held that office for 12 years, and is 37 years of age. He gives security as gaoler to the sheriff. He does not visit the cells regularly at night, but usually visits all the prisoners daily. His salary is large; but he has to keep a clerk, and to pay, board, and lodge the chief turnkey out of his income; an arrangement which would be better altered by placing those officers on the prison establishment, and allowing the keeper a net salary. His allowances for bread, debtors' beds, and copies of warrants (amounting in the last year to 44*l.*) would also be better included in a fixed salary. The keeper has been concerned to a considerable extent in supplying provisions for the use of the prison; but in consequence of our disapproval, on the occasion of a previous inspection, of this improper practice, it has been discontinued, with the exception of a few trifling articles which the keeper still provides for the sick, &c., and for which he charges in his account of petty disbursements. He keeps a journal, which is regularly exhibited at the Sessions. The keeper is occasionally obliged to be absent in removing convicts sentenced to transportation, for which purpose he hires a stage-coach, there being no van belonging to the prison.

Matron. The matron is the wife of the miller, and resides with him in the prison. She has held the situation 9 years, and is 50 years of age. Her practice in not attending chapel has already been noticed.

Books.

The following books and accounts are kept in the prison, viz. :—

- Keeper's Journal,
- Chaplain's ditto,
- Surgeon's ditto,
- Diet book, and extra ditto,
- Clothing ditto,
- Prisoners' Description book for gaol,
- Ditto for house of correction,
- Mill Book of work and profit,
- Disbursements for gaol,
- Ditto for house of correction,
- Calendar book, and book of discharges, and of relief given on discharge,
- Debtors' book,
- Surveyor's book of repairs,
- Provision book.

7.—Miscellaneous.

Population of Prison.

The number of prisoners in custody at the following dates was—

|---|---|
| 25th February, 1835 | 127 |
| „ 1836 | 109 |
| „ 1837 | 171 |

The particular description of the prisoners at the last mentioned date will be found in the Return, Appendix B. The greatest number in custody at one time in each of the three years ending at Michaelmas, was—

|---|---|
| 1834 | 139 |
| 1835 | 135 |
| 1836 | 114 |

And the total number committed in the course of each of those years respectively was—

|---|---|
| 1834 | 654 |
| 1835 | 577 |
| 1836 | 613 |

The prison is usually fullest in the winter months from October to February, owing to the difficulty of finding employment in that season.

Recommittals.

The number of prisoners in the last-mentioned year who had been previously committed is stated by the keeper at 33, which is in the ratio of 5·38 per cent. to the total number committed; but the number is so small that we doubt its accuracy, even as regards this prison, as all the officers remark that the same offenders are continually returning.

Juvenile Offenders.

The number of offenders under the age of 17 in the last-mentioned year was 67, being in the ratio of 9·79 per cent. upon the total number in confinement (684). The boys are not separated from the adult prisoners, unless when sentenced to solitary confinement.

Allowances on Discharge.

Small sums of money are given to destitute prisoners on their discharge, according to the distances of their places of residence, but it is not the practice to give passes.

Military Prisoners.

The usual allowance of 6*d.* per diem is received from the War Department for military prisoners, which is given to the prisoner to find himself with. The keeper says that he remembers cases in which prisoners have pretended to be deserters in order to obtain this allowance.

Poachers.

The great influx of poachers to this prison is remarkable. Of 171 prisoners in custody at the time of our visit, 56, or 32 per cent. were committed for poaching.

Borough Contract.

The borough of Hertford contracts for the maintenance of offenders in this prison, paying an adequate proportion of the county rate.

General Observations.

It will be observed, that this prison not only does not furnish the means of separation by day, but is deficient in accommodation for separation by night. The object of the Silent System, which is here most loosely enforced, is thus wholly counteracted in regard to those prisoners who sleep several in a cell.

We beg in conclusion to refer to the following extracts from evidence, and to the several Appendices to this Report, A, B, C, and D.

Selections from examinations in Hertford Gaol.

A. W., a prisoner.—"I am a prisoner in gaol-yard No. 1. I am for trial at Assizes for poaching. I can read a little. I have been 12 weeks in this prison. I have been about a month in yard No. 2, and afterwards in No. 1. I was not washed when I came in. The doctor did not examine or speak to me for a month after I came in, when I wished to see him, being ill, and he then gave me medicine. I slept in No. 2, in a room up-stairs with three others, all in single beds. In No. 1, I sleep in the corner cell on ground floor; we sleep three in a bed. There are six of us and two beds. I believe they are short of bed-clothes. J. B. for housebreaking, and a lad on charge of stealing a sheep sleep in same bed. J. B. for housebreaking, on same charge as Bright, another for keeping 20*l.* entrusted to him, and another for stealing beans, sleep in the other bed. We go to bed at 5, and are unlocked at 7. Clothes are not taken away from us. We cannot sleep all that time: we talk. We hear the watchman, if awake, when he opens the iron gate. He comes into the cell at 10 o'clock. Mr. L. the turnkey comes in with him. I have heard bad language and swearing from other prisoners. I have been once in before for poaching, but now I am innocent. The schoolmaster is generally in from 11 to 12, or thereabouts. At other times turnkey comes in now and then. We clean yard and rooms ourselves. I receive prison allowance, and friends have given me a few eatables. Some others who have things have given me some. I have only seen the maids from the governor's house windows, but no female prisoners. My wife has been to see me. The chaplain comes in twice a-week, and hears us read, and so on. He sometimes gives 3*d*. or small sums to those who read or learn well. Some of them now and then play by chucking buttons or halfpence, but the turnkey stops it. The bed-covering is not enough to keep us warm, unless we lie all together. The cell is so near the privy that it makes a bad smell, and the cell itself is close. When I am in such a place as this, I like to have a book rather than any other occupation. I have learned to read a good deal since I have been here. All are willing to learn. I knew the prisoners B. and B. before I came here: they are from my part of the country. The governor comes into our yard often, but not every day. The surgeon comes in twice a-week. I shall get employment with my father when I get out. I ought not to have been committed. I am innocent. I am aged 26. I have a wife and three children, who are now in the workhouse. I shall not be able to earn more than 5*s*. or 6*s*. a-week. I used to get about 2*s*. for a hare. I got them and sold them for bread, which I wanted."

B. T., a prisoner.—" I am a prisoner in gaol-yard No. 1, for trial at Assizes for poaching. I have been ten weeks in prison. I can read. I have a wife and child. When I first came in, I was in No. 4 yard a week for examination. There were twelve in that yard. We slept three in a bed in a room in which twelve slept up-stairs. We had not bed-clothes enough. I sleep now in a cell down stairs, in a bed with two others: three in the cell in one bed. The cell is cold at night. It is close to the privy, which smells: the cell itself smells close in the morning. I have heard swearing and bad talk, but not often. We read when the schoolmaster is gone. The turnkey comes in and out. I am now employed in white-washing. I was asked to white-wash this morning. If awake, we can hear the turnkey and watchman coming into the yard at night. We talk at night. I belong to Hertford. The governor comes daily and oftener into the yard. I was not washed when I came into the prison. I have had the ague since I have been here. I have been three times in this prison before for rows and trespasses. Was in this house of correction last May for two months. I then worked at the wheel: thought it hard labour. Used now and then to say a word whilst shaving on Wednesday and Saturday. I have spoken to the prisoner in the next cell. I knew three men who were in the house of correction. They were in other yards. I saw them in going into the yard at first. I was in No. 4. Sometimes they may speak a word in chapel. On Sunday we are locked up in the house of correction all day except chapel time. Those in adjoining cells front and back speak. I then slept up-stairs: sometimes it was damp: it was a back cell. A man from Chesham for a workhouse offence slept in the front cell. We might speak in going up-stairs together, but not to have any long conversation. Turnkey would always report, but it would be very possible to find an opportunity when he was not by. I have been employed in gas-works. I shall be employed by my brother-in-law as a porter in London. My attorney saw me through the iron gate. There are three others on the same charge, and we are to give our attorney 10*l*., whether we get off or not. I have paid my share, 2*l*. 10*s*. The turnkey took care of the 2*l*. 10*s*. for the lawyer. My brother brought it to me."

J. L., a prisoner.—" I am a prisoner in the house of correction, yard No. 2. I was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment and hard labour for poaching. I have been sixteen months in prison; 4 months before trial and 12 months after, come Thursday, when my time is out. I was never in any prison before. I can read and write. I am a single man. I was in the gaol No. 2. We slept in single beds then, four in a room; but in the house of correction I have slept single all the time. I sleep in a front cell on the ground floor: one H. sleeps in the back cell. I have spoken to him and others in the yard before breakfast. We wash singly, but are all in the yard together. Sometimes days have passed without my speaking to any one, but not often. I have heard a man swear once or twice, but he is not now here. The turnkey dines when we dine, viz. from 12 to 1. There are three turnkeys for four yards. My mother has been twice to see me after I was here six months. She only brought me clean linen. I am 23 years of age. I have been stable-man to Lord D. I want to get into that line again. I have no other books but Bible and Prayer-Book. The House of Correction is much better for one who wants to read than the gaol. My cell has been damp and cold this winter. I was ill in the infirmary about five months since, but not from scrofula; I was ill with cold. The wheel has weakened me: it weakens generally those who are here long. Locking up quite alone is considered a more severe punishment than the wheel. I saw the women pass through the infirmary-yard to chapel when I was there. I have occasionally been employed in washing for others. The wooden soles to the shoes make the legs ache."

P. G., a prisoner.—" I am a prisoner in the house of correction, in yard No. 2, under two sentences of two months and six weeks. I have been fifteen weeks in prison: was here a week before my committal for poaching. I sleep in No. 5 yard under the miller's house, with two others, viz. C. B. for running away from the workhouse, and J. B. for stealing wood. I have been twice in this prison for poaching, which I do, being out of work: it is better to do that than worse. I bought the ear-drops for a penny of a young chap, before I came into prison. Some of the others told the young man that I had a pair of drops, and he asked me to show them to him, and in so doing I was caught. The prisoners sometimes whisper on the wheel: they often ask each other, " How long have you got to stop?" and so on. The watchman does not come into our cell at night, but comes into the yard. We talk quietly. The governor comes every day. I have seen the women in going from chapel. I caught the itch since I have been here, by sleeping with a dirty man who had it. The doctor saw me, and I kept in my sleeping-cell. We all three had it."

J. M., a prisoner.—" I am aged 15, and am confined in No. 2 gaol-yard for trial for stealing a donkey. I was never in prison before, and can read but very little, and cannot write. My father is a donkey-man. I have eight brothers and sisters. I got on the donkey for a ride, and meant to bring him back, not to steal him. I have been six weeks in prison. My friends send me bread, meat, potatoes, &c. I slept for some time six in a room, and three in a bed. My bedfellows were one for pheasant-shooting, and another for horse-stealing. Now I sleep in a single cell."

J. P., a prisoner.—"I am a prisoner, at present confined in gaol-yard No. 3, but belong to the house of correction. I was sentenced to two months' imprisonment and hard labour for an assault. I am under summary conviction, and have been five weeks last Saturday in prison. I have been all the time in gaol-yard No. 3, on account of the fulness of the prison. I sleep up above in a room with two others. The cell is very cold, so we lay together, though there are three bedsteads. I have not been for a fortnight or three weeks on the wheel, from its being full. About a dozen of the 27 prisoners in yard No. 3 were on the wheel on Saturday: all those are not on the wheel to-day. I have been ill, but am now well. Those on Saturday worked from 9 till 12: not in the afternoon. They would go on the wheel every other day for three or four hours, unless sick. We dine at 12 o'clock all together in the day-room. We are not employed in the yard. The turnkey does not continue in our yard; he is in and out often. I have been once in prison before for assaulting a constable, but I am sick of prison. I would rather have any occupation but the wheel. I have been used to digging and thrashing. I have a wife and 5 children: they are on the parish whilst I am here. I earn 8*s.*, 9*s.*, and 10*s.* a-week when employed. I don't think I have victuals enough now. I cannot read or write."

E. S., turnkey.—"I am aged 32. I have been 3 years turnkey. I am turnkey of house of correction, with 2 others. We 3 look after 4 yards. I reside in the town. I go home after locking up, and come back at unlocking. I remain in the yards before breakfast from 7 to 8, while the men are washing and cleaning, and crumbing their bread for the milk-porridge. They breakfast in their cells. The men can ask a question or so. It is not in our power to prevent that; but they cannot hold a long conversation. Then they go on the wheel till 12. When they whisper and speak, we sometimes reprimand or report. The prisoners go to their cells during dinner for an hour; then they go on the wheel from 1 to 5. Then every man washes and takes a little water and goes to his cell, and is locked up for the night. I find men not sentenced to labour ready enough to work for extra diet. There is nothing to prevent talking at night but the watchman. One turnkey has charge of 4 wards, and does the best to hear. I have heard bad language. I have been abused by a prisoner, but that has seldom happened. They hate being locked up; they do not like the wheel, but come back to prison for want of employment. There is a vast number of poachers, and a great shoal of navigators from Birmingham Railway."

R. S., a female prisoner.—"I was sentenced to 6 months' imprisonment for stealing goods from lodgers. My husband is a labourer. I have 3 children. One child 7 months old is with me in prison. I was a month here before trial; I was then in the trial-yard. I have been in the trial-yard all the time since my trial, though I ought to have been in the house of correction, because the house of correction yard was full. To-day I am in my proper yard. A male prisoner brings in coals, but the matron comes to the door with him."

Maidstone County Gaol and House of Correction.
Description.

This prison stands on an elevated situation to the north of the town of Maidstone, and covers no less than fourteen acres of ground. It was built at a cost to the county of about 200,000*l*., and was first occupied in 1819, since which a separate prison for females has been erected within the south-east angle. The material of its construction is the Kentish rag-stone, dug near the spot. It is a massive and substantial building, and has hitherto required little external repair. The Courts in which the assizes and sessions are held stand in front of the prison, and there is a door opening from the back of the court-house into the prison-garden, through which prisoners are taken directly to trial without quitting the prison walls. Some few escapes have been attempted, which will be noticed under another head, as they do not appear to have been attributable to want of security in the prison. The sessions-house and the chaplain's residence are the only buildings adjoining the prison, and a carriage road surrounds and separates it from the neighbouring houses. These are mostly small, but the upper windows of several of them overlook the prison, and a lime-kiln overlooks three of the wards, (Nos. 8, 9, and 10,) the top of which has, in several instances, been used by confederates as a place of communication with prisoners, and for supplying them with tobacco. Nearly the whole of the buildings are fire-proof, with the exception of the chapel. They are not insured. The prison comprises no less than 27 wards for male, and 7 wards for female prisoners, with 39 day-rooms, airing-grounds, and covered colonnades for exercise in wet weather. The common gaol for males contains 17 wards; three of the largest wards have two day-rooms each, the others one day-room each, and to every ward there is a spacious yard. The house of correction for males consists of 12 wards, each having a day-room and airing-yard. There is a large workhouse used as a manufactory, and also a mill-house and tread-mill, divided into eight compartments. The common gaol for females consists of four, and the house of correction for females of three wards, with a day-room and airing-yard to each. The several wards are at present applied to the following purposes, viz.—

Wards.

No. 1. Used either for prisoners committed for trial at the sessions, or for convicts under sentence of transportation; contains 29 arched sleeping-cells, 8 feet 8 inches long, by 7 feet 1 inch wide; height of cells to crown of the arch, in upper tier, 9 feet 1 inch; in lower tier, 9 feet 7 inches. One double cell.

No. 2. Misdemeanants for trial. Twenty-nine cells, in two tiers, of same dimensions as those in No. 1. One double cell.

No. 3. Prisoners for trial at assizes. Thirty-nine cells, in two tiers, of same dimensions as those in No. 1. One double cell.

No. 4. Divided into two parts, A and B. Military prisoners, deserters, and casual misdemeanants committed to the gaol. Thirty-nine cells, in two tiers, of same dimensions as those in No. 1. One double cell.

No. 5. Six condemned cells, for prisoners under capital sentences.

No. 6. Nineteen condemned cells, for the same. Neither of these wards occupied at the time of inspection.

No. 7. Juvenile offenders for trial. Twelve sleeping-cells, 8 feet 8 inches long, by 7 feet 1 inch wide. Height of cells, both tiers, 9 feet 6 inches.

No. 8. Vagrants. Twelve cells, of same dimensions as those in No. 7.

Cells.

The seven wards in the female prison contain 38 sleeping-cells, of which 18 are single cells, one is for two, 11 for three, and eight for four prisoners, thus furnishing room for 85, besides the laundry, wash-house, and matron and officers' departments.

The prison has the means of accommodating 453 prisoners with separate sleeping-cells, the dimensions of which are, for the most part, 8 feet 8 inches long, by 7 feet 1 inch wide, and 9 feet 6 inches high, being more than are likely to be required under ordinary circumstances; the greatest number in confinement, at one time, during the last two years, having been 415; although at one period, in the year 1834, the total number in custody reached 533. The male prisoners, therefore, except some of the debtors, usually sleep in separate cells.

Inspection.

The means of inspection are deficient. The windows of the keeper's and turnkeys' houses have a view over some of the airing-yards, and the bridges or passages leading to the chapel have also a view over the yards, which can likewise be looked into from the passages without, through certain small apertures made in the walls for that purpose; but the colonnades can only be partially observed; and the day-rooms can only be inspected by leaving the outer doors of the wards open, in order that the officers may catch a glimpse of the day-rooms through the bars of the inner iron gate; but as the prisoners have generally the wit to retire into that part of the day-room which cannot be seen through the door-way, it is obvious that such a power of inspection as this must be quite worthless. The sleeping-cells can only be inspected by going to them.

Ventilation.

The ventilation of the cells is badly contrived; as although there are pipes for the admission of air from the passages, yet the windows in general do not open, but are composed of small panes of glass, two or more of which are left vacant to receive air, and which, notwithstanding the shutter, will admit a considerable draft of cold wind. A ventilator placed in the window, or even a window which would open and shut, would be a desirable substitute for this clumsy expedient. In the debtors' wards the windows are in a very bad state. The prisoners break them to admit air in warm weather, and they are not repaired lest they should be broken again; which is an additional reason for adopting a different kind of window. The cells used for punishment in the female prison are not sufficiently ventilated. One of them, in which a woman was confined at the time of our visit, smelled closer and stronger than it could possibly have done with a proper supply of air. The temperature of the cells gives us no reason to suspect their being too cold for health, although some of the prisoners complained of cold during the late severe weather. On 11th January, at about six P.M., during a hard frost, the thermometer in several of the cells ranged from 42 degrees to 46 degrees, the upper tiers of cells being colder than the lower. Complaints were made to us by prisoners of their cells and bedding being damp, which seems to have arisen not from any defect in the buildings, but from the admission of damp air during the day, and from the exposure of the bedding also during the day to a current of damp air in the passage, where it is aired.

Soil.

The prison stands on a dry soil, and no part of the buildings appears affected by damp. The drainage is good, by a common sewer to the river Medway. There are wells of 30 feet deep within the walls, which afford a supply of pure water. The whole of the prison is lime-washed every spring, and is now neat and clean.

Opportunity for Improvement.

There is ample space for alterations or new erections within the present boundary-wall. This prison would afford an opportunity for introducing a system of separate confinement, at a moderate expense, for the untried, by throwing down the partitions between the sleeping cells in some of the wards, and making two cells into one, so as to form rooms 14 feet 2 inches long, by 8 feet 8 inches wide. The thickness of the partition walls between the cells, (about 14 inches,) is not indeed such, at present, as to prevent communication; but as there is only a single row of cells in each passage, it would be easy to alter the cells experimentally in any given ward, with a view to the individual separation of any class of prisoners whom it might be determined so to confine. An excess of from 40 to 50 sleeping cells beyond the greatest number requisite for two years past, besides 39 day-rooms convertible into two cells each, and ample building-ground, offer the means of commencing a system of individual separation in this prison, such as few others are likely to afford at so little cost. We submit whether the magistrates might not be required to provide a sufficient number of cells of proper dimensions for the individual separation of the untried?

2. Discipline.

System.

Classification.

The system of discipline is that of association in classes by day, and separation by night, with the exception of some of the debtors and female prisoners, who sleep respectively in separate beds in the same room. The spaciousness of the prison enables the classification of the Gaol Act to be carried into effect, and there are several subdivisions beyond what the law requires. For instance, in the gaol, prisoners for trial for capital felonies, for felonies not capital, re-committals for felony, and juvenile offenders, are placed in separate wards; in the house of correction, prisoners convicted of felony are divided into several classes, according to the length of their respective periods of confinement, and juvenile convicts are also kept in a distinct ward. If classification according to the technical description of the offence were of any value, such subdivisions would be improvements: but regarding the classification of the Act as wholly worthless, we can only consider the further subdivisions as equally delusive. It is quite a mistake to suppose a man committing a capital felony more immoral, on that account, than he who commits a felony not capital. If it were so, the offence of stealing in a dwelling-house implied more depravity in 1833 than in 1834, when it ceased to be capital. It is idle to suppose that the removal of a few re-committed prisoners from the rest can prevent the bad effects arising from a system of association. Nor can the corruption of boys be prevented by classifying them in a juvenile ward together, for this plain reason, that they corrupt each other. We could not find that any practical good had resulted from this extended classification.

I.

Kent.

Association.

The untried associate at all times of the day, in their respective yards and day-rooms. The convicted also pass the day in association, at washing in the yard, at meals in the day-room, during labour on the tread-wheel, or in the manufactory, during chapel, whilst under instruction, and in fact at all times, except when locked up for the night, or when in solitary cells for punishment. We did not understand it to be in the contemplation of the visiting justices to propose the abolition of the day-rooms. The prisoners have the means of speaking to each other, whilst in their sleeping-cells, from window to window; and a loud voice can be heard through the partition walls. The precautions against talking at night consist in a watchman who goes round outside, and in the wardsman within, whose duty it is to report any noise he may hear. Talking by night is, however, seldom detected, and is probably not much the practice, as the prisoners have opportunities enough of talking by day.

Silence.

We were informed that silence was the rule of the prison; but there is no written or printed rule or order on the subject. It is, in fact, so little enforced, that no one would suppose there was any existing rule of the kind. Its enforcement in the day-rooms, at meals, washing, &c., depends entirely upon the wardsman, himself a prisoner, having other duties, such as sweeping and washing the day-rooms and cells, and bringing the food from the cooking-house, which puts it out of his power to be constantly with the others. But when the wardsman is present, the observance of silence is a mere farce. The wardsmen do not report for ordinary conversation short of a great noise or disturbance. From the statements of the prisoners, they do not seem to have the least difficulty in talking as much as they please with those in the same ward, provided they are not riotous. In chapel, where they are placed according to classes, they have the same facility, particularly as the chapel is so badly constructed that the prisoners in the gallery cannot all be seen either by the chaplain or officers. Even in the condemned cells they would seem to have the opportunity of intercourse; for the chaplain, in the month of March 1836, overheard two prisoners in these cells shouting to each other, and using low and profane language in reference to their trials. Prisoners on the tread-wheel, although under the frequent eye of the turnkey, besides a monitor, who is a prisoner, manage to talk in whispers, but have more chance of being reported and punished. The number of punishments inflicted by the keeper for talking whilst on the tread-wheel, in the year ending Michaelmas 1836, was 89; of whom 21 were confined in a dark cell for three days, 44 for two days, and 24 for one day; but it does not appear that any prisoners have been punished for the mere act of talking at other times; the inference from which agrees with the statements of the prisoners, viz., that they are allowed to talk in a quiet way when not upon the wheel. Whatever benefits, therefore, may be supposed to result from silence rigidly enforced, they have not yet been attained in this prison.

Separation of Sexes.

The position of the female prison separates it effectually from the male yards. Attempts at communication between male and female prisoners are, we believe, rare; but an instance lately occurred of a letter being thrown from the male into the female tread-wheel yard, which was suspected to have been done by a wardsman who had seen the female from the window of one of the cells in the upper tier of his ward. The fact could not, however, be fixed on him with certainty. As affording the means of communication, it should be noticed that the window of the kitchen of the male infirmary looks into the yard of the female infirmary, which, though a blind is used, ought to be stopped up, as instances of intercourse through it have occurred. The wooden partitions, also, between the male and female seats in the chapel, are so thin that holes have been cut and notes passed through them. It should also be remarked, that the head-turnkey, who is the husband of the matron, sleeps in the matron's apartments in the female prison, which are contiguous to the sleeping-cells of the women. The turnkey referred to bears an excellent character; but it is easy to imagine the abuses to which such a practice might lead; and we submit that it is contrary to the spirit, if not to the letter, of the present Gaol Act.

Labour.

The only kind of hard labour is the tread-wheel, which is divided into eight separate compartments, and will hold 92 persons at once. During the month of inspection (January) the number of working-hours at the wheel is $6\frac{1}{4}$, and the number of feet of daily ascent by each labourer, 12,000; being about one-third less than in the summer months, when the working-hours are $9\frac{1}{2}$, and the feet of ascent 18,240; so that a man sentenced to two or three months' hard labour in the summer season undergoes one-third more of the tread-wheel than he who is sentenced to the same period in the winter, and that without any difference of diet. This inconsistency is accompanied by another evil, viz., the length of time which the prisoners pass in bed in the winter months, being upwards of 15 hours, when the days are at the shortest—a space of time far too long for the prisoner's welfare either mental or bodily. These inconveniences, however, appear to be inseparable from any system of association, except in so far as that the diet might be better proportioned to the labour than it is at present. The work of the tread-wheel is disliked in itself, but on account of the superiority of the diet of prisoners at hard labour over that of others who do not work, the former generally consider their situation preferable. On a late occasion, when, to make room for an unusual number of male convicts, the females were taken off the wheel, the latter complained that they were not fairly used, as by not working on the wheel they lost the better diet which they had whilst they were on it. Those prisoners who are unfit for the wheel are employed in the manufactory in making sacking, matting, and shoes. The manufactory, although an orderly establishment, does not preclude conversation; and the liveliness attendant upon a work-room renders it anything but a place calculated for punishment. Able-bodied female prisoners are put to the wheel; but the majority of them are employed in washing, ironing, mending, &c. The tread-mill is let for grinding flour; but the gross profits of every kind of productive labour done in the prison, including the rent of the mill, do not exceed 320*l.* per annum, and after deducting the miller's and superintendent's wages, and expenses of repairs, &c., the balance in favour of the county is a mere trifle. The manufactory undoubtedly furnishes the means of labour for prisoners unfit for the wheel, but it has nothing in it of a penal character. Such labour, in society, with facility of conversation, is of course quite a different thing from what it would be in the solitude of the separate cell. The association prevents the labour being penal, or, in other words, renders it wholly useless as an instrument in deterring from crime.

Visits and Letters.

The prison has visiting-rooms for the reception of the prisoners' friends. The visiting-room is divided into three compartments with gratings between them. In one of these the visitor stands, and in the other the prisoner—the intermediate compartment being left vacant. The turnkey might occupy it, if necessary; but it is considered sufficient for him to stand just outside the door, so that he can hear the conversation. Prisoners before trial are allowed to receive visits daily, between the hours of 12 and 2, and at other times, under special circumstances. Debtors' visitors are allowed daily, from 10 till 4 o'clock, the same visitor not being permitted to come twice the same day. Convicted prisoners are only allowed to see visitors by a written order of a visiting justice, which it is not the practice to grant until four months after conviction, and a similar period intervenes before another visit. Prisoners under summary conviction only receive visits by justices' orders. The separation and gratings of the visiting-rooms prevent the possibility of a visitor giving any thing to a prisoner whilst in that situation. No particular proof of relationship is required; it is left to the officer's discretion to refuse admittance to improper persons. Letters are permitted to be received and sent by convicted prisoners as well as others, subject to the inspection of the keeper in cases where he suspects they relate to any crime against the law, or offence against the discipline of the prison. We submit, that convicted prisoners ought not to be allowed this privilege at least until they have been a definite time in prison, except under very special circumstances.

Money.

Money is taken away from all prisoners on the criminal side on their entrance into the prison, and the amount is entered in a book, that it may be returned on their discharge. Prisoners maintaining themselves have their money given them by small instalments for that purpose.

Tobacco.

The use of tobacco is prohibited; but there can be little doubt that it is habitually introduced. Some prisoners contrive to conceal it about their persons, notwithstanding their being searched on admittance; others have it secreted in the provisions which they are allowed to receive. J. J., a convicted felon in ward No. 24, informed us, that once another prisoner assaulted and pulled him down from off the wheel, because he (J. J.) had drawn some tobacco out of the other prisoner's trousers. The keeper's journal contains the following instances of prisoners punished for having tobacco in their possession within the last year, viz.—

1836.
27 March. W. H., poacher; dark cell one day, for having tobacco in his possession.
10 June. . W. A., ward No. 3; dark cell one day, for having tobacco in his possession.
19 June. . J. B., Penitentiary prisoner; punished for having tobacco in his possession.
23 Sept. . J. B., vagrant; punished for having in his possession three papers of tobacco, supposed to have been thrown over the wall by a prisoner discharged this morning, and who was seen on the top of the lime-kiln, opposite to wards 8 and 9.
6 Dec. . A. B., ward No. 20; punished for having tobacco in his possession.
18 Dec. . M. M., in hospital. During Divine service, got over the wall into the garden, and found lying on his back, with five small parcels of tea and tobacco upon him, which had been thrown over the boundary wall by friends, by his desire. The debtors use tobacco, not having been prohibited by the rules.

Newspapers and Books.

The prisoners on the criminal side have access to the publications and religious books authorized by the chaplain. The debtors take in newspapers, without restriction, and are little, if at all, restrained as to books, magazines, or other publications.

Gaming.

We discovered in the day-room of the debtors receiving the gaol allowance a number of small square stones in the form of dice, but not marked. They were evidently intended to be used as dice. The debtors can have little difficulty in obtaining either cards or dice,

Employment as Wardsmen, &c.

when they wish it, and dice have been observed in their rooms by the chaplain. The prisoners in the criminal wards occasionally cut holes in the wooden benches of the day-rooms, in order to play some games with pegs. This is one of the results of day-room association.

The employment of prisoners as wardsmen, and in menial offices in the prison, prevails here, and is regarded as an inconvenience. The wardsmen are mostly selected from those convicted prisoners who are disabled by infirmity from working at the tread-wheel, and also as a reward for good behaviour. The keeper and turnkeys agreed, however, that the duties of wardsmen would be much more efficiently performed by officers who were not prisoners. All the opinions which we could collect, concur, indeed, that the wardsmen are not to be depended upon; sometimes they secrete improper articles themselves; and it is seldom that they exercise a proper control over the other prisoners. The situation of a wardsman is generally desired, as it confers the advantage of some addition to the diet, besides exemption from tread-wheel labour. The impropriety of allowing such indulgences to any prisoner whatever, however good his conduct during confinement, can admit of no question: it is quite inconsistent with the object for which punishment is inflicted. Undoubtedly, the discontinuance of prisoners as wardsmen would occasion the necessity of having additional officers to perform their duties; but it should be remembered, that in such duties as cleaning the wards, bringing the meals, &c., no economy is justifiable which interferes with the paramount object of rendering a prison a place of punishment. A practice prevailed of the wardsmen selling writing-paper to prisoners, which was stopped by the magistrates; and we have not been able to ascertain that any of the wardsmen now derive profit from any articles sold or let to prisoners. Some of the wardsmen shave the other prisoners, and are paid for it by the county, not by the prisoners. The matron and female turnkey declared they had no confidence in the character of the wardswomen, who did not keep any thing like silence; nor could they do so, if disposed, as they had often occasion to leave the prisoners.

A number of prisoners are employed in casual services about the prison, such as whitewashing, gardening, &c., which are considered labour for punishment. Exclusive of these, the number of prisoners in regular employment as wardsmen, or in menial services, on the 10th February last, was, males 28, females 13, total 41. On that day, the total number in custody was, males 267, females 38, total 305; being a proportion of about 13 per cent. The whole of these employments were under the sanction of the visiting justices, and are particularized in the subjoined Return. See Appendix (B.)

A practice prevails of removing female prisoners from this prison to St. Augustine's, Canterbury, after their conviction; it being customary for the Courts at Maidstone, upon application previously made by the visiting justices of St. Augustine's, to sentence to that prison such female convicts as may be wanted for workwomen, as it frequently happens that there are not female prisoners enough in St. Augustine's to do the prison work. Six women were so removed in the course of the year 1836. The employment of convicted prisoners in any services which do not fall within the description of penal labour, is open to strong objection: magistrates are too prone to view the matter as merely one of economy. Occupations of this kind are sometimes not only improper, but inconsistent with the safe custody of the prisoner. As an instance of this, E. B., a female convict, under sentence of transportation in this gaol, not long since was employed, as nurse, to sit up with a sick prisoner in the female infirmary. In the morning she found means of going to the wardrobe where the clothes used by prisoners before their admission were kept, and changed her prison-dress for ordinary clothing; she then walked coolly to the prison-gate, and deceived the turnkey by telling him that she was no prisoner, but came from the town to sit up with the sick woman. Upon this the turnkey let her out, and she was not retaken till she had proceeded 2½ miles from the prison, on the Chatham road.

3. Religious and other Instruction.

Chaplain.

Chapel.

The Rev. John Winter has been 15 years chaplain of this prison. He is 48 years of age. Divine service is performed by this officer twice on Sundays; and prayers are read by him, every morning at ½ past 8; the whole Morning Prayer, according to the Rubric, being read on Wednesday and Friday, and prayers selected from the Liturgy on other days. He administers the Holy Communion, from time to time, to such prisoners as he thinks in a proper frame of mind to receive it; and attends especially upon prisoners under sentence of death. His salary is 250*l.* per annum; he has no other preferment, and resides in a house belonging to and adjoining the boundary-wall of the prison; but which has no communication with it, otherwise than by the common prison-gate. A door between the back of the chaplain's house and the prison would be a convenience; but the magistrates consider that such an alteration would be insecure. The chaplain is always accessible, and attends at night, or any other time, if sent for. He visits the prisoners in solitary confinement three times a week, and those in the dark cells daily. He sometimes talks to prisoners in the day-rooms; but from the numbers congregated there, he finds that he can do little good in that way. He superintends the schoolmaster, and himself instructs the female prisoners. The conduct of the prisoners during chapel is in general orderly; but the building is so badly constructed, that neither the chaplain nor officers can see all the prisoners in the gallery. There is no calling over the names of the prisoners before chapel; the wardsman is responsible for the attendance of the prisoners of his ward. It rarely happens that any one absents himself: but not long since, a prisoner contrived, whilst on his way to chapel, to return to his cell, and, during the service, to get over the wall of his yard, into the part near the boundary-wall; over which he would probably have escaped, if a turnkey had not seen him from one of the chapel-bridges. The keeper regularly attends chapel; but there are four of the turnkeys, including the two at the gate, who do not constantly attend; their services being required in other parts of the prison. The superintendent of the manufactory and the miller, both of whom are officers of the establishment, are not in the habit of attending, even on Sundays. These two officers, we were informed, stipulated, on their appointments, that they should not be required to attend chapel. The debtors are not obliged to come to chapel, but some of them make their appearance on Sundays. Prisoners confined in the dark cells are not allowed to attend, but those in the solitary cells attend daily. The thinness of the wooden partitions in the chapel is stated, both by the chaplain and officers, to afford easy means of communication, and the prisoners are so situated that they can make holes through them without being seen; so as to frustrate the object of classification, worthless as it is. The different classes have separate passages from their wards into their seats in the chapel; but those of the same class have ready means of intercourse whilst going to, attending at, or returning from, chapel. The chaplain lectures in the infirmary every Sunday and on alternate week-days.

I. Home District. County Gaols. Kent. Maidstone County Gaol and House of Correction.

Schoolmaster.

A schoolmaster (not a prisoner) is regularly employed, at the very moderate salary of 12*s*, per week, who instructs daily in reading, in distinct classes, the prisoners committed for trial, and the juvenile offenders. The number receiving instruction was, on 4th January, 60, and on the 11th January, 25, the variation being caused by the intervention of the sessions. On Sundays he instructs such of the convicted prisoners as, being sentenced to labour, cannot attend him during the week. His present number of Sunday pupils is 46. There is no school-room; consequently, the master is obliged to teach in the day-rooms, which is attended with several inconveniences. The chaplain instructs the female prisoners in their laundry every Wednesday and Friday, and says he finds them improve more than the men. Writing is not taught in the prison.

Books.

All books in use among the prisoners are selected by the chaplain, and are purchased from the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. A list will be found in the Appendix C.

Effect of Instruction.

Although the acquirement of instruction is left optional with the prisoners, yet there rarely appears any reluctance to attend it; and some of them, particularly the young, make fair progress in learning to read in the course of two or three months. To juvenile offenders instruction has the additional attraction of relieving them, for a short time, from the wheel—an indulgence of which few, perhaps, under the circumstances, will be disposed to disapprove. But, after all, the stock of knowledge that can be obtained in such short periods of confinement as three months and under, must be very small; and when the bad effects of association are taken into account, it is to be feared that the instances of moral and religious improvement are extremely rare. It is the chaplain's opinion that prisoners confined for short periods derive scarcely any benefit from instruction of any kind. Indeed, the best way to impart religious instruction with effect is by private converse with the prisoner; which is impossible, under a system of association; and the labours of the chaplain must therefore be chiefly confined to divine service and to the furnishing of religious books, which the prisoner, if he has time, has seldom the ability or inclination to peruse with advantage. The chaplain, who appears to perform his duties with zeal and fidelity, is decidedly of opinion that no system but that of the cellular separation of prisoner from prisoner, can afford any well-grounded hope of effecting their moral and religious improvement.

4. Health.

Surgeon.

The surgeon, who has a large private practice in the neighbourhood, has a salary of 200*l.* for his services in the prison, including medicines. He does not appear to attend constantly himself, and had not signed the attendance-book from the 13th November to the 11th January; but his assistant, who is also a regular surgeon, attends daily. The circumstance of the surgeon not performing the whole of his duties in person is irregular and improper. All the wards in which any sickness is reported are visited daily, as well as the infirmary, and patients are attended by night as well as by day. Prisoners under punishment in solitary cells are not visited, unless reported sick; the reason assigned for this is, that prisoners are always ready to complain if anything is the matter with them, and the turnkeys to report it, that there is little fear of their falling ill without its being known. One important duty of the surgeon is not performed, viz., that of examining every prisoner on admission, before he is passed into his ward. The prisoner is washed in a bath on his admission; but is allowed to enter the ward and mix with other prisoners before the surgeon has examined him—a practice too common in prisons, but contrary to the Gaol Act, and which might be the means of introducing an infectious disease. The surgeon, however, examines every prisoner before he is placed upon the tread-wheel.

Infirmary.

The sick in the male and female infirmaries are attended by a prisoner of each sex respectively. An instance has been mentioned of a prisoner escaping from the male infirmary during divine service—a circumstance which indicates no great vigilance on the part of the infirmary wardsmen, who are, of course, no better than others of their class. Silence is not required to be observed in the infirmaries, and the surgeon considers that it might have a prejudicial effect upon the recovery of invalids. It is impossible to enforce such rules in an infirmary. The treatment of sick prisoners in separate cells is the only method of avoiding the abuses which at present attend prison infirmaries.

Diseases.

The diseases appear to have been in general of an ordinary kind, such as diarrhœa, bilious affections, disordered lungs, &c. No connection can be traced between these complaints and the locality of the prison, which is believed to be very healthy. At the period of our visit (January, 1837,) only seven male and eight female patients were in the infirmary, whilst great sickness prevailed in the workhouse, the barracks, and generally in the town of Maidstone. The proportion of cases of slight indisposition in the year ending Michaelmas, 1836, was about 25 per cent. upon the whole number confined in the year; that of infirmary cases only 8·52 per cent.; and that of deaths only ·32 per cent., or seven in the whole year. The diet is supposed by the surgeon to produce a tendency to diarrhœa. The tread-wheel has the effect of reducing the prisoners in bulk, and few can endure it for long periods, such as twelve months, with the ordinary prison diet, without injury to their constitutions.

Diet.

The average cost of prison diet per head per annum for the year ending Michaelmas last was 3*l.* 17*s.* 8¾*d.*, or 1*s.* 5¾*d.* per week; but as a number of prisoners maintain themselves, instead of receiving gaol allowance, the cost of each individual actually maintained by the county will, in fact, be greater than the above sum. By the dietary table (see Appendix D, No. 18) it appears that a man employed at hard labour receives weekly 174½ ounces of solid food, 13 pints of gruel, and 4 pints of soup made of ox-heads, peas, &c., of good quality. Prisoners for trial receive 168 ounces of bread and 7 pints of vegetable soup in the course of the week. Misdemeanants not sentenced to hard labour the same, and two pints of gruel a day when employed. Poor debtors the same, with the addition of one pound of potatoes daily. The dietary table is affixed in the cooking-house and turnkeys' house, but not in any place accessible to the prisoners. Scales and weights are provided, but are rarely asked for by the prisoners.

Prisoners maintaining themselves.

The prisoners allowed to find themselves in food, bedding, and clothing, are debtors, prisoners for trial, and convicted prisoners not sentenced to hard labour. Debtors not receiving gaol allowance are permitted to purchase eatables, with no particular restriction in quantity or quality, except that they are not to lay in more than two days' supply at a time. In liquors they are limited to a pint of wine each day, or a quart of ale or strong beer. Other prisoners not receiving gaol allowance are on the same footing, except that prisoners before trial are not allowed wine, and convicts neither wine nor beer. The prisoners write their orders on a slate; a shopman comes and brings the provisions, and the turnkey takes them into the wards. The practice of allowing a convicted prisoner, under any circumstances, to find himself with provisions, notwithstanding the discretionary power vested in the justices by the 15th regulation of the Gaol Act, is extremely objectionable, particularly when the prisoners associate, and where it is not uncommon for those maintaining themselves to give a part of their provisions to others maintained by the county. The poorer prisoners do not appear to think it unfair for their richer associates to have their own eatables, but they complain of not being permitted to receive such occasional presents as their friends may be able to bring them; the rule being that prisoners must maintain themselves either entirely, or not at all.

Clothing.

The cost of clothing each prisoner is estimated at 15*s.* 6*d.* per head per annum. Some prisoners, however, clothe themselves. There is only one sort of prison dress, and it is not varied by seasons. It is a coarse woollen dress, which costs about 11*s.*, and lasts upwards of a year. The shoes and shirts are the only articles of clothing made in the prison. The keeper goes into the wards every Sunday morning before chapel, and inspects the prisoners' clothing: it is not frequently destroyed, but, when it is, the offenders are punished by solitary confinement.

Bedding.

The cost of bedding is estimated at 18*s.* 3*d.* per head per annum; but some prisoners find their own. It is bought in the town, and is every morning taken out of the sleeping-cells, and aired in the passages, or in summer in the yards. We have already observed that at this season of the year, (the winter,) the bedding frequently becomes damp by the air in the passages, and that some different mode of ventilating the cells and passages would be an improvement. Private bedding is not taken out of the cells to be aired in the same way as that of the prison.

Washing.

The prisoners' washing is not conducted with regularity, as we were informed by more than one prisoner that they now and then fall out about the use of the pail, and it is a time when the prisoners converse pretty freely together. The combs are in a bad state throughout the prison. The allowance of two combs to each ward is not sufficient, and it would be but an inconsiderable expense if every prisoner were allowed a comb to himself. The whole of the linen is washed in the prison by the female prisoners.

Cleanliness.

The personal cleanliness of the prisoners is as great as can be reasonably expected. The prison was generally clean at the time of this inspection, and the whole is lime-washed annually, as required by law. Chloride of lime is used for purifying the infirmary.

5. Prison Punishments.

The total number of punishments inflicted in the year ending Michaelmas, 1836, for offences within the prison, was 510, or about 23 per cent. on the whole number of prisoners. They appear to have consisted almost entirely of confinement in dark cells. Only one man was whipped in the year. The instrument of whipping is a cat-of-nine-tails made of cord. It is performed by a turnkey, in the presence of the keeper and surgeon, and two dozen is the number of stripes ordinarily inflicted. The number of punishments for breach of silence on the tread-wheel was 89, or 17 per cent. upon the whole number of punishments; but we could not ascertain that any punishments had been inflicted for mere breach of silence at other times. The inference is, as we have before remarked, that the wardsmen scarcely ever report for mere conversation, and that prisoners are not habitually punished for talking, unless it is during labour at the wheel, or accompanied by noise or outrageous conduct. This is further confirmed by observing the very small number of punishments inflicted on the untried, being only 29 in the year, or about 6 per cent. on 434, being the number committed for trial in the year, exclusive of debtors. A discipline of silence, to make it of any value, should be enforced with the utmost rigour, and punishment should be inflicted with certainty for breach of it: the discipline of this prison is not, in this respect, what it professes to be.

The keeper remembers only one instance of an unnatural offence attempted within this prison, which was 14 years since. The parties were tried for it by the ordinary course of law, and acquitted.

Solitary Confinement.

The punishment of locking-up in a dark cell, with reduced diet, is undoubtedly dreaded; and the imprisonment in solitary cells, pursuant to sentences of courts, is regarded as a severe punishment. R. B., a military prisoner, who had been nearly two months in solitary confinement, under sentence of a court-martial, told us that he thought his punishment much worse than the tread-wheel. The solitude of such prisoners is, however, broken by removal to a different sleeping-cell at night; where they, no doubt, find opportunities of communicating with prisoners in the adjoining cells.

6. Officers.

A list of the officers, with their salaries and allowances, will be found in the Return, No. 2.

Keeper.

The keeper, Mr. Thomas Agar, has filled that office above 15 years. He is 63 years of age, and is a lieutenant in the army. He gives security to the sheriff in the penalty of 5,000*l.* He visits the prisoners in their wards daily, or as often as practicable in so large a prison. He is not in the habit of visiting at night after locking-up. He does not make it a constant rule to examine the bedding, locks, &c., himself, but receives reports of their state from the turnkeys. He receives the complaints of all prisoners, whether made through the turnkeys or to himself directly. He never absents himself from the prison, unless upon duty or by leave of the visiting justices. He superintends the several journals, character, and account-books, kept in the prisons.

Turnkeys.

All the turnkeys but one reside within the prison. Having perceived by the chaplain's journal that information had lately been given, by a discharged prisoner, in regard to beer and tobacco alleged to have been introduced a twelvemonth before, with the knowledge of one of the turnkeys and his wife, we thought it right to make some inquiries into the matter, and found that the visiting justices had dismissed the charge against the turnkey and his wife, it being unsupported by any evidence beyond that of the discharged prisoner, whom the justices deemed unworthy of credit. There is reason to believe that one of the prisoners, employed as a cook, found the means of obtaining beer twice in a soup-pail, whilst the turnkey in question was engaged at the sessions-house; but the justices did not think there was any ground for questioning the fidelity of the turnkey, and made no entry in their minute-book upon the subject.

We have already noticed the impropriety of the head turnkey sleeping in the female prison.

7. Miscellaneous.

Re-committals.

The proportion of prisoners previously committed to this or other prisons was, upon the total number of prisoners committed, in the course of the year ending—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Michaelmas | 1835 | 18 per cent. |
| „ | 1836 | 19 „ |

Juvenile Offenders.

It appears, that, out of 1,706 committals to the criminal side of this prison in the course of the year ending Michaelmas 1836, 192 were under the age of 17, and 452 between the ages of 17 and 21. Juvenile felons are kept in separate wards both before and after trial, and they are also separated from others on the tread-wheel and during instruction. The juvenile misdemeanants and minor offenders are not, however, in general separated. In inquiring into the histories of many of these boys, we found them almost always the same. Brought up with scarcely any instruction, and imbued with no religious principles, their homes usually uncomfortable from disunion in the family, or from ill treatment; friendless outcasts upon the world, they have begun their career of crime on the first impulse of want, and continued it from inability to obtain employment. Their situation on being discharged from prison is truly pitiable, as they rarely know which way to turn, to obtain a livelihood. An instance occurred during our visit, of three boys who had been sentenced to three months' imprisonment for stealing two silk handkerchiefs, and were on the point of their discharge. Their conduct had been good whilst in prison, and one of them particularly had made great progress in instruction, and was, in the chaplain's opinion, a very promising lad. These boys were most anxious to go to sea, or anywhere to be actively employed, but did not know how to set about it, or to whom to apply. They would gladly have accepted an offer of emigration immediately upon their discharge, and might probably have turned out well. Such cases are so common, that it is impossible for private charity to render any effectual assistance, and any public provision that could be made for them on their discharge would be highly desirable.

Military Prisoners.

The number of military prisoners committed to this prison in the year ending Michaelmas last has been very considerable, being 245. The county receives 6*d.* per head per diem for their subsistence, and they are maintained as other prisoners. The visiting justices consider them a great incumbrance, as they are usually a very troublesome class of offenders. They are kept in a separate ward.

I.

Smugglers.

The Commissioners of the Customs allow 4½*d.* per diem for the maintenance of every smuggler committed to the gaol. It is paid at the gate by an officer of the Customs, and with it the prisoner maintains himself. For those offenders against the revenue laws who are sentenced to the house of correction and hard labour, the Board of Customs pays 1*s.* per head per diem, to the credit of the county, and they are then maintained by the county in the same way as other prisoners.

Population of the Prison.

The number of prisoners in custody was—

|---|---|
| On the 11th January 1835 . . . . | 378 |
| „ 1836 . . . | 361 |
| „ 1837 . . . | 294 |
| 10th February 1837 . . . | 305 |

A gradual diminution is here exhibited, which appears to be confirmed by a comparison of the numbers committed to the prison in the course of the three years ending Michaelmas 1836. The number committed was—

|---|---|
| In the year ending Michaelmas 1834 . . . | 2,167 |
| „ 1835 . . . | 1,977 |
| „ 1836 . . . | 1,832 |

For the remaining statistical and other information relating to this prison we beg to refer to the Appendix D. We have appended also copies of the printed rules affixed in various parts of this prison (Appendix A.), having omitted only those portions of the rules which consist of extracts verbatim from the Gaol Act, 4 Geo. IV. We have examined a number of the prisoners as well as the officers upon the state of the prison, but do not consider it necessary to incumber this report with the evidence taken.

APPENDIX (A).

General Regulations.

The keeper shall constantly attend the prisoners when in chapel and at the distribution of provisions, and shall, as far as may be practicable, visit every ward, and see every prisoner, and inspect every cell, once at least in every twenty-four hours.

The keeper shall keep a book, wherein he shall enter an account of every article taken from any prisoner at the time of his or her being clothed with the prison dress; which account shall be signed by the keeper and by such prisoner, or on his or her refusal, by some credible witness.

The walls and ceilings of the wards, cells, rooms, and passages used by the prisoners throughout every prison, shall be scraped and lime-washed at least once in the year; the day-rooms, work-rooms, passages, and sleeping-cells, shall be washed or cleansed once a week, or oftener, if requisite. Convenient places for prisoners to wash themselves shall be provided, with an adequate allowance of soap, towels, and combs.

Prisoners of every description, who are entitled to the prison allowance, shall be fed according to such dietaries as the court of general session shall from time to time direct for the several classes.

No dogs, poultry, pigeons, pigs, or rabbits, shall be admitted or kept within the prisons.

Every prisoner seized with any disorder shall be forthwith removed to the hospital, and in case of any putrid or infectious disorder, to the fever-ward therein. The cell from which he or she was taken shall be immediately cleansed, fumigated, and whitewashed.

Such allowance of fire shall be ordered by the visiting justices for the different wards as experience shall prove to be requisite.

Clean shirts and shifts shall be allowed to prisoners once a week.

A coal-tub, mop, broom, soil-pail, and water-bucket, shall be kept in each court, under the care of the wardsman.

The hours of beginning and of leaving work, of meals, and of return to labour, shall be notified by ringing a bell.

A warning-bell shall be rung every morning half an hour before the cells are unlocked, and every prisoner shall be required to leave his or her cell as soon as it shall be unlocked. A warning-bell shall also be rung every evening half an hour before the cells are locked.

The keeper shall not take or receive to his own use any fee, except as per Table:—

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| For every copy of the writ or warrant under which any debtor is committed | 2 | 6 |
| For every copy of each additional detainer lodged against such debtor - - | 1 | 0 |
| For every copy of a warrant under which any other prisoner is committed - | 1 | 6 |

Or such other sums as the court of general session shall from time to time direct: nor shall he take or receive any gratuity or emolument from any prisoner or other person whatever.

Prisoners committed for Trial.

Prisoners committed for trial shall be divided at the least into four separate classes; to one of which a ward with twelve cells shall be attached, solely for juvenile offenders; the others shall be classed according to character and conduct, as well as to the nature of the charges on which they are committed.

415

I.
HOME DISTRICT.
County Gaols.
Kent.
Maidstone County Gaol and House of Correction.

No prisoner before conviction shall, under any pretence, be employed at the tread-mill, either with or without his consent.

All prisoners of this description shall have every facility for labour afforded them. Those who receive any prison allowance shall, under the above provisions, be employed in some labour which is not severe, on account of the county, and shall be entitled to half their earnings; the risk and trouble of selling their goods shall rest with the county. The above proportion of their earnings shall be paid to them weekly, or carried to their account and paid to them at their discharge, at their option.

No wine shall be admitted, except in cases of sickness and under the order of the surgeon, entered in his journal.

Prisoners of this description, while they do not receive any prison allowance, and are strictly obedient to order, shall be allowed to procure for themselves and to receive any unprohibited article of diet, or any greater indulgence in bedding, linen, or other necessaries, at hours to be regulated by the visiting justices; but the same must be previously examined, to ascertain that such articles are not in a foul or impure state, or improper for admission; but in respect of liquor, no prisoner of this description shall be allowed to send for or to drink more than one quart of ale or strong beer in twenty-four hours, and if any such prisoner shall be detected in making use of the names of others to obtain a greater quantity, all parties concerned shall forfeit their claim to any future indulgence.

The hours of work in each day shall be as many as the season of the year will permit, but in no case to exceed ten hours, exclusive of half an hour for breakfast and an hour for dinner.

The cells shall be unlocked at six o'clock in the morning from the 1st of April to the 30th of September, and at sun-rise during the remainder of the year.

Prisoners of this description shall be locked into their cells at sun-set during the whole of the year.

No lights shall be allowed in the sleeping-cells, except by special permission from the keeper.

Visitors to prisoners committed for trial or for want of sureties shall be admitted to the gratings of their respective wards, (except on Sundays, Christmas-day, and Good-Friday,) between the hours of twelve and two; but under special circumstances, connected with the preparation for the prisoner's trial, they may be admitted at other times, at the discretion of the keeper, who shall also have power to refuse admission at all times to persons who have lately been discharged from prison, or to any person of suspicious character, noting every such refusal in his journal.

If any prisoner of this description shall refuse to obey the orders of the keeper or other officer of the prisons, in the execution of his or her duty, or the rules laid down for the government of the prisons; or shall strike, threaten, or forcibly resist the keeper or other officer; or shall be guilty of profane cursing or swearing, or of disrespectful behaviour to the chaplain, or irreverent conduct at chapel; or shall use abusive words; or assault, quarrel with, game with, or defraud a fellow prisoner; or shall pass the fences of his or her court; or shall attempt to escape or conspire with any person so to do; or shall wilfully waste, spoil, damage, or destroy any goods committed to him or her to manufacture, or the beds, bedding, clothes, or utensils of the prison; such prisoners shall be punished by confinement in one of the dark cells for any time not exceeding three days, at the discretion of the keeper, who shall note the same in his journal; if, on investigation, a visiting justice shall consider the offence to require it, he shall have power to inquire upon oath thereon, and to continue such punishment for any time not exceeding one month, noting the circumstances of the case and his order thereon in the visiting justices' book.

Accomplices admitted evidence for the crown, persons committed for want of sureties, and all other unconvicted prisoners, shall be confined in the separate wards prepared for them, and subjected to the rules for prisoners committed for trial.

Prisoners committed on charge of desertion shall in all cases be kept separate from other prisoners, and shall receive every encouragement to induce them to work.

Convicted Prisoners.

All convicted prisoners shall be placed in the wards allotted for them immediately on sentence being passed.

Prisoners sentenced to confinement, but not to hard labour, shall have every facility for labour afforded them; but if they receive the prison allowance, they shall be employed in some labour which is not severe, on account of the county, shall be entitled to half their earnings, and shall wear the plain coarse cloathing of the gaol.

Prisoners sentenced to confinement, but not to hard labour, while they do not receive any prison allowance and are strictly obedient to order, shall be allowed to procure for themselves and to receive any unprohibited article of diet, or any greater indulgence in bedding, linen, or other necessaries, at hours to be regulated by the visiting justices; but the same must be previously examined, to ascertain that such articles are not in a foul or impure state, or improper for admission.

In the case of prisoners convicted of offences against the laws of customs or excise, who receive a daily allowance from Government, the keeper shall require each of them to repay to the county such sum as his food has actually cost; or on refusal, such prisoner shall maintain himself entirely: such prisoners may be assigned to such class of convicted prisoners, for whom a separate ward is therein provided, as the visiting magistrates in their discreton may think fit, regard being had to the character of the prisoner and his or her conduct while in prison.

Every prisoner sentenced to hard labour shall, unless prevented by sickness, be employed every day, except on Sunday, Christmas-day, Good-Friday, and on any days appointed by public authority for fasting or thanksgiving, for as many hours as the season of the year will permit, but in no case to exceed ten hours, exclusive of half an hour for breakfast and an hour for dinner, in such manner as the visiting justices shall from time to time direct; and if such employment require previous instruction, proper persons shall be appointed to afford the same; and such prisoners shall on their discharge receive, by way of reward, such portion of their earnings as the visiting justices shall direct.

And for the purpose of encouraging persons of this description, who have been discharged from prison after undergoing the punishment to which they have been sentenced therein, to return to habits of order and regularity, the visiting justices are further authorized to retain any portion of such earnings which they would otherwise have given to such prisoner on his discharge, and to pay it to him on his coming to claim it at any period which they shall fix, and on his producing such certificate of his good behaviour as they shall require, such conditions being made known to such prisoner on his discharge.

No wine, ale, beer, or tobacco shall be admitted, except in case of sickness and under the order of the surgeon, entered in his journal.

The cells shall be unlocked at six o'clock in the morning from the first day of April to the thirtieth day of September, and at sun-rise during the remainder of the year.

Prisoners of this description shall be locked into their cells at sun-set during the whole year.

No lights shall be allowed in the sleeping-cells.

Visitors shall be admitted (except on Sundays, Christmas-day, and Good-Friday,) between the hours of twelve and two, in rooms prepared for that purpose, but only under the order of a justice of the peace for the county.

If any prisoner of this description shall refuse to obey the orders of the keeper, or other officer of the prisons in the execution of his or her duty, or the rules laid down for the government of the prisons; or shall strike, threaten, or forcibly resist the keeper or other officer; or shall be guilty of profane cursing, swearing, or of disrespectful behaviour to the chaplain, or of irreverent conduct at chapel; or shall use abusive words; assault, quarrel with, game with, or defraud a fellow prisoner; or shall pass the fences of his or her court; or shall attempt to escape or conspire with any person so to do; or shall wilfully waste, spoil, damage, or destroy any goods committed to him or her to manufacture, or the beds, bedding, clothes, or utensils of the prisons; such prisoner shall be punished by confinement in one of the dark cells for any time not exceeding three days, at the discretion of the keeper, who shall note the same in his journal.

If on investigation a visiting justice shall consider such offence to require it, he shall have power to inquire upon oath thereon, and to continue such punishment for any time not exceeding one month; or (4th Geo. 4, cap. 64, sec. 42) in the case of prisoners convicted of felony, or sentenced to hard labour, he shall have power to order such offender to be punished by personal correction.

Soldiers committed in execution of the sentence of courts martial shall be treated as other convicted prisoners.

Prisoners under charge or conviction of any crime shall attend divine service on Sundays, and on other days when such service is performed, unless prevented by illness, or by other reasonable cause to be allowed by the keeper, or unless their attendance shall be dispensed with by one of the visiting justices.

Due provision shall be made for the admission at proper times, and under proper restrictions, of persons with whom prisoners committed for trial may desire to communicate, and such rules and regulations shall be made by the justices in general quarter sessions assembled, for the admission of the friends of convicted prisoners, as to such justices may seem expedient; and the justices shall also impose such restrictions upon the communication and correspondence of all such prisoners, with their friends, either within or without the walls of the prison, as they shall judge necessary for the maintenance of good order and discipline in such prison.

The keeper shall have power to open any letters addressed to or coming from any prisoner, in cases where he shall have just cause to suspect that such letter relates to any crime which either has been committed or is in contemplation, or to any matter connected with the security or discipline of the prisons.—The keeper shall enter a minute in his journal of every case in which he shall exercise this power.

Penitentiary Wards.

Such parts of the house of correction as the visiting justices shall from time to time direct shall be denominated the penitentiary wards, and set apart for the confinement of prisoners lawfully convicted of any grand or petit larceny, or of any other crime for which they shall be liable by law to be transported. (19th Geo. 3, cap. 74, sec. 1.)

The term of imprisonment of each prisoner in the penitentiary wards of the house of correction shall be divided into three equal parts, whence three classes will arise.

As far as the arrangement of the prison will allow, the confinement and labour of those in the first period of their confinement shall be most strict and severe; of those in the second more moderate; and of those in the last period still more relaxed.

The time of removal from the first to the second, and from the second to the third class, may, either in cases of extraordinary good behaviour, or the reverse, be hastened or retarded by the visiting justices, regard being always had not to defeat the general ends and objects of these regulations; and, in case of gross or repeated instances of misconduct, the visiting justices shall have power to remove a prisoner from the third to the second, or from the second to the first class; and, upon amendment of conduct, may restore such prisoner to the class to which he or she belonged.

Every prisoner sentenced to hard labour shall, unless prevented by sickness, be employed every day, except on Sundays, Christmas-day, Good-Friday, and on any other days appointed by public authority for fasting or thanksgiving, for as many hours as the season of the year will permit; but in no case to exceed ten hours, exclusive of half an hour for breakfast and an hour for dinner, in such manner as the visiting justices shall from time to time direct. And if such employment require previous instruction, proper persons shall be appointed to afford the same, and such prisoners shall, on their discharge, receive by way of reward, such portion of their earnings as the visiting justices shall direct.

Prisoners of the first class shall, as far as the nature of their employment and the arrangement of the prison will allow, be kept apart; those of the second and third classes may work in company.

Prisoners of each class shall be clothed in coarse uniform apparel, with certain obvious marks or badges affixed, as well to humiliate the wearer as to facilitate discovery in cases of escape, and to distinguish the classes; their own clothes being restored at their discharge, unless in a foul or impure state, in which case they shall be supplied with plain coarse clothing.

No person shall have access to a prisoner in health while in the penitentiary wards, except the sheriff, the visiting or other justices of the county, with such persons as they may think fit to bring with them, the chaplain, surgeon, and other officers and servants of the prison, unless under a special order in writing from a visiting justice, granted on substantial grounds of necessity, to be noted in the keeper's journal; but in case of illness and removal to the hospital, the friends of such sick prisoner may be admitted by leave of the keeper, at his discretion, who will note the same in his journal.

If any prisoner of this description shall refuse to obey the orders of the keeper or other officer of the prisons, in the execution of his or her duty, or the rules laid down for the government of the prisons; or shall strike, threaten, or forcibly resist the keeper or other officer; or shall be guilty of profane cursing or swearing, or of disrespectful behaviour to the chaplain; or of irreverent conduct at chapel; or shall use abusive words to, assault, quarrel with, or defraud a fellow prisoner; or shall pass the fences of his or her court; or shall attempt to escape, or conspire with any person so to do; or shall wilfully waste, spoil, damage, or destroy any goods committed to him or her to manufacture, or the beds, bedding, clothes, or utensils of the prisons; such prisoner shall be punished by confinement in one of the dark cells, for any time not exceeding three days, at the discretion of the keeper, who shall note the same in his journal.

If, on investigation, a visiting justice shall consider such offence to require it, he shall have power to inquire on oath thereon, and to continue such punishment for any time not exceeding one month, or (4th Geo. 4, cap. 64, sec. 42,) in case of prisoners convicted of felony, or sentenced to hard labour, he shall have power to order such offender to be punished by personal correction.

The visiting justices shall report any extraordinary merit or diligence in any convict to the justices at any general or quarter sessions, that such justices may, if they think proper, recommend any such offender to the royal mercy.

Such convicts as have been obedient, industrious, and orderly, shall, on their discharge, receive a certificate of good behaviour, signed by a visiting justice, and such sum of money as the visiting justices shall deem necessary for subsistence to their place of legal settlement, or usual abode, but in no case less than five shillings; and if any convict shall, after his or her discharge, enter into the service of any respectable and substantial housekeeper, and serve therein faithfully for the space of one year, and shall produce a certificate to that effect from his or her said master or mistress (witnessed by the minister of the parish, testifying that he believes the contents of such certificate to be true,) the visiting justices may direct any sum, not exceeding three pounds, to be paid to such applicant, as they in their discretion shall think fit.

The cells shall be unlocked at six o'clock in the morning, from the first day of April to the thirtieth day of September, and at sun-rise during the remainder of the year.

Prisoners of this description shall be locked into their cells at sun-set during the whole year.

No lights shall be allowed in the sleeping-cells.
